This joy comes alike to those who desire a personal, discrete immortality and those who desire to have their individual, distinctive immortality dissolved in the impersonal and diffused; to those who want to be men and women in heaven, and to those who expect to lose themselves in Nirvana; alike to believers in the Christian's, the Brahman's, and the Indian's God. These gods have similar powers and attributes ascribed to them by their respective followers; have similar evidences of their existence, and equal power over their devotees. But none of them have any real manifested power over matter. The Creator can bring forth the world out of nothing; but he cannot build a meeting-house out of materials, or keep it from being burned, or blown down, or struck by lightning (except it have a lightning-rod upon it). The same may be said of all the temples of all the gods.

No voice of the Creator and Father comes to warn us of approaching danger. He does not save us from physical calamity. The good and the bad, his lover and his hater, are alike wrecked in railway trains, and consumed in burning churches. Unseaworthy ships go to the bottom of the sea with missionaries on board. Stanch ships safely carry their piratical and murderous crews and infidels. Cities are buried in the ashes and lava of volcanoes, and engulfed in the opening earth. He comforts his enemies and torments his friends. Relentless disease makes no discrimination at his command between oppressor and oppressed. Insanity bewilders the most promising and healthful intellects. Man has been left for thousands of years with no divinely revealed intimation of the properties of matter, poisonous or healthful, or how to combine or use it for the amelioration of his condition; of what secret agents lurk in the atmosphere, in the water, and in the soil, ready to attack and extinguish his life amid appalling distress. If there be a wise and all-powerful Creator, our ignorance, our calamities, and our crimes are as much purposed as our pleasures and well-being. This God and Father has been a silent spectator of man's cruelty to man in wars and tortures carried on in his name. And if we may believe those who profess to be his lord-lieutenants and familiar with his ways and his accredited records, he has aided and abetted the oppressor and the torturer, and commanded to be slain for his honor men, women, and sucklings at the breast. He has ordained and approbated conception, and slain in the birth. He has given appetites that would not be appeased, and then damned their gratification. This All-Father has given support to a limited number of human beings, and an unlimited (but deceiving and unpurposed) desire to initiate their beginning. He has ordained an all-absorbing and all-conquering love of parent for child, and then with an unrelenting blow has killed the child, and then offered through his fiduciary ambassadors the selfish and weak excuse for it, of a greater love for child than for him. A class of comforters, who make it a calling for profit and praise, come to us with the soothing lullaby that this Creator (their own creation) is infinite in power and in goodness, and of tenderness surpassing that of mother; that he does not afflict any willingly for his own pleasure, but for their good. And by this silly twaddle are we lulled when we bury our loved ones. If such acts should be ascribed to the devil they would be held as perfectly harmonious with the character man has given him. This Governor has no power to prevent, but he is an all-powerful soothing-poultice to apply to the hurt. This clergyman's Creator has great suavity, and, being of the male sex and having much more influence with women than with men, I had almost said gallantry. But then this has been the character of most of the distinguished gods. He never takes sword and lance for woman's defence as many of the class of gods have done, but insinuates into and works on her emotions, taking advantage of the emotions which he has given her in excess and the disquisitive intellect which he has given her sparingly. He has been careful in all his communications to exalt the masculine gender as superior to, and as rightful master over, the feminine; telling the woman if she would learn anything she may ask her husband (this Father has made no provision for the instruction of spinsters); that man is his glory, but she is only the glory of the man. She must not aspire to say anything in the Church, but must be shamefaced and submissive to her husband in all things. And she must wear her hair long and keep her bonnet on. He has degraded her to the painful and dangerous office of child-bearing, because she picked some fruit off a tree and ate it.

This God has so discriminated against woman that, when he was in full power, before the wicked infidel, rationalist, and liberal arose to dispute his claims, he mulcted her in a fine for bearing children, and put a law upon his statute book that she should be unclean and stay at home from meeting twice as long if she bore a girl as if she bore a boy. And, to add poignancy to her pains and her degradation, some of the ancient Christian saints, in full communion and fellowship with him, have told her that, had she had less fancy for beautiful things, less gustatory propensity, and less desire to be wise about gods, this God would have provided some harmless vegetable process by which to people the earth. And still women are everywhere great admirers of the gods, and a large majority of those who visit their temples for consolation and confessional in every land are women. And this is found to be in the direct ratio to the degradation and hardship imposed upon her by man. There are no atheistic women in non-Christian countries. But here, where Nature and man are beginning to be elevated to the first rank, and gods are degraded and rejected, the Annie Besants, the Almira D. Slenkers, and the Anna Knoopes are coming forward as lovers and champions of humanity. Intelligence, and not the saliva of a God, has opened their eyes, and they see the wrong and debasement which superstition, i.e., every form of a pretended revealed religion, has brought upon the race, and especially upon woman. She has little reason to thank Christianity for her present elevation. It has come to her through scientific and moral enlightenment, in denial and subversion of many principles and practices taught in the Christian's sacred books. Has any advocate of woman's right to an equality with man before the law, her right to use her abilities of mind and body in any useful employment, demanded it because the Jewish and Christian Scriptures teach it? On the contrary, woman's best friends and most efficient helpers are infidels and those who acknowledge but a slight allegiance to these divine oracles.

THE "FAIRY TALE" OF GENESIS.

PROF. GROTE AND DR. VAN BOKKELLEN JOIN ISSUE—EVIDENCE VS. THE MOSAIC ACCOUNT OF THE CREATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE BUFFALO COURIER:—

There are two principal and conflicting theories on the origin of things. These two theories are known under the names of special creation and evolution. The former is the one usually taught us in childhood, and is that sustained in Genesis. It explains that things were suddenly and miraculously made about six thousand years ago. The latter has been brought to light by those men who, as naturalists, have given continuous attention to the facts in the case, and is at this time sustained more or less completely in the best scientific publications of the day. It explains that things were brought to their existing condition, plants and animals included, by laws of gradual development and modification, acting through immeasurable ages. It traces a blood relationship between all animals, including man, from the fact that they pass through stages in which they resemble each other in the growth of the individual from the embryo to the adult stage. Astronomers, geologists, biologists, and philologists have all come to very general agreement as to the truth of evolution. According to what is sufficient testimony, it is impossible for scientific men to adopt any other conclusion.

All leading biologists in America or Europe are agreed that, in one way or the other, existing plants and animals have developed from pre-existing forms, and all deny that they could have been suddenly, separately, or miraculously made; so that an adverse criticism of the particular observations of any one biologist with regard to any smaller group of facts is not a valid criticism of evolution, nor can it be held in reason to defend the old idea of creation. What both theories need is a reasoning upon the facts presented in the case. Freedom from bias is certainly to be desired, but knowledge is simply indispensable. Prof. Huxley says that he has found criticism and denunciation showered about by persons who not only have not attempted to go through the discipline necessary to enable them to be judges, but have not reached that stage of emergence from ignorance in which a knowledge that such a discipline is necessary dawns upon them. A great deal of confusion is brought about by loose pulpit eloquence; and the Rev. Henry Martineau advises that theology should not enter into a discussion of the genesis of things, because it does not understand how to deal with the problem which must be left to science to solve.

In the present controversy I have called the story of miraculous creation a "fairy-tale," because it is, like all fairy tales, both pleasing and improbable; and, like all fairy-tales, some facts that we have noticed on the surface of things enter into its composition. I referred also to Dean Stanley's opinion upon the story of Genesis, because in his public sermon delivered in Westminster Abbey, on the occasion of the funeral of the scientist and evolutionist, Sir Charles Lyell, the Dean discussed the matter. Dean Stanley said that there was no longer room to doubt that the book of Genesis contained two distinct and differing accounts of creation; and in the course of his sermon, the perusal of which I recommend to Dr. Van Bokkelen, he invalidated the authenticity of the story as being a solid inspired statement. From internal evidence, Genesis is not homogeneous in its composition. It has been divided by philologists into the Elohist and Jahvist portions, so named from the different titles given to the Deity. This first portion terminates with the third verse of the second chapter, and it is quite evident that in dividing the text into chapters a mistake has been made in this instance. With the second portion a new account of creation really begins, in important respects at variance with the statements preceding it. The first account affirms that when God created man, "Male and female created he them." The second account as positively declares that man was created a solitary animal, and that his female companion was made afterwards, not, like man and other animals, out of the ground, but as an after-thought, out of a bone of man himself. The events of creation are given in a new order. The Garden of Eden is also described and the locality indicated, and this, although now possessing none of the perfections attributed to it, has been lately identified with the mythological centre of the Chaldean pantheon.

The first account, in the first chapter of Genesis, may be now compared with the facts ascertained by science. I am of opinion that the text should be understood literally when it speaks of "day" and "night," because it agrees with the context. From the alternation of light and darkness sprang "day" and "night," and which were then and there so called. "And the evening and the morning were the first day." But grant that the term "day" as here used meant any conceivable measurement of time. It is only on the fourth of these "days" that the sun appears. This to the astronomer is absurd, for he knows that the sun is much older than the earth. Light is conceived of as independent of the sun, as Gen. Pleasanton probably conceives of it. Plants bearing "seed and fruit after their kind" are regarded as being created before the sun, whose rays alone now give them vigor. Again, whole groups of animals, of whose remains great cliffs and mountains are made, such as corals and rhizopods, are omitted from the account. The record in the rocks tells us that plants and animals have flourished side by side, new forms succeeding old ones. But in Genesis the creation of trees and plants took place in a period perfectly distinct from animals. The paleontologist must, then, reject the account of Genesis as perfectly incredible. Again, the distinction between the "beast of the earth after his kind and cattle after their kind" shows a belief that domestic animals were created in a state of domestication. The biologist knows that such a belief is erroneous, and that all our domestic animals have been derived from wild stock. Again, a vegetable diet is assigned at first to beasts and man. But the physiologist knows that carnivorous animals have always existed, and that the instincts of animals are true to their teeth. Lastly, the natural philosopher knows that at no time can it be true to say, "Thus the heavens and earth were finished, and all the hosts of them," for they are not finished yet, but are perpetually changing. New stars are yet appearing from time to time in the heavens. With regard to later events, I need not say that the discoveries of America and Australia and Africa, each with its horde of different animals, have made the measurements of Scripture too small, and increased the difficulty of believing in an ark big enough to hold a representative pair of each animal; while there is no account of how the plants stood the flood. All sensible men have dismissed the story of Noah as inconsistent with ascertained facts, and as paralleled by just such myths among different races of men.

Yes, we are all waking from these and similar fairy-tales, hereditary mental chains of our race. The history of our mental development is no longer a secret which the individual could not of himself discover. It is recorded in many books and by many different pens, and there is no longer any excuse for our want of information on this subject. With regard to the account of special creation as given in Genesis, Herbert Spencer says, "Early ideas are not usually true ideas. Undeveloped intellect, be it that of an individual or that of a race, forms conclusions which require to be revised and re-revised, before they reach a tolerable correspondence with realities. What we call the progress of knowledge, is the bringing of thoughts into harmony with things; and it implies that the first thoughts are either out of harmony with things, or in very incomplete harmony with them. If illustrations be needed, the history of every science furnishes them. The primitive notions of mankind as to the structure of the heavens were wrong; and the notions which replaced them were successively less wrong. The original belief respecting the form of the earth was wrong; and this wrong belief survived the first civilizations. The earliest ideas that have come down to us concerning the nature of the elements were wrong; and only in quite recent times has the composition of matter in its various forms been better understood."

Dean Stanley, preëminent among the living divines of the Protestant faith, at the funeral of Sir Charles Lyell in Westminster Abbey, delivered the following opinion on Genesis: "It is well known, when the study of geology first arose it was involved in interminable schemes of reconciliation with the letter of Scripture. There were and are two modes of reconciliation, which have each totally and deservedly failed. The one attempts to wrest the words of the Bible from their real meaning, and force them to speak the language of science; and the other attempts to falsify science to meet the supposed requirements of the Bible. It is now clear to all students of the Bible that the first and second chapters of Genesis contain two narratives of the creation side by side, differing from each other in almost every particular of time, place, and order. It is now known that the vast epochs demanded by scientific observation are incompatible both with the six thousand years of the Mosaic chronology and the six days of Mosaic creation."

These words are an epitome of the argument against Genesis, and were spoken by a high authority of the Church of England over the grave of an old hero of science who remodelled his whole life work on the basis of the evolutionary theory, and, dying, left an imperishable fame. Sir Charles Lyell was the greatest geologist of the century.

It is the unmerited fate of scientific men, that they should be deemed irreligious. In reality they have held more firmly to the natural conception, which lies at the root of all religions, than the universe is the work of a power which we cannot comprehend. Their crime is that they correct popular notions in regard to the phenomena by which we are surrounded. And science leads directly to an acknowledgment of the existence of a power which passes man's understanding. Its offence is that it uncovers this simple statement from the wrappings with which different theologies have covered it up. In so doing, science comes into conflict with existing creeds and dogmatic beliefs. The result of this conflict will be the lessening of purer and more abstract religious thought. At the last, both science and religion will arrive with the mass, as they do now for some few individuals, at a common point, where all conflict will cease forever.

It remains for me now to briefly reply to the protests of the Rev. Mr. Van Bokkelen. They involve in reality a protest against the freedom of speech, and in so far they deserve the contempt and reprobation of every thinking member of this community. In so far as they touch the Society of Natural Sciences, of which in 1868 I was one of the incorporators, it may be stated that the Society is not responsible for the opinion of any one of its members. In so far as they touch the public schools, I may remind the Rev. Van Bokkelen that the schools are not ecclesiastical but State institutions, and that scientific addresses are in their place when delivered in their halls. So far as the right to chain science to the opinions of theology is concerned, it has been abandoned with the tyranny of the Middle Ages and cannot exist in the light of the nineteenth century.

Recommending to Rev. Dr. Van Bokkelen the perusal and refutation of the works of Matthew Arnold, Dean Stanley, the author of Supernatural Religion, Tylor, Draper, Lyell, Herbert Spencer, the author of the Chaldaic account of Genesis, Haeckel, Cope, Marsh, and living biologists generally, I remain, etc.,

A. R. GROTE.

SOCIETY OF NATURAL SCIENCES, Feb. 13, 1879.

CAPTAIN BOYTON SPEAKS HIS MIND.

EDITOR PITTSBURG LEADER:—

In yesterday's issue of your paper there appeared in the local columns an article calling attention to the action of two so-called "religious journals" in criticising my "planned" entry to this city last Sabbath via the Allegheny. An extract from each paper is published, in which I am charged with having given use to a gathering of citizens which was detrimental to the interests of the religious community and public at large. One paper accuses me of having "some kind of an inflated suit, which, no doubt, he sought to make a market of," while another says that I should have rested on the Lord's day and prevented a desecration of the Sabbath by the sight of thirty or forty thousand people assembled on the river's bank.

In justice to the public who honored me with their presence last Sunday, I cannot remain silent on this subject of Sabbath desecration, which has furnished a bone of contention on which the blatant writers of such articles as are referred to above may spread themselves to their hearts' content. Not that I perceive any merit of argument in the wordy falsehoods, but that some simple-minded people may be led astray by the craftily-plied confusion of doxies.

The statement that I planned my arrival on Sunday is a deliberate untruth, and it seems as though the writer had wilfully sacrificed veracity for the sake of forcing his narrow-minded views upon an unwilling public. When I left Pittsburg for Oil City it was with the avowed intention of returning on Saturday afternoon in order that workmen would not have to forego their labor to see me arrive. This programme was published in all the secular papers at length, so that there could not possibly have been any misunderstanding of the arrangement. The cause of my arrival on the Sabbath day was the joint oppositions of wind, storm, and weather, over which I had no control. As for resting a day, as suggested in the brilliant religious journals, the advice comes from a quarter which is lamentably ignorant of the effect of such a "rest." Had I done so, Monday would have seen my limbs and joints so stiff that it would have been utterly impossible for me to have continued my voyage. My late arrival was a matter of accident, rather than intention; and as for the assertions that the religious convictions of the community and the principles of American institutions were transgressed, let the presence of the thousands of Pittsburg's best citizens be an answer that carries conviction with it. The pious class of this city must be small indeed, if they were not largely represented at the gathering on Sunday. They went of their own volition and of their own choice. My opinions on the matter are too well known to require reiteration. I consider the work of life-saving as sacred a calling as the teaching of any other moral or humane work. I never was, and never will be, ashamed of the red cross of Geneva, whose place is side by side with the cross of Calvary. If anything occurred in the assemblage which was inappropriate to the day, I am no more responsible for it than the good people of Pittsburg are for the disgraceful scenes which annually occur in the vicinity of Castle Shannon and other revival camp-meetings throughout the country. An exercise of common-sense would have prevented these biased writers from placing themselves in so ludicrous a position. "Brethren, be not children in understanding; howbeit, in malice be ye children, but in understanding, be men."

If I wished to make a market of my suit I would hardly have come to Pittsburg for that purpose, after it has been successively adopted by the English, French, Italian, Russian, and American governments. The suits are only adapted for ocean work, and therefore would not be advertised to advantage at inland towns, especially as they are not retailed to individuals. The intelligent religious journals are evidently laboring under a wrong impression all through, or have been guilty of a greater crime than desecrating the Sabbath, i.e., breaking the ninth commandment. Less bigotry and more religion, gentlemen. I have given exhibitions on Sunday before countless thousands of the people of Europe, including some of the crowned heads of Europe, and it is a curious fact that Pittsburg has suddenly grown more moral than all the rest of the world. There is no one who has a greater respect for religion or religious things than myself. But in introducing a means of saving human life I am conscious that I violate no law of God or of my country.

Very respectfully,

PAUL BOYTON.

PITTSBURG, Feb. 13.
—Pittsburg Leader.

AN ANECDOTE is told of a judge, profane and irritable, who never let a meal pass without a sonorous invocation upon the repast. Once he rebuked a deaf guest who innocently interrupted him while thus engaged, as follows: "D—n it, don't you see that I am saying grace?"—Lippincott's Magazine.

JOSE BILLINGS suggests that many a young poet might be able to collect his scattered thoughts, if he would only look into an editor's waste basket early in the morning.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

TO HUMBOLDT.

Hierophant of Truth! thy marble brow
Its ample breadth and height may well expand
In many a park and square of this our land,
Where metropolitan myriads ebb and flow.
For thou wert Liberty's apostle grand;
Truth, freedom, were thy watchwords evermore.
From bondage to Semitic myths of yore,
Barbaric dreams, has freed the world thy lore.
The harmony the Samian only dreamed,
Thine ear heard. Thou didst not interpolate
On Nature's Fasti petty human date,
But wiser of her years eternal deemed.

An envoy from some grander sphere of night,
With larger knowledge, cosmic wisdom full
To sharpen and illumine our spirits dull,
Star-travelled, on our orb thou didst alight.
Clearly beheld thy keen, clairvoyant sight,
Through adamantine mass, the central core,
Where lonely Vesta tendeth evermore
The eternal hearth-fire burning fierce and bright.
Unterrified, with curious gaze serene,
E'en when her mountain-chimneys shook the globe,
Thou stood'st spectator of the awful scene,
And saw her Earth with desolation robe,
Where, neighboring heaven along the central line,
With fires fuliginous the Andes shine.

No cloistered theorist wast thou; but 'neath
The heaven of every zone, in light of sun
And star, upland and lowland air didst breathe.
Your lore from Nature's own warm bosom won
Is living wisdom and no idle dream.
The tropic skies serene, fretted with fires
Of Argo, Centaur, Aldebaran, seem
Your Kosmos to o'erarch; the palm aspires
Before your reader's eye; the South's warm air
He breathes; the gently-heaving ocean hears
Pulsing on golden strands; savannas fair
Of grass and flowers beholds; while skyward rears
Its walls the condor-haunted mountain chain,
Whose peaks far off the blue of heaven stain.

B. W. BALL.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 22.

Jas. E. Stone, $3.20; E. Thornton, Jr., $3.20; Kate L. Greene, $3.20; David Fey, $3.20; Dr. John Winslow, $12.00; Dr. N. H. Ambler, $1; H. L. Wallis, $1; Mrs. H. J. Gale, $4.27; Fred'k. Loesser, $3.20; J. L. Ouler, $5; Frank L. Pope, $3.20; Dr. L. B. Farrar, $5; Hon. Rich'd. Jott, $3.20; W. P. Barr, $5; Mrs. C. M. Ritch, $3; J. H. Jones, $3.25; Rev. S. H. Winkley, $3.20; Alex. Carr, $1.50; J. S. Doane, 90 cents; Eben Brown, $1.50; John Buntin, $3.20; F. F. Dawley, $3; John W. Turner, $2; J. D. Sires, $1; Wm. E. Sutton, $3.20; A. S. Wheeler, $3.20; J. H. Tallman, $3.20; Mrs. M. M. Ballou, $3.20; Mrs. C. A. Tucker, $3.20; A. M. Colquhoun, 10 cents; J. M. Douglas, $3; W. H. Burr, $3.20; Mrs. Julia E. Mills, $3.20; J. F. Ruggles, $1.65; W. A. Clark, $3.20; L. K. Washburn, 92 cents; Chas. Truesdell, $3.20; C. Lauer, $2; D. P. Lonnahan, $1.75; F. V. Balch, $3; E. B. Welch, $3.20; T. T. Reid, $1.50; Dr. C. W. Estabrook, $3; C. B. Deyo, $3; W. H. Williams, $4.50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, MARCH 27, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FERRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The masterly, statesmanlike, and eloquent address of Judge Hurlbut on "The Liberty of Printing," proving unanswerably the constitutional right of Congress to prohibit the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, and demonstrating to the entire satisfaction of all who will listen to reason that the postal law of 1873 should be amended, but not repealed, has been printed for cheap distribution in the form of an eight-page tract, and can now be had at this office. No better service to the liberal cause at present can be rendered than by circulating everywhere this wise, weighty, and noble plea for private liberty and public morality combined. Price, single copies, 5 cents; five copies, 10 cents; fifteen copies, 25 cents; forty copies, 50 cents; one hundred copies, $1.00.

Erratum.—On page 5, second column, twenty-fourth line, the words "authority is desired" should be corrected to read "authority is derived." This is the only typographical error noticed by the author, and it is of sufficient importance to the main argument to be thus publicly pointed out.

THE FOLLOWING "Act to authorize the incorporation of Roman Catholic churches" has just been passed by the Legislature of Massachusetts, and deserves the careful consideration of all who are interested in the cause of State Secularization:—

CHAPTER 108.

AN ACT to authorize the incorporation of Roman Catholic churches.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives, in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

SECT. 1. Any Roman Catholic church now or hereafter existing in this Commonwealth, may become incorporated according to the provisions of this act. The Roman Catholic archbishop or bishop of the diocese in which such church may be erected or intended so to be, the vicar-general of such diocese, and the pastor of such church for the time being, respectively, or a majority of them, may associate with themselves two laymen, members of said church, and may, together with such laymen, sign a certificate in duplicate, showing the name or title by which they and their successors shall be known and distinguished as a body corporate by virtue of this act, which certificate shall be duly acknowledged in the same manner as conveyances of real estate; and one of such certificates shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth and the other shall be recorded in the registry of deeds in the county in which such church may be erected or intended so to be; and thereupon such church shall be a body corporate, by the name or title expressed in such certificate, and the said persons so signing the same shall be the trustees thereof. The successors of any archbishop, bishop, vicar-general, or pastor, respectively for the time being, shall, by virtue of his office, be the trustee of such church in place of his predecessor, and such laymen shall hold office respectively for one year; and whenever the office of any such laymen shall become vacant by death, removal, resignation, or otherwise, his successor shall be associated in the same manner as herein provided for his original selection for the unexpired term.

SECT. 2. Such trustees may receive, hold, and manage all the property, both real and personal, belonging to such church, and sell and convey the same, and hold in trust gifts, grants, bequests, or donations made to such church for the support of public worship and other religious purposes; provided that all the property belonging to any one church or parish, and held by trustees incorporated by this act, shall never exceed one hundred thousand dollars, over and above its church buildings; and provided, further, that all powers derived under the provisions of this act may be revoked by the Legislature.

Approved March 12, 1879.

INDIVIDUALISM AS DEMORALIZATION.

Considering it to be of the utmost moment at the present time, when the brazen self-assertion of demoralizing influences threatens to capture and destroy the whole liberal movement, and when so many excellent liberals have been betrayed into lending their sanction to many whose prominence is an outrage upon the enlightened moral sense of the community, to present to our readers the countervailing utterances of better representatives, we subjoin a few expressions out of many, recently received, which give cheerful auguries of the future of liberalism in this country.

The first is from Mr. J. Vila Blake, formerly minister of Theodore Parker's old society in this city:—

"QUINCY, Ill., March 17, 1879.

"DEAR ABBOT:—

"It is impossible for me to say with what pleasure and hope I welcome such a tendency in liberal thought as is contained in your article in last INDEX, called 'Reformed Liberalism.'

"Yours truly, J. VILA BLAKE."

The next is from a leading editor of the West, whose letter, dated March 18, was not intended for publication, but who, we are sure, will not object to such use as we make of it here:—

"... Allow me to thank you most heartily for your late editorial, 'Liberalism and Libertinism.' I have it laid out to republish as soon as I can get to it. Also I wish to especially commend your article on 'Reformed Liberalism.'"

The third, received March 22, is from Mr. David A. Wasson, Theodore Parker's first successor:—

"DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

"Permit me to tell you that I have read your article on 'The Moral Failure of Individualism' with uncommon pleasure and satisfaction. It is clear, cogent, unanswerable, and I do not see how it can fail to be convincing. Lange said of Materialism that it has only to be consequent to destroy itself; you make it very clear that the same may be said of Individualism. Let us have no excluding ism either way, but a moral individuality and a moral sociality in their proper correlation, sustaining and fructifying each other. Whole thinking leads to this, and wholesome living comes of it. Mr. Wright says that 'the whole structure of this free government was built on pure Individualism.' Yet this structure of government was adopted for all citizens, and made binding upon all, by a majority vote of the nation. Does he not see how irreconcilable pure Individualism is with such an act, and how irreconcilable it is with the very existence of civil government in whatever form? But I will not enter the discussion. You show yourself quite equal to the occasion.

"Yours truly, D. A. WASSON."

Nothing prompts us to publish such kind communications, exceedingly gratifying as they are, except the evident duty of doing what we can to make known the drift of the wisest and most elevated thought on the crisis through which liberalism is now passing. Individualism, with its narrow and conservative insistence on the right of private judgment alone, and its inability to satisfy the demands of that uncompromising scientific radicalism which insists equally on the rights of universal reason, is a blind guide to-day, and threatens to lead liberalism into the ditch. The whole future of liberalism, as a factor of social or national destiny, depends on its reforming its own philosophy and spirit—substituting for Individualism the Scientific Method, and for the present indifference to public morality a new and strong demand for conscience both in public and private life. A powerful popular reaction in favor of Orthodoxy, and overwhelming popular indignation against free thought as aiding and abetting every movement which tends to produce social demoralization, will be the inevitable result of general and silent submission on the parts of the liberals to such doctrines as are now put forth with effrontery by too many of their representatives. The day for forbearance and acquiescence has certainly gone by. The liberals will be justly regarded by the people either as moral cowards or as morally corrupted, if they tolerate any longer without protest the present evident effort to push the principle of Individualism so far as to protect the immoral and vicious from the reprobation they deserve. The right of private judgment is no excuse for immorality; and if liberals dare to stretch it as a shield before moral offenders in their own ranks, so much the worse for them and for their cause. Now that Individualism is pressing forward into the domain of morals, and endeavoring to sap the very foundations of individual and social virtue by denying all responsibility of the individual to the universal reason and conscience, it is time for somebody to utter an indignant protest and warning against Individualism itself. We make that protest now with energy, in the name of Radical Liberalism, the Scientific Method, and the Common Conscience of Mankind. That it is called for, appears with sufficient clearness in the article below.

A CASE IN POINT.

The Springfield (Massachusetts) Republican of February 7, 1879, contained this wretched story:—

The scandal at Northfield, occasioned by the misbehavior of the Unitarian minister, Rev. S. P. Putnam, which has kept up a smudge there for a good many weeks, has at last been set at rest by the withdrawal of the offender from the field, and, it is said, from the ministry. A committee of fellow-clergymen assert, over their own names, that there is no evidence of criminality on his part, but admit that he acted the part of a big fool. He has been accused in some papers of grosser immoralities with the women of his congregation, but the scandal seems to be simmered down to the fact that he became infatuated with one young woman of the flock, and, after visiting her constantly for a considerable time, he confessed that he should be very happy, if a way could be found whereby they might always live together. Whereupon his wife left him, going to live with relatives, and the assessors of the parish forced him to resign.

Such a revelation as this filled us with surprise and pain, for we had always thought well of Mr. Putnam hitherto. If his experience had only taught him the folly, misery, and wrong of the "free-love" which thus broke up his family and drove his poor wife in sorrow from her home,—if he had only set himself in earnest to retrieve his tarnished character and make what reparation he could for the evil he had wrought,—we should never have referred to the matter here, but should have drawn over it, at least so far as THE INDEX is concerned, the veil of pitying charity and silence. But what did he do? Forthwith he went to New York, and began to write articles for the papers in defence of that very Individualism which had broken up his home—of that very right of "private conscience" and contempt of the universal conscience which had betrayed him into so much folly, injustice, and cruelty to his wife. These extracts are from an article of his in the Truth-Seeker of March 15:—

The new religion is full of ideas fresh and strong. It feeds upon knowledge, and its sentiments are purified by continuous streams of truth.

Its two grand ideas, which give it commanding life and vivacity, are the right of private conscience, and the use of that right in all the affairs of life.

Luther proclaimed the right of private conscience, though he did not see the vast and radical results of the doctrine. If he had, he might have gone back into the bosom of the Church. The right of private conscience does not mean simply freedom from the Church or freedom from the Bible, but freedom from all outward authority, whether expressed in custom, tradition, social sentiment, or civilized law. A man's conscience is the gift of heaven, and he is to use it freely, and the outward has authority only so far as one's own enlightened mind confers it. Outward authority, whether ecclesiastical, or social, or political, that violates the sanctity of one's conscience, does so by sheer brute force, and is a fearful wrong.

The right of private conscience is a tremendous one, no doubt, and contains the germ of many a revolution; but the right must be fully granted or else there is no escape from Rome. There can be no half-way measures. The right, if it exists, is an absolute right, and cannot be infringed upon for any purpose whatever. To this right we must commit ourselves without reserve. We must not look at consequences, but simply at the right itself, which, dear to us, is equally dear to every other human being.

But not only must we insist upon the right of private conscience, but we must insist also upon its constant use. The right is too often held in reserve. People dare not exercise it. They may exercise it now and then, but not continuously. They give their conscience too frequently the go-by, and let custom, society, friends, civil law, as well as Church and Bible decide, and they meekly obey. They are simply cowards. But if we have the right of private conscience, we should use that right bravely. It should not be a mere right, but a practical power. It should be a perpetual vitality. If we think that such and such a course is right, the most right for ourselves, we should pursue it, though every other voice should bid us nay. . . .

This is the profound intention of the new religious movement,—to enshrine the private conscience in each individual as the actual sovereign, and not as a merely nominal one. We are too often weak and cowardly in the use of this divine faculty. We dare not follow its celestial light, but tamely submit to others. . . .

When we have not simply the abstract right of private conscience, but the private conscience dominant,—not in theological questions only, but in social and moral questions of daily and hourly recurrence,—we have a religious movement whose transcendent importance can be but faintly realized to-day.

There is Individualism, pure and simple, applied to morals. In the light of the Springfield Republican's story, could anything be more sickening or ghastly—more terribly illustrative of the sophistry by which the wrong-doer desperately attempts to justify himself in the wrong he has done, and to persuade others that his shame is an aureole of glory? Repulsive, however, as all this mockery of noble morality is, we should have passed it over in silent disgust, if Mr. Putnam had not followed it up with more of the same stuff, worse still. The following article by him is from the Boston Investigator of March 19:—

A New Commandment of Liberalism.

"Do all the good you can, and make no fuss about it."

MR. EDITOR:—

This injunction of Charles Dickens contains a wealth of wisdom. It should be one of the "new commandments" of liberalism. The disagreeable thing about Orthodoxy is, that if it does any good it makes a tremendous fuss about it. When one resolves to be a Christian he makes a loud profession of it; he is baptized and joins the Church, and on every possible occasion lets the world know what a righteous man he is. Splendid edifices are built; eloquent preachers sought for and paid high salaries; beautiful music obtained and magnificence of fashion displayed, in order that the world may realize what a good thing is being done—what self-sacrifice, devotion, and high aim the saints of the earth possess.

Now the saints may have all these, but is it not better to have a little less parade? Why make such a fuss about their righteousness? It is a waste of time and effort. One can't do his best if he stops to tell people how finely he is doing it. Sublime virtue in its very nature is self-forgetful. It goes right on and does its work without advertising. Orthodoxy may be a good thing, but it would be vastly better if it made less professions; if it ceased saying, "I am holier than thou"; if it would do its work without cackling so incessantly over every egg that it happens to lay. Almost all the vitality of Orthodoxy to-day is wasted in the "fuss" it makes, and thus little is left for real achievement. Indeed, Orthodoxy is now so far gone that take away the "fuss" and nothing is left. Its life is the life of profession, not of living advance. In fact, Orthodoxy has run entirely to "fuss," and from that is rapidly going to seed.

Let liberalism by all means avoid "fuss." There is plenty to do. Let us do it and say nothing, even as a healthy man breathes and takes no note of how well and strong he is. Let us not parade ourselves as "saints." Let us not declare our extraordinary virtues, but simply do the thing that lies before us with self-forgetful ardor. There should be no professions, no lines of separation, no "saints," and no "sinners" among the Liberal ranks. Liberalism distinctly says that "Every tub must stand upon its own bottom." We endorse no one. Each must fight his own way, and win his spurs by his zeal and manliness, and not by the clapping of hands. Let us put aside distinctions and the parade of high morality. Let our work go for what it is worth. Let us not waste time comparing the cleanliness of our clothes with those of others. Perhaps we are spick and span; but no matter. A little dirt won't hurt us if we keep at our task.

It is not the spirit of liberalism to put on airs; to be "fussy" and "respectable"; but to be in earnest. It trusts profoundly in the survival of the fittest. If a man is mean he'll go down; and we need not stop to knock him down. We have better things to do than putting labels upon the coats of our fellow-workmen. Perhaps we prefer to work on the roof and lay the golden plates. It may be the mission of others to work in the ditch at the foundation of the temple. We should not fling stones at them, nor contrast our nice apron with their ragged shirt-sleeves. Let us lay the golden plating, but spend no time in calling the attention of others to its glitter and contrasting it with the clay dug out by others. To do so shows the spirit, the "fuss," of Orthodoxy.

We should not be laggos—nothing if not critical. Better be Othello, and kill Desdemona in blinded passion, than merely a keen-sighted detective. We should not compare our morality with that of others because for the moment our armor is clean. Forget appearances and plunge into the thick of the fight. Each must be true to his own vision, working out his own best life, heroically careless of what the world says of praise or of blame. Let us put our judgment into our own art of living, comparing ourselves with ourselves, but not with others. Let us be better to-morrow than to-day, but not take the trouble to inform the world how good we are. It is the dyspepsia of goodness that studies and compares symptoms. Hearty vital goodness goes right on. It makes no fuss.

Yours very truly, S. P. P.

Through all this vague and incoherent maundering, but one purpose is clear: namely, to misrepresent all inculcation of pure and strict morality as mere pharisaism on the part of the inculcator, and to persuade liberals to make no distinction of "saints" and "sinners" among the Liberal ranks! That is the genuine moral philosophy of Individualism,—to count all individuals alike, good, bad, and indifferent, as moral equals, and thus to destroy totally all moral distinctions among them. It parodies morality as "fuss," and all endeavor to elevate the moral life of the world as a pharisaism which is intent only on "parading ourselves as saints." It aims only to "put aside distinctions and the parade of high morality." Look at this Individualism closely and keenly, clear-headed and clean-minded reader, and accord to it such praise as its exceeding moral beauty demands. Are such teachers as this (for Mr. Putnam is only one, and by no means the worst one, out of a multitude now proffering their rotten ethics to the liberal public) to be accepted and upheld as exponents of the real moral tendencies of liberalism?

For Mr. Putnam himself, we have a word of well-meant advice: namely, that he learn to recognize that his only wise course is to give over the attempt to drag the whole liberal party down to his own present moral level, and that he devote his undivided energies to raising himself to a higher level of thought before he undertakes the task of moral instruction. The immorality that justifies itself, and seeks to seduce the world into countenancing it by carefully wiping out all distinction between virtue and vice, deserves no mercy, and will certainly meet the fate of the fox in the fable, which Hon. Eliza Wright thus finely translated years ago from La Fontaine, and which we specially commend to Mr. Putnam's sedulous attention:—

A cunning old fox, of plundering habits,
Great crauncher of fowls, great catcher of rabbits,
Whom none of his sort had caught in a nap,
Was finally caught in somebody's trap.
By luck he escaped, not wholly and hale,
For the price of his luck was the loss of his tail.
Escaped in this way, to save his disgrace,
He thought to get others in similar case.
One day that the foxes in council were met,
"Why wear we," said he, "this cumbering weight,
Which sweeps in the dirt wherever it goes?
Pray tell me its use, if any one knows.
If the council will take my advice,
We shall dock off our tails in a trice."
"Your advice may be good," said one on the ground;
"But, ere I reply, pray turn yourself round!"
Whereat such a shout from the council was heard,
Poor Bob-tail, confounded, could say not a word.
To urge the reform would have wasted his breath:
Long tails were the mode till the day of his death!

THE CORE OF FREE RELIGION.

An impression prevails in many minds that Free Religion means little or nothing more than the bringing together upon one platform representatives of various religious beliefs, for the equal and candid presentation of their views,—a free parliament for religious discussion. For instance, a course of lectures in which the beliefs of the different sects, Christian or extra-Christian, should be stated by prominent members of the sects, or a convention on any religious topics where the speakers represent widely variant phases of theological opinion inside and outside of Christianity, are considered by many persons to be illustrations of Free Religion. Now such a convention or course of lectures would be good evidence of increasing tolerance and charity in religious matters. They are among the ever-welcome intimations of a growing liberality in religion, and wherever they occur they may perhaps be regarded as indirect results of more freedom of thought. But they might or they might not be illustrations of Free Religion. Such a course of lectures or such a convention might occur, and not only all the Christian sects, but all the religions of the world, be represented in them, and the speakers of such widely different beliefs might all courteously listen and reply to each other, and yet not a particle of Free Religion be illustrated in the experiment; for this reason,—that each of the speakers might claim a special supernatural authority for his system of faith, and make that the fundamental principle of his discourse; and hence there could be no common ground of appeal in the discussion, and no chance for a free and impartial weighing of arguments.

Free Religion is diametrically opposed to this claim of supernatural ecclesiastical authority. It places against this claim the authority of human intelligence, of human intelligence enlightened and developed to the highest available degree, but never infallible. To define more accurately: Free Religion is religion, in its sentiment, its thought, and its practice, emancipated from all supernatural standards of authority, whether embodied in a book, a church, a creed, or in an alleged inspired person, and thus left free to be continually tested by and harmonized with the increasing light of human reason. This liberation from bondage to ecclesiastical types of authority may be regarded as the central principle, or core, of Free Religion. It is the human mind's declaration of independence in religious things. It is the solemn appeal to reason, rather than to the authority of a creed; to the best intelligence of humanity to-day, rather than to the authority of a book or prophet in some past era: an appeal, not to the voice of any single individual consciousness, past or present, but to the highest collective wisdom of mankind; an appeal from opinion to the laws of thought.

On the ground of this central principle, persons of different sects and different religions might come together, not to dogmatize, not to set forth their respective beliefs as if they were a finality, but for the sake of eliciting some larger and more beneficent truth. Their respective systems of faith, as containing a final standard of truth and practice, would in fact be no more for them. They would be Baptists or Congregationalists or Methodists or Jews or Christians or Buddhists only by their lineage, not by their faith; and these names could have no other real meaning for them. And, what is of more importance, neither their religious names nor their beliefs could stand in the way of their uniting in practical works for the welfare of human society. For this is the finest result of Free Religion,—that the great powers of the religious sentiment, that religious belief, zeal, consecration, devotion, are freed from enslavement to obsolete dogmas and rituals, to be set to work for the direct mental and moral profit of mankind.

W. J. P.

ABOUT THE "FINAL APPEAL IN MORALS."

Now let me "take a concrete illustration."

Some people who profess to be competent, and perhaps they are, agree in deciding that the nation is responsible for the morality of what is carried in the mails. If their judgment is correct, and represents the "universal reason," then it is my duty as a good citizen to vote for the Comstock law or something like it, and I shall be culpable to vote for its repeal. But with all possible respect for the competence of these people, I am not conscious of being responsible for the morals of other people, and believe the wicked and immoral have just as much right to the use of the mails as I have. Therefore, with all possible respect for my fellow-men, I should vote for the mails free of moral supervision, if it be in a minority of one. I cannot afford to violate my own reason out of respect to other people's, however scientific or competent they may be. What I hold is, that when any number of people, for whatever reason, overstep the limits of self-defence, to inflict their moral sentiments upon individuals by pains and penalties, they must leave me out. I don't see a particle of difference between their attitude or logic and that of corporate Christianity, Catholic or Protestant. A scientific church passing Comstock laws does not seem to me any more tolerable than a religious one, but in fact a good deal more foolish. Only sham science acts that way.

I do not by any means, in making the individual the final arbiter in morals, pretend that his judgment is sure to be correct, but only that no body, or number of bodies else, can decide for him. He must do it at his peril, with the help of all the light he himself is competent to receive. He will generally be wrong. If science has ever discovered anything in morals, it has discovered this. It has also discovered that the few individuals who have had the widest and deepest comprehension of moral rectitude have had to suffer most from the consensus of society, in all ages, and probably always will.

K. W.

[We really do not know who the "some people" are, referred to in the above "concrete illustration." Certainly we have never expressed the opinion there stated. What we believe is that the United States government is morally bound not to permit the national postal system to be used for purposes which are declared criminal by the common law and the statutes of the separate States. The "illustration" of our friend illustrates nothing within our knowledge.—ED.]

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The first air-pump was made in 1650.

It will probably be "Cardinal" Newman.

There are sixty thousand socialists in Berlin.

Carlyle has an income of $4000 from his books.

Massachusetts will not try the prohibitory law this year.

A Mexican laborer's pay is only twenty-five cents a day.

The birds have brought with them the voices of spring.

The demand for ultramontane literature has fallen off in France.

The first watch was made in the beginning of the sixteenth century.

In only eight States of the Union does the postal service pay its way.

Talmage receives $12,000 a year for his way of handling the gospel.

Between eighty and ninety thousand pilgrims went to Mecca last season.

Rev. Joseph Cook thinks there is a Romish plot to destroy our high schools.

Steamships for Europe usually carry about thirty thousand letters each trip.

The manufacture of silk was brought from India into Europe in the year 551 A.D.

In Pennsylvania the Lutherans claim a population of seven hundred and fifty thousand.

At the Old South ball, over $1000 were danced into the treasury of the preservation committee.

The United States cotton crop for 1878-79, was the largest ever grown. Cotton may again be king.

Four thousand men assembled in the Boston Theatre a fortnight since to witness a wrestling match.

It is stated that there are seventy-four women on the various school committee boards of this State.

The debt of the city of Paris is $400,000,000. The municipal taxation is nearly $22.50 per head of population.

James Redpath has engaged Col. Ingersoll to deliver one hundred lectures, for which he pays him the sum of $25,000.

The French Communists in New York say their object is a society independent of priest, king, capitalist, or loafer.

The annual revenue from the Suez Canal is $8,000,000, while the annual expenses are but little more than half this sum.

There are seventy thousand miles of cable crossing the seas and oceans. Twenty-five years ago there was not an ocean cable in the world.

More than two hundred and fifty thousand paper napkins have been sold during the past year. They cost a cent or a cent and a half apiece.

Mrs. Lockwood, the first woman admitted to practice in the Supreme Court, is fifty years old, tall, erect, gray-haired, and the possessor of fine eyes.

The deepest mine in the world now worked is said to be the Adalbert Lead and Silver Mine in Austria, which is three thousand two hundred and eighty feet deep.

The friends of J. Vila Blake will be glad to learn of his continued success in Quincy, Ill. He is much beloved by the liberal people to whom he is preaching there.

Colonel Higginson thinks that Rev. Phillips Brooks' sermon on the Trinity is so poetic that anybody who only believed in the humanity of Christ could accept it.

Rev. Dr. Rhea, the leading Methodist minister at Davenport, Iowa, recently preached a sermon in which he favored the entire prohibition of religious teaching in the schools.

M. Rossetti gives the temperature of the sun as 9,965.4° or 20,380.7° centigrades, according as regard is had to the absorption by the solar atmosphere round the photosphere or not.

The gospel according to Mr. Edward Kimball, the church-debt lifter: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down all his property to help pay the debts of a Christian church."

In customs, sugar pays twenty-eight per cent of the revenue, or thirty-seven million dollars. Of internal revenue, spirits pay fifty millions or nearly one-half of the national inland taxes; tobacco, forty millions.

Elihu Burritt mastered all the tongues of Europe, and several of Asia, including Hebrew, Syriac, Chaldean, Samaritan, Sanskrit, and others less commonly studied, like Ethiopic; and he did all this after he was twenty-two years old.

Forty years ago, when Morse said he could write messages by electricity, the whole world laughed at him. Now the earth is set all over with telegraph poles, which sustain the wires that carry men's thoughts anywhere on the globe.

A party of United States naval officers lately visited an island in the South Seas called Botel Tobago, where they found a curious race of Malay stock. These aborigines did not know what money was good for, nor had they ever used rum or tobacco.

Rev. William B. Wright said in a recent sermon, in respect to Sabbath-breaking: "Let no employer of clerk or domestic or laborer dare censure those in his employ for taking recreation Sunday afternoon, until he has provided them with a week-day afternoon for that purpose."

A German physician has started the theory that food should be eaten raw. He contends that, if this practice were adopted, there would be little or no illness among human beings. They would live their apportioned time and simply fade away, like animals in a wild state, from old age.

A new order of things has come in with the new Pope. While Pius IX. frowned upon dancing, the opera, and the ballet, Leo XIII. replies to the clerical ladies who asked how they should conduct themselves during the Carnival: "Go, my dears, and enjoy yourselves in an innocent dance."

The bricks of which the pyramids of Egypt are built contain abundant remains of animal and vegetable life, perfectly preserved, and throw light upon the civilization of ancient Egypt. Plants, grain, shells, fishes, etc., are so well-preserved that there is no difficulty whatever in identifying them.

In 1776 there were but thirty-seven papers of all grades in the United States. There was not at that time a single daily. To-day there are eight thousand papers published in the country. Of this number New York has the most, and Massachusetts comes seventh on the list. There were printed in 1878 copies of papers and periodicals of every rank to the number of one billion two hundred and fifty million.

Prof. Felix Adler, while on a visit to Cincinnati recently, organized a society for ethical culture, which, although without a regular speaker, has begun practical work. It is composed largely of liberal Jews who have outgrown their traditions or are dissatisfied with the preaching of Rabbi Wise. The latter has not maintained his reputation for breadth and progress. From his pulpit he denounced those of his congregation who should attend the lectures of Prof. Adler, and declared himself in favor of excommunicating all such from his society.

Col. Carroll D. Wright estimates that the average Massachusetts family contains at least four and one-fourth persons. The tax per capita in Massachusetts is $22.77. A tax upon every man, woman, and child in the State of $22.77 means $96.77 a year, or almost $2 a week, paid by the average Massachusetts family for the support of government and government institutions. Between forty and fifty per cent. of all our taxes is caused by debt. More than half our national taxes are the direct results of the late war, and a large proportion of our local taxes are due to this cause.

It is easy to admire a person's ideas if they do not contradict our own, but it is the hardest thing to see any good in a man if he think differently from ourselves. It is no easy matter for a person to set himself against popular opinion and maintain his position. Every power is brought to bear upon him that falsehood can invent or malice employ. A man who refuses to acknowledge the authority of the hour asserts a higher. The world forgives no man for denying its right of judgment. The soul that challenges the world must prove its right of defiance. When a man is greater or better than men, he is either offered a crown like Caesar or stoned like Stephen.

Boston ministers preached upon such subjects as these on Sunday, March 16: "The ten lepers"; "Moses, the man of God, compared with modern reformers and scientists"; "Self renunciation and its limits"; "The security of the righteous"; "The poor have the gospel preached to them"; "The prophecy of Jesus." Why do not our pulpits deal with things around them, and not forever preach about what is dead and useless? We need wise words spoken on labor, temperance, social vices, human rights and human wrongs, and other kindred topics. Why are the pulpits dumb on these subjects? The gospel is preached to-day, not to save the world, but to save the Church; and we think ourselves that that is in most danger of being lost.

We have got to deal differently with vice. You that lament the spread of crime, you that mourn the birth of sin, you that weep over the corpse of innocence, before you judge the actor or the deed, ask the cause. Virtue to-day is not a Christ, nor is vice a Magdalene waiting to kiss the hem of his garment. Vice has been spurned and spit upon or winked at and flattered. We have not treated vice as a disease which can be cured, but as a disgrace which is to be covered up. Society does not forbid vice; it only asks that it be discreet. Religion condemns vice, but does not attempt to eradicate it from the social system. Vice never sleeps, while religion does little else but sleep. The Church wraps its faith in the shroud of a creed, folds its arms, and awaits a resurrection. The world must go to work to help itself. We must make virtue a habit instead of vice. The only way to get rid of what is wrong is to cultivate a love of what is right. While we would mend, as well as we could, what is broken, we think that keeping men whole is a better way to serve mankind.

The Herald is the only secular journal published in Boston that dares to preach Free Religion, or say what it thinks about the Christian dogmas. Occasionally we find in its columns words that would honor the most liberal and earnest pulpit in the land. We are rejoiced to see liberality in the press when it is forsaking the Church. It shows that, while the minister's voice is being stifled, the voice of truth cannot be hushed. The Sunday Herald is about the best work that Boston issues on the Sabbath. We desire to especially commend the editorial in the Herald of March 9, entitled "Dead, if not Buried," and the one published in the paper March 16, on the "New Direction in Religion." These two articles are able, honest, and sensible, and will repay perusal. There is no excuse of the Church's narrowness, nor apology for its failure to save the world. The writer, in dealing with the subject of Christian teaching, pertinently says: "The rock on which religion splits into antagonism in New England is the narrow personal theorizing of those who attempt to teach Christianity." In speaking of those who call themselves "evangelicals," he says: "They are not ready to give up, and still respond like superannuated soldiers to the sound of the bugle; but they are fighting phantoms of the air." Every intelligent person recognizes the fact that evangelical Christianity is dead, but not every one dares publicly to acknowledge it.

The April number of the North American Review opens with an article entitled "Retribution in Politics," by ex-Governor Hendricks. The second paper is on "The Public Schools of England," and is by Thomas Hughes, author of "Tom Brown at Rugby." Next follows a contribution on "German Socialism in America," by an anonymous writer. The fourth article is by Henry James, Jr., and is entitled "A Friend of Lord Byron." "The Census of 1880," by George Walker, offers suggestions as to the best means of taking the national census, and shows how the business interests of the country can be advanced by census statistics if they can be made full and accurate. The sixth article is a plea for the Indians, by the noted Nez Percés chief, Joseph, with an introduction by Bishop Hare. It gives a detailed account of Joseph's famous campaign, from its beginning to his surrender to General Miles, and presents with all the force of Indian eloquence the claims of the race for justice and protection. W. W. Story, poet and sculptor, concludes his discussion of "The Pronunciation of the Latin Language." "Hartmann's Religion of the Future" is the subject of a treatise by M. A. Hardaker. The writer says that there is as much diversity in religious thought as in the trees of the forest, and that while Mr. Hartmann's new religion may appeal to the most cultivated and æsthetic minds, Christianity has in it certain elements that will preserve it and enable it to flourish for centuries to come. He attacks Mr. Hartmann's idea of the unconscious in religion. The closing paper is a critical review of recent miscellaneous literature.

Communications.

THE NEED OF "SOCIAL REFORM."

MR. EDITOR:—

Allow me to thank you and others for the true and noble work you have at last inaugurated,—that of leading a nation back from the worse extreme to the happy medium, which means neither chains for the weak and defenceless nor "free lust" for the sensual and selfish.

If it is, as we believe, true that the consequences of individual or social conduct determine its character, we need not look far for proofs of the infamous viciousness of much of the social life of to-day. In proportion as we rise spiritually to the sublime heights of the great Teacher whom some of us still delight to honor shall we see clearly that right around our own homes and hearth-stones are objects of wretchedness and misery all-sufficient to arouse our sympathies, and thus to bring "elements of highest thought into affinity with holiest feeling." We love our own so well that it is hard for us to remember that infinite love cares just as much for those who suffer to-day as for those who may suffer years to come. Surely we need not look a half-score of years into the future, remembering, as we may, that each one of these dishonored wives was once some one's "little girl," tenderly loved and carefully reared, trusted at last to the tender mercies of a "fiend," who at the bidding of his own selfish lust casts her off, without shelter from the storm or a cover from the tempest.

But let me ask, Would it not be well for us to remember that, unless all truly pure and noble souls join as one to crush out this monster evil, there will be just as straight a path from the well-guarded homes and nurseries of to-day to the pit of destruction, or the rack of torture, as there has been from those of the past?

That there were and are wrongs to be righted, who can doubt? But I, for one, fail to see one atom of good that has resulted from the terrible work of the last score of years. Was it indeed necessary that we should be thus degraded as a nation, in order to arouse us to our duties to the weak and defenceless and our responsibilities to the world?

I have looked in vain for years, to see some so-called Christian journalist commence this work of reform. Most of these are deeply engaged in building up their doctrines and fine churches, which shall furnish a secure retreat in time of need for Mrs. Woodhull and her champions.

The great and true principle of the universal brotherhood of man finds recognition, I believe, in the sentiments of Free Religionists. Some of us add to this a firm faith in a Universal Father who is One, and who will help us out of this tangled maze into the highways of true purity and holiness of life and heart. But it is necessary that we work in harmony with His laws, which, rightly understood, are good and pure and safe,—a terror only to evil-doers.

Again allow me, from my heart, to thank you, in recognition of the noble work you are engaged in, and to express an honest hope that you may do this work wisely and well.

March 9, 1879.

A QUESTION TO MR. WRIGHT.

HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT:

Sir,—In your communication to THE INDEX of last week, you "protest against its editorial statement that the National Liberal League 'has most unequivocally committed itself to repeal.'" You also say: "It is not true that the election of officers in favor of repeal committed the original organization to a conclusion contrary to its unanimous vote on the question itself, postponing it for further consideration."

Now will you allow me to ask the true reason why all the old officers were set aside, and new ones all in favor of repeal were put in their place—especially just after a unanimous vote had been passed, postponing the question until the next annual meeting.

Were the existing officers deemed incompetent to manage the affairs of the League? Was the President, who had created it, organized it, and by the most earnest and persevering efforts of years had gained for it the importance it had acquired, supposed not to understand its bearings and interests, or not to be capable of managing them? Or was he thought to be wanting in honesty, integrity, intellectual force, and pure regard for human welfare? Did his past record warrant such conclusions?

What, then, if the majority were honest in their vote to postpone for further consideration the question of repeal, were their reasons for wishing an entire change of officers?

This is a mystery, the solution of which, on any other ground than that of the League's "committing itself to repeal," you are respectfully requested to furnish.

[The request made by the lady who has given the above for publication will, we trust, be entertained without the slightest regard to any susceptibilities of ours; and we beg Mr. Wright, for the time being, to forget that he has been from the very commencement of THE INDEX one of the kindest, most generous, and most unwearied friends that man ever had. All our acts as President of the National Liberal League are fair subjects of truthful criticism, from which we should scorn to be shielded by any personal considerations whatever; and, whatever should be said of other repealers that have criticised us, Mr. Wright himself will never stoop to criticism that is untruthful. We have believed that the election at Syracuse turned on the publicly made issue of "repeal vs. reform," so far as the great majority of the voters were concerned. Mr. Wright denies this; there must, then, have been some other and private reason for it. Let this reason, press as hard as it may on us or on our colleagues, be now unflinchingly declared. We absolve Mr. Wright from all obligation derived from considerations of generosity or private friendship, and second the above request for a frank statement of the truth as he sees it, no matter how severe or exorbitant. The public, as shown by the subjoined article from the Christian Register of March 22, shares our own belief on this point; nothing can dissipate it, if erroneous, but a positive declaration of the true significance of the Syracuse election.—Ed.]

MR. COOK and the Free Religionists.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHRISTIAN REGISTER:—

I am one of your new "Orthodox" subscribers, and I write for information. In a recent address, Mr. Joseph Cook asserts that the "Free Religionists" in a recent conference, I think held at Syracuse, voted in favor of certain resolutions denouncing the law which forbids the transmission of obscene publications by mail.

Now I know that Mr. Cook played havoc with scientific truth last year; but it seems strange that he would make such a story out of "whole cloth." On the other hand, it seems incredible that the men known as leaders of "Free Religionism" could have recorded such a vote. I am mystified. Please state fully and clearly what basis of fact lies behind or beside this statement by Mr. Cook.

CALIFORNIAN.

ANSWER.—The scientific study of religion is the object of the Free Religious Association; the complete separation of Church and State is the object of the Liberal League. The Free Religious Association once went out of its way and passed a resolution of congratulation over the multiplication of branch Leagues, meaning thereby to express its sympathy with secularization. Then the League went out of its way, not by passing any such resolutions as our correspondent describes, but by allowing the election of its officers to turn on their known opinions concerning the repeal of the law against obscene literature. The repeal ticket succeeded; but the minority, including prominent Free Religious leaders, withdrew and formed a separate League. Naturally enough, some of the members of the Association were also members of the League; and as the old League deservedly suffers odium for choosing to place itself under the lead of its looser element, Mr. Cook has made the most of these circumstances and sought to throw this odium upon the Association by ignoring distinctions and disclaimers and lumping all together as "cancer-plants." He had a clear right to say that the whole body of shameless men and women who advocate free lust, or whose teachings look toward an abrogation of all legal restraints on sexual relations, are arrayed against Christianity; he might also say truly that hostility to Christianity has deeply colored the proceedings of the Free Religious Association; but he had no right to assert or imply that the two organizations hold any common ground on the obscene literature issue. But Mr. Cook's injustice in this matter should hardly need any other exposure than his own attempted defence, and the indignant protest of those who felt themselves slandered by being charged with holding principles which they abhor. We have not heard that Mr. Cook's peculiar way of treating those whom he counts misbelievers has led to any conversions; and we doubt if any one on earth or in heaven has ever overheard him offering the prayer:—

"Let not this weak, unknowing hand Presume Thy bolts to throw!"

THOUGHTS OF AN INVALID.

Clothes Philosophy.

It is more than ten years since I saw a volume of Sartor Resartus, but I think I have an idea concerning the philosophy of clothes that is not put down in that quaint and interesting book. How will the "Coming Pair" decorate itself?

The student of natural history observes that among all animals, including man, the excess of ornament is given to the males. That fact indicates plainly enough the testimony of Nature as to the correct relation of the sexes regarding ornament. The "fitness of things" also indicates that artificial ornamentation should follow the same law. This fitness seems to have been observed by all primitive peoples; if there was any excess of ornament, it was appropriately worn by the males. A partial civilization has made an inharmonious variation from the Divine law. The so-called civilized woman not only assumes a large excess of decoration in her apparel, but a multitude of sisters are slavish fanatics in millinery. This is wrong. Probably the error arises from the social mis-relation of the sexes which has aroused the protests of the advocates of woman's rights. Perhaps, when that mis-relation is equitably and satisfactorily adjusted, the propriety of rendering unto Caesar his ornamental dues will be unquestioned.

The "Coming Woman" will dress differently. In her decoration she will appear by the side of her lord much the same as a modest brown blackbird by the side of her glistening mate. To do full justice to the law and the testimony, perhaps I should say the coming pair will array themselves, the one like a beautiful liberal Quakeress of Philadelphia, the other like a handsome Boston man in a neat major-general's uniform! At this point I am liable to get beyond my depth, and will therefore turn the subject over to the fair sex for further elucidation; but I must continue to insist that the comparative excess of decoration should by right, human and divine, be worn by the masculine gender!

Sectarian Thinking.

It is an inevitable accompaniment of mental growth that various labels should designate the disciples of different tendencies of thought. It also seems inevitable that those labels should express to their wearers diversities of vast importance, impassable gulfs of difference, and that they should strive valiantly for the particular portion of truth which has possessed them. The result is a harmony that Mr. Emerson might term "a balance of insanities." Thus is reached the highest and finest fruit of intellectual culture, discrimination.

When a child first studies geography, he is liable to be misled by the lines drawn across the maps. Although he sees no line when he looks out of doors, he may think he would see one if he travelled far enough. The necessities of teaching require an orderly and systematic, though faulty, classification of things. Children of larger growth are as likely to be deceived by the artificial divisions and distinctions in the text-books of science, philosophy, theology, etc., as the child by lines of latitude. If a man could scrutinize Nature without preconceptions, with his five senses clear, he might conclude that while lines, divisions, and sharp distinctions are convenient for students and teachers, they are artificial, arbitrary, and should be so considered. Nature is not a system; she is a growth. The "gaps" are in our knowledge, not in her method. She wears the seamless robe; her infinite variety is all of one stuff. Much account is made by some persons of the "immense gulf" between mind and matter, sensation and motion, objective and subjective; also between organic and inorganic. As to the latter, Dr. Edmund Montgomery says in the Popular Science Monthly that C O O is inorganic and C H O organic, the only difference being an atom of hydrogen in a world where plenty of it is "lying around loose." That gulf is in a fair way to be filled; and we have no reason to believe there is a greater between mind and matter than can be found between the two sides of a solid shield.

The man who discriminates may recognize, and within bounds may believe, in all the opposing diversities of real thinking, without being guilty of any more inconsistency and confusion than his mother Nature. She is one, two, three, and many; she is spiritual and materialist; she is optimist and pessimist; she is all things to some men. Discrimination, indeed, covers and includes all thought-labels with the same divine inconsistency which pervades the universe; it simply acknowledges phenomena and their relations.

P. D.

HOT-HOUSE REFORMERS.

This is an age of rapid development in every department of life. How soon a man may now attain the full stature of intellectual greatness, and become a leader of thousands of zealous followers! A wonderful precocity in some minds renders superfluous the patient study and careful observation that were formerly thought to precede accurate and reliable knowledge. A few months' agitation of the Chinese question in San Francisco brings before the eye of a great nation a new political star that soon eclipses the old luminaries of our familiar galaxy of statesmen. After a few successful harangues on his native "sand lots," he masters the whole question of labor and capital that has puzzled so many of his predecessors in the study of political economy, and, shaking the golden dust from his feet, he goes forth as the champion of the National Working Men's Party; and old politicians whose ideas of the science of government are the result of years of careful study and practical experience pale before his newborn wisdom, that cuts the gordian knot of the labor question in the terse epigram, "The Chinese must go."

The career of the California agitator looks a little sensational to a conservative mind; but then this is a fast age, and we live in a republican government where every man has a right to be a politician. Besides, it would show a mercenary leaning toward capital and political aristocracy to question the propriety of the "sand-lot orator's" conduct.

But not in politics alone is the rapid growth of ideas witnessed. Some delinquent church member is discovered in his immorality, and excluded from the fellowship of his brethren. Then he suddenly becomes conscious of the logical inconsistencies of the evangelical system of religion, and after reading a ten-cent tract against the Bible he is sure that the Church is an institution of "despising priests," gotten up to enslave minds of men. Another tract or two of the "short-method" system of propagating infidelity graduates this late disciple of Orthodoxy, and he would accept a "call" from the liberal party to preach the new gospel of liberty which he has so fortunately learned. The very foundations of all religious faiths tremble, he imagines, at the results of his searching investigations; and woe to the puerile victim of Christian superstition that dare measure lances with him in debate. In all probability he has learned during the brief period since his "eyes were opened" by the "persecution" he suffered from his bigoted brethren, that not only the Bible is false and religion a "humbug," but that the whole social and political order needs reconstructing. He has looked through the whole system of civilization, and discovered that all existing social and political relations are false and oppressive, the offspring of priestcraft and kingcraft. He has such an ardent zeal for the cause of "humanity" that he would like to devote his life to the work of founding the grand Utopia that must spring up as soon as Reason waves her wand of power over the ruins of the past. He is the self-elected conductor of an imaginary lightning express car of reform, and if you want to go the "shortest route" to the "Land of Promise" without having your progressive soul irritated by the harsh friction of conservative breaks, mount his train and witness the propelling power of steam when unchecked by any restrictions of puerile fear!

But the cause of freethought needs every ally that it can get, and we should not "draw lines" in the liberal ranks!

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

THE VOICE OF WOMAN IN REFORM.

LINCOLN, Ill., Feb. 26, 1879.

TO THE INDEX ASSOCIATION:

Messrs.—Mrs. Spencer's "Liberty versus License: True and False Reformers," etc., seemed so like the inspired words of the true reformer that I could not keep THE INDEX all to myself, but felt obliged to read it to some of my friends, and at last to lend it. Words of such deep earnestness, beauty, and truth, spoken at this time when many of us who have launched out into the ocean of freethought feel sore afraid of the rocks and shoals that loom up before us in the shape of false reforms (many of which look so like the safe shores of true ones), and are in doubt as to whether we can steer clear of them,—to such of us her words are as a beacon light set in a high tower on a hill.

Such glowing words cannot fail to waken an answering glow in many other earnest souls, and I cannot help saying in my own behalf that my heart is full of gratitude, most fervent gratitude, toward her, because she is a woman! And in imagination I reach my hand across half a continent to give hers a sympathetic grasp.

And now this week again my heart is full of gratitude toward THE INDEX and a woman! Every woman in the land who reads the lecture of Elizabeth Oakes Smith on Woman Suffrage must be grateful to her. She has said for us what few if any of us could have said so well for ourselves; and, if through these columns I may be permitted, I wish to say to her that I am thankful to her, as to Gail Hamilton, who has the honor of having written Woman's Wrongs.

Yours most truly,

MRS. EMMA BURTON.

"COME NOW, stupid," said the school-master; "you don't know how much two and five make. Now listen. In one pocket I have $2 and in the other $5. Now how many dollars have I got?" "Let me see them, and I will tell you." School was dismissed.

"THE RISE" generation is it ye cahl 'em?" says Mrs. Moloney; "begorra, the lary young abalpeens'll lay in bed till they wear through, so they will."—Yonkers Gazette.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEPHENS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 90 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesheb Chander Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by O. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion." Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Leaker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be discarded and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal.

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is especially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boy, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	1.50
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUMERACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Midwinters.....	2.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems... The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 2 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.50
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	2.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHERRY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. A Series of Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONIQUE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE E.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Ownership.....	2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.50
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESOASTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (B. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	3.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	2.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown Artist.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.50
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers... Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Rite of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Ordinances on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.75
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeltons.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mosses from the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.25
The Ghosts, &c.....	1.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, Treatise of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LEOKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	2.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. G.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HUBAUC). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1829 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVATT (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Erkose from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 4 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	2.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historical Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHILIPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolly Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedley in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours; the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Seasons, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.00
ROBBETTS (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
ROEHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 35 vols.....	12.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	1.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	5.00
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.50
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.50
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 6 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Harry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humours, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. UELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.00
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Forests.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragment of Science for Universal Education.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Rest as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Ring and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.50
Fables. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX.

321 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 8,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

M. J. SAVAGE'S NEW NOVEL, Bluffton,

Describing in a very interesting way the processes of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical. 12mo. Price $1.50.

Also, by the same author,

The Religion of Evolution:

"An exposition of religion in the light of the most advanced science. A brave and reverent thinker."—London Inquirer. Price $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S DEBATES.

I. Underwood-Marple. Questions: "Are Atheism and Materialism and Modern Secularism illogical and contrary to reason?" "Does the Bible contain evidence above all other books of its divine origin?" 110 pages, cloth. Price, 60 cents.

II. Burgess-Underwood. Questions: "Is the Christian Religion as set forth in the New Testament true in fact, and of divine origin?" "Is the Bible erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and of human origin?" 170 pages, paper. Price, 60 cents.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

UNITY.

A FORTNIGHTLY ORGAN OF

Freedom, Fellowship, and Character in Religion.

Editor.—H. M. SIMMONS. Publishing Committee.—ROBERT COLLYER, J. L. JONES, C. W. WENDT, J. C. LEARNED, W. C. GANNETT.

Vol. III., beginning March 1, 1879, will contain Robert Collyer's "Table Talk"; two series of articles on "The Liberal Preachers of America out of the Pulpit" (our Poets and Essayists), and "The Growth of Doctrine, or the Old New Creed"; Unity Sunday-school Lessons, etc.

Price $1.50 a year. Clubs of 10 at $1.25.

Room 57, 75 MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWOPENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,

84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF ## CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. Tallemaque, Author of Supernatural Religion,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 18 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. O. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $8.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort. Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. K. van der Kooij, Professor at Leyden. A popular and critical account of the "Bible School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I. Patriarchate; Moses; Judges. Vol. II. Kings and Prophets. Vol. III. New Testament (in preparation). Price $2.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 178 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Kappert. Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion. 233 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 268 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.25.

THE GHOSTS: Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. R. G. Ingersoll's latest lecture. 272 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 284 pages. Price $1.25.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition, 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the greatest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Inquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half Calif., $5.00. Will be ready March 30.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $3.50, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

"No book published in the world at any time or in any age has had the influence and effect on the thinking part of the community as this work. It has done more to open the eyes of the ignorant and credulous, and sweep away the cobwebs of dogma and superstition than any other book. It no doubt has a strong rival in Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom, but the books are of altogether a different class. With a far ahead of anything else of the kind published. They are a library in themselves. A study of these two books will give the opponent of dogmatic Christianity a great advantage in discussion. Every point is carefully and minutely investigated, and stripped of any rotten accretions. The most devout and sincere Christian can find nothing but which is mainly and respectably argued and free from offensiveness, which is not often the case in books of this nature."—London Times.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WESTERN LECTURES.

MRS. CLARA NEYMANN intends to go West, on a lecture tour, in February and March, and would like to make additional engagements to lecture on social and free-religious themes, whether in the English or German language. Please address her for particulars at 97 Malden Lane, New York.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 180. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. . . . It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 1879.

WHOLE No. 484.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

4. The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointments, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

HON. ANDREW D. WHITE, President of Cornell University, has been nominated as minister to Germany. Professor William C. Russell, the Vice-President, will, it is said, act as President during his absence.

A CALIFORNIA judge has recently decided not to exclude the testimony of an atheist in court. This is commented on as an innovation. Of course it is an innovation, but it ought to become an authoritative precedent in such cases.

AGASSIZ is said to have uttered this pithy apophthegm: "Whenever a new and startling fact is brought to light in science, people first say, 'It is not true,' then that 'It is contrary to religion,' and, lastly, that 'Everybody knew it before.'"

THE BAPTIST newspapers all over the land are in a ferment of indignation because the Second Baptist Church of St. Louis, whose edifice was not long since burned, and who accepted the invitation of a Jewish synagogue to worship in its temple (inspired, perhaps, by the same good-feeling which led the Jews to offer their building), invited Christians of other names to partake of the Lord's Supper with them.

A GENEROUS FRIEND OF THE INDEX in Montreal, who has acquired no little reputation by his ingenious contributions to the Popular Science Monthly, sends to the paper a donation of ten dollars, accompanied by these encouraging words: "Let me thank you sincerely, not only for myself, but on behalf of the little circle here, for your recent editorials, particularly the one on 'The Final Appeal in Morals.' None of us have met anything else so clear and conclusive on a subject of the deepest importance. THE INDEX ably fills a high place in journalism, and I am sure many owe their best moral instruction to it. Herewith is a small contribution to help the paper along, and, were not times desperately bad, I should gladly send more."

MISS MARIE A. BROWN's translation of Nadeschda, a poem in nine cantos by the famous Finnish poet, Johan Ludvig Runeberg, gives to the American reader in a beautiful form a most charming idyl of Russian life under the reign of the first Catherine. The metre is very peculiar, and without rhyme, but is carefully retained from the original. The story is a sweet and tender one of Russian tyranny conquered at last by the patient purity and love of the poor serf-girl, Nadeschda. While not perfect in all respects, Miss Brown's version is on the whole very successful, and breathes the aroma of the truly poetic spirit. She publishes the book herself, in a very tasteful style, and may be addressed, Post-office Box 900, Boston. Price, $1.50.

AT THE monthly meeting of the German Republican Central Committee, held at the Steuben House in New York City on March 21, this excellent resolution was adopted with only one dissenting vote: "Whereas, in a republic in which equal rights are guaranteed to all, the duties and obligations to the government should be borne by all alike; and whereas a discrimination is made in favor of religious congregations, which escape taxation and thus unjustly increase the burdens of the citizens; and whereas this favor is abused in the erection of extravagant and untaxed edifices; therefore be it Resolved, that the Legislature of the State of New York be requested in the revision of the tax laws to provide for the taxation of church property."

THE OKOLONA (Mississippi) Southern States speaks out for the "lost cause" without much regard for prudence: "Yes, thank God, we have captured the Capitol, and in 1880 our man will walk up to the White House steps and take his seat in the presidential chair. Then will our glorious triumph be complete. Then will we proceed to tear your amendments from the Constitution and trample them in the mire. Then will we break the shackle you have forged for the free, sovereign, and independent Commonwealths of the Union. Then will we recognize the right of secession, a right that is not dead but sleeping. Then will we decorate the Capitol with the pictures of Davis and Lee and Stuart, and all the glorious leaders of a cause that is not lost but living still. Yes, thank God, we have captured the Capitol, and from that coigne of vantage we propose to rule the Republic in a way that will make your radical laws and your radical leaders forever odious in America."

IN RESPONSE to a letter of the Secretary of the National Liberal League of America, Mr. Hargrave, the highly respected editor of the Freethought Journal of Toronto, Canada, throws his influence on the side of radical liberalism, and strengthens the cause of freedom and morality combined: "It is almost unnecessary for me to state that I am in entire sympathy with my friend, Mr. Underwood, and his friends Mr. Abbot, Judge Hurlbut, and others, in the stand they have taken in the matter of 'obscenity.' We require laws to punish persons who would, for the sake of gain, cater to depraved appetites, or arouse the passions of the young by placing before them obscene pictures and lewd descriptions. In my opinion, there should be laws, Federal and State, Dominion and Provincial, against the circulation of really obscene works through the mails or otherwise. If, therefore, you think that adding my name to the list of Vice-Presidents of the National Liberal League of America will strengthen in any way the cause of purity and good morals, you are at liberty to do so." Mr. Hargrave's name has been gladly added to that list by the Directors, to fill the vacancy left by Mr. Frothingham's withdrawal.

GREECE seems to have spontaneously originated a movement analogous to Unitarianism: "The Greek Orthodox Church is at present threatened with a great schism, or, as it perhaps would be better to represent the case, its somewhat stagnating waters have suddenly come into violent motion. Some years ago, one Makrakis, a man of eloquence, intelligence, and wealth, used to hold large religious meetings in his house at Athens. In 1872 he founded two schools, one in Athens and one in Piræus, in which children received free instruction; and in the following year he began to issue a religious periodical, The Word, and erected a church in Athens. His ideas of reform, he had gathered from the very earliest period of the Christian Church. He rejected the authority of bishops and synods, all fasts, the worship of saints, and the whole liturgy of the Greek Orthodox Church. As far as possible, he sought to reduce religion to a pure relation between God and individual man, and the ideas of church and congregation were held in a very vague and floating form. There was a kind of administration, but no kind of government. His followers confessed to each other and partook of the Lord's Supper at every divine service. In spite of his radicalism, he found great sympathy, even among the clergy of the Established Church. Several priests joined him, teaching in his school and officiating in his church, and everything went on calmly and peacefully. But last year the Greek Government, which hitherto had taken no notice of the movement, suddenly determined to interfere; and it did so in a most clumsy, unpractical, and violent manner. It closed the schools, confiscated the church building, banished the priests to some distant monasteries to do penance, and undertook, with one single blow, to sweep out of existence the whole affair. It has been mistaken, however. Makrakis has issued one protest after the other; a great literary controversy has arisen; the monks have grown fanatic; the whole population has come into commotion; and a general uproar has been raised, which the Government is utterly unable to still."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCOIS E. ABBOT.	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT.	Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.	Irvington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.	Boston, Mass.
MR. WM. J. POTTER.	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. E. P. HALLOWELL.	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON.	Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POFF.	San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.	Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE.	Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. FELSENTHAL.	Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER.	Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.	Flushing, N. Y.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.	Detroit, Mich.
MR. HORACE SEAUVER.	Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
MR. ISAAC M. WISE.	Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.	Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
W. J. R. HARGRAVE.	Editor of "Freedought Journal," Toronto, Can.
REV. ROBERT G. COLLYER.	Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.	Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. E. S. MCCORMICK.	Franklin, Pa.
ELDER F. W. EVANS.	Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.	New York City.
MRS. AMY PORT.	Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.	Tenafly, N. J.
MRS. MALLIE HOLLEY.	Lottsburg, Va.
JOSEPH McDONOUGH.	Albany, N. Y.
RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.	Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN. 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITCOMB. 142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

A. J. WILCOX. 3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.J. A. J. WILCOX. W. H. HAMLEN.
F. E. ABBOT. O. D. B. MILLS.
D. G. CRANDON.Executive Committee.

Alabama	J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas	JOHN ARNOLD, Monticello.
California	J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado	DAVID T. BRALLS, Granada.
Connecticut	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware	JOSEPH D. GORLT, Greenville.
Florida	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois	DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galena.
Indiana	N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa	J. C. MICHELER, Adair.
Kansas	JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky	S. B. CLARK, Louisville.
Louisiana	EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine	DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts	E. A. SAWTLELL, Boston.
Michigan	KARL SCHUMMANN, Detroit.
Minnesota	J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri	E. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Nebraska	W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
Nevada	W. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Jersey	FRANCOIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New York	O. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
North Carolina	J. W. THORNTON, Warren.
Ohio	E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon	SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
Rhode Island	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina	P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee	DR. E. H. FAIRB, Chattanooga.
Texas	DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Fort Worth.
Vermont	E. L. HAUGHTON, North Benning.
Virginia	L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia	DR. A. M. DEBT, Weston.
Wisconsin	ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Wyoming	D. P. WILCOX, Laramie.
District of Columbia	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Idaho	W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Montana	NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.D. G. CRANDON, Chairman. Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS. 157 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE. 231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
SYRACUSE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orris. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.
ROCHESTER, N. Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester.
CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y.	MOSES HAYS, Rochester, N. Y.
FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-8, R. URBINO, West Newton, Mass.
Z. T. WATKINS, Syracuse, N. Y.	W. D. HUNT, Scott, N. Y.
NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, Syracuse, N. Y.	FRANCOIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, Mass.
GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mt. K. N. LADY, Albany, N. Y.
WATKINS, Ill.	J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N. J.
HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y.
W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass.	SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N. Y.	HOPKINS WHIPPLE, Boston, Mass.
B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.	D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y.	JOHN W. TRUESDELL, Syracuse, N. Y.
RENE TURK, Chelsea, Mass.	H. P. STARK, Rochester, N. Y.
JOHN NILL, Watertown, N. Y.	JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N. Y.
E. A. SAWTLELL, Boston, Mass.	W. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N. Y.
THOMAS DUGAN, Albany, N. Y.	JOHN FREEST, Albany, N. Y.
JAMES B. PICK, Rochester, N. Y.	O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.	P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Is Liberalism Moral?

A DISCOURSE PREACHED BEFORE THE FIRST FREE RELIGIOUS SOCIETY OF LYNN, MARCH 23, 1879.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

There is a system of thought and faith which is known by the general term of liberalism. This system comprises the thought which is opposed to the philosophy of absolutism, and the faith which is antagonistic to the doctrines of Christianity. Liberalism has been called immoral. It is charged that liberalism leaves the individual without moral restraint; that it affirms no other guide of human action than personal inclination or caprice; that it recognizes no law which the individual is bound to respect, and, consequently, that a man may do what he pleases, and defiantly ask society what it is going to do about it?

Were this charge true, we should disavow all connection with liberalism, and join its opponents in their endeavor to overthrow its principles; but, instead of that, we purpose to defend our position as a liberal. Some have thought the wiser course for liberals to pursue was to answer the accusation by silence; but silence to-day would be a confession that the charge is true. Liberals must defend themselves against a spurious liberalism. This is the demand of the hour, and all who love the right and true will not shrink from doing their duty. Events have forced liberals where they cannot wave aside this charge of immorality without leaving themselves tainted with suspicion. We must speak, and with no ambiguity in our language. The only course for us is to avow our faith in moral principles, and then to live in such a manner that our actions cannot in any way be arrayed against such principles.

I deplore dissensions, and regret that the necessity has arisen for liberals to defend their faith against those who claim to accept the principles of liberalism, and who enroll themselves under its name. But I prefer division rather than to have liberalism rest in silence under this charge of immorality. What we should do is to declare in plain, fearless speech our opposition to those social ideas which tend to the destruction of the marriage system, and which leave only sexual considerations to determine the relations of the sexes. Free religion ought not to bear the odium of these ideas. While it is rightfully jealous of liberty, it cannot endorse license. I would have free religion command the world's respect; the respect of those persons who believe in social order, in husband and wife, in family and home. Where you find the highest regard for the rightful relations between man and woman; where you find the family altar bright and pure with the fire of lawful affection; where you find homes pervaded by mutual esteem and moral rectitude, there will you find that atmosphere of human existence in which the soul reaches its noblest stature and enjoys the deepest peace. Liberalism must pronounce in favor of the home; in favor of social morality against the doctrines of looseness which have been wrongfully charged upon it. There is no place in the ranks of free religion for those who are not willing to be moral, who do not recognize individual and social morality as essential to human character, and to the preservation of human society.

We may regret that any reproach has been cast upon the liberal name, and shrink from the task of defending it; but the duty has been imposed upon us, and we cannot shrink without being guilty of moral cowardice. I would see the columns of liberalism solid in their attacks upon the false theology and false philosophy of Christianity, if, at the same time, they are solid in their defence of what is right and just in human conduct; but better that they be broken and scattered than march under the banner of immorality, and with no higher purpose than to win the privilege of living independent of moral restrictions.

It has been said that the accusation of being immoral, which has been made against liberalism, comes from a Christian source, and hence is unworthy our notice; that it is but a variation of the slander of infidelity which the Christian Church has heaped upon those who have denied the infallibility of its dogmas. Granting that the charge originated in the Christian Church, it does not remove from us the obligation to answer it. Let us not attempt to disguise facts. We must not remain silent through fear to offend some one by our speech. The policy of silence cannot be adopted. We must openly deny the charge brought against liberalism, and disavow all sympathy with the ideas which have invited the accusation.

It is well known that a class of persons who regard the present laws in relation to marriage as infringements upon man's personal liberty,—as not binding men and women morally,—as tyrannical and unjust,—have identified themselves with liberalism; and it is on account of the connection of such persons with the liberal movement that it is charged with being immoral. I have thus plainly stated the case, that condemnation, if any be deserved, may fall where it belongs. As a liberal, as a free religionist, I protest against being made to bear the odium of theories which I do not accept and which I hold as detrimental to the moral well-being of humanity. We need social reform; we do not want social disease. I am ready to work anywhere to help mankind, and will not withhold my voice in the cause of progress or truth; but I am unwilling to be placed where I do not belong, or to bear the reproach which belongs to others.

Free religion is not on trial; it is what has been associated with free religion. Under the broader term of liberalism have those socialist theories which are called immoral sought a refuge. Let no mistake be made in respect to the charge upon which liberalism is arraigned. It is not arraigned for any difference of opinion on theological subjects. It is not accused on religious grounds, but on moral grounds. It is not charged with irreligion, but with immorality. The issue before the world is this: "Is liberalism moral or immoral?" or, in plain words, "Is free religion for or against what is known as free love?"

It is the duty of every liberal to place himself right on this question. It is the duty of every liberal speaker openly and honestly to declare his opposition to free love, or openly and honestly to acknowledge his acceptance of it. We want every liberal platform cleared from the imputation of being in sympathy with this doctrine, or we want to know what platforms sympathize with it.

I reject free love in whole and in part. I do not accept one of its principles as I understand them. I repudiate utterly all that belongs to the word or goes with it, and want nothing to do with it. I believe it is an evil, a foul disease in our social body. I refuse to endorse it, and assert that it is not connected with free religion in any way. Wherever free love has become associated with liberalism, we would say to liberals, as Paul said to the Corinthians in reference to the pollution of idolatry: "Be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing." It is the duty of every man and woman who loves right, truth, honor, moral purity, and whatever is good and fair to speak and act against this doctrine. We want free platforms, but we want clean ones. While we would not sacrifice our principles, we will not surrender our character. I believe in liberty, but in obeying the laws of liberty liberalism cannot afford to disregard the demands of morality. The political freedom which Americans have won is a national blessing, and that higher freedom which every human being may enjoy—freedom of conscience,—is every person's right. I would not say to another, "Do as I command you to do," but, "Do what the laws of Nature and the universal reason of man declare right." We want free thought, free speech, and free conduct; but when lawlessness and licentiousness claim the sanction of liberty for their acts, it is time to protest against such claim. When liberty leads the world to virtue,—when liberty leads the world to health, peace, and happiness,—when liberty leads the world to better living and better doing, then does it fulfil its high and glorious mission. But when it breaks down the moral safeguards of society, it is time to have a warrant issued for its arrest. The moral arch is one in which we cannot have a single loose stone. We must have positive convictions grounded in the moral experience of mankind, and positive obedience to the laws grounded upon that experience. Do not imagine you can map out life without conscience. Do not suppose that you can have human society without some distinction of right and wrong being made between human acts.

Because liberalism opened wide its doors, it does not follow that it adopts every frantic and foolish whim of those who enter its doors. The large majority of liberals are sensible, moral men and women, and, while they are justly indignant at any attempt to deprive man of his rights, they are jealous of their good name. To charge upon the great mass of liberal thinkers any responsibility for the evils growing out of the free-love theory, is to do them an injustice. Free religion is nothing if not moral.

It will be said that we are growing conservative, that we are adopting Christian methods and habits, and that our protest means, "I am holier than thou." Do not be frightened by any such absurd insinuations. If to be radical is to disregard all moral considerations and distinctions, I cannot be a radical; and if to declare publicly that I prefer morality to immorality is to be pharisaical, then put me down as a pharisee. We do not make any professions of superiority when we say we cannot be identified with those who advocate the doctrines of free love. We do not adopt any creed by saying that we reverence the authority of the moral law. We do not make any confession of faith when we say we believe in living as good a life as we can. I have faith in liberalism and confidence in liberals, and believe that our movement is in the right direction; but the social parasite of free love which has fastened to its body must be cast off. As Mr. Abbot forcibly says: "The first interest of liberals to-day is a thoroughly reformed liberalism."

We do not expect that every person can be a moral colossus, nor that every liberal will keep himself "unspotted from the world." It is to be expected that human nature will develop according to its own laws, and not by any theories which we may devise for its development; but neither is it to be expected that human beings will fashion their lives upon brute models, nor frame statutes for human government which are copied from actions in the animal kingdom. We know full well that love is human when in a human breast; that Nature will out; that man has the precedents of a hundred vices to excuse his evil conduct, and temptations in a hundred forms to swerve him from the path of right. But, nevertheless, we believe in man as a moral being; that virtue is not a lost art; that innocence did not perish when banished from Eden; and that there is that within human nature from which can be carved the statue of manhood and womanhood. We can consent to no lowering of the moral standard.

Liberalism has ever insisted upon the power and dignity of human nature. It has preached a pure morality, and held up a lofty ideal for men to follow. This is its mission still, and it will not abandon it. The world moves when man grows better. To find what is high, we must climb high. We cannot see the stars with our face to the ground.

Men will be certain to slip without spreading ice under their feet. They will be sure to fall without putting stumbling-blocks in their path.

I do not believe in canonizing vice. Free love may be a saint, but I do not see it so. Immorality may be a reformer, but we cannot work under its standard. Lawlessness may be the "sureka" of moral endeavor, and social anarchy the "excalibur" of governmental attempts; but we very much doubt it. The abolition of marriage may be the El Dorado which the dissatisfied soul has been seeking, but we fear it would prove to be only a greater Inferno. Free love may be an "angel in disguise," but it is so completely disguised that no one could ever discover its angelic features. If one at all, it is a fallen one. We may pity it; we cannot embrace it.

We need the reign of good-sense on earth. We need a universal law in morals. We want a public opinion which will hold men to moral utterance and moral behavior. Morality in its majesty stands like an Olympus, the abode of the gods. On its heights dwell health, happiness, and peace. Every road on earth should lead to it. Every guide-board of life should point to it. To forsake the moral path, is to become a "Wandering Jew" over the face of the earth.

This reproach which Christianity has cast upon liberalism will not stick. The grand purpose of free religion will not be defeated by endeavoring to fasten to its name the ignominy of theories it rejects. Liberalism in its legitimate undertaking is a moral crusade. It is the gospel of human goodness. It affirms man's power to be righteous, and his duty to be righteous. It assails immorality as hidden in the Christian doctrine of vicarious atonement. It would stamp out every false thing that crawls upon the earth, from a vice to an authoritative priesthood. It offers no justification for wrong-doing, but the chance to do better. Liberalism allows men to speak without muzzling them, and to go out of her sight without thinking them engaged in mischief. It trusts man to read all books, and teaches him to accept the good in all and the bad in none. It lets him believe what he must, and asks him only to be honest and sincere in his faith.

Christianity made man a god, but cut him down to a brute. It made a paradise for him to start in, and a hell for him to end in. The Christian religion calls man a worm, an evil and corrupt creature. Free religion is working to rescue man from the moral degradation into which Christianity has plunged him. It preaches the risen man, and tells him to rise higher. It would lead him out of poverty, out of superstition, out of suffering and misery. It would take the world's foot from off his neck, and the Church's hand out of his pocket.

Free religion believes in man first, last, and forever, and wants everything that is done on earth to be done for his happiness and improvement. It believes in the virtues of life, in teaching and in practicing them. It has no faith in the goodness that has to be canned to be kept. It wants the character which can stand the sun, the rain, and the air; a man who will not perish when the weather changes, and whose moral foundation will not be shaken by the frosts of adverse circumstances; a man with a pedestal of moral granite beneath his feet, who is firm in all the purposes of life. Liberalism cannot be betrayed nor its aims defeated by Christianity trying to make it responsible for the free-love heresy. It disclaims all sympathy with it, and defends itself against it. Liberalism is free and moral, and its purpose is to make man free and moral.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

ESTHETIC DIFFERENCES SUBJECTIVE.

BY WILEY BRITTON.

NO. VI.

The connection between the development of the aesthetic sentiments and the nature of the environment has been traced as far as needful. It will be well now to direct our attention briefly to some of the more important subjective or structural conditions, to which are due differences in aesthetic taste. Before proceeding, however, a few words may be usefully set down in explanation of what is meant by subjective conditions. I think it is important that we should have clear ideas on this point at the outset. Uneducated people, and very many who are not designated by this term, speak of hearing the sounds of strings, etc., of seeing certain colored objects, of tasting sweet or bitter things, and of touching hot or cold, hard or soft bodies; and no doubt truly believe that the strings sound, that the objects are of given colors, that sugar is sweet and quinine bitter, that steel is hard and caoutchouc soft,—that is, that these things possess the qualities asserted of them, in themselves.

These erroneous notions must be brushed away from the mind, even though they appear self-evidently true to the great majority of mankind. The string does not sound: it only vibrates. We must divest our minds of the thought that the sound is conveyed from the string through the air to the ear, and through the auditory canal and complex structure of the ear to our consciousness. The fact is, the sound originates in ourselves; is the sensation produced by the vibrating string, but has nothing whatever in common with it. The vibrating string throws the particles of air surrounding it into an oscillatory movement, which movement is propagated in the form of a wave from particle to particle, until the aerial particles next to the eardrum receive the impulse and are set in motion, and in turn communicate their motion through the auditory canal to the drum or tympanum of the ear, causing it to vibrate; and the vibrations of this membrane are transmitted through the chain of small bones of the ear called the ossicles of the tympanum, to a small reservoir of fluid in the labyrinth, in which a further vibratory movement is set up. The fluid in the labyrinth bathes the extremities of the auditory nerve, and any disturbance of it is quickly communicated to and induces in the auditory nerve-fibres a molecular change which is conveyed through the auditory nerve in the form of a current to the brain, and on arrival there produces the phenomenon recognized as the perception of sound.

Again, almost every one says, and most believe, that a soldier's coat is blue. This is an error similar to that of the vibrating string. All we know is, that the coat possesses the quality of producing the sensation we term blue, without adding anything to our knowledge as to what blue is, in itself. The rays of light proceeding from the coat or any object we call blue throw the particles of luminous ether between the eye and coat, or object, into a vibratory movement which is propagated in the form of waves of a given length and velocity, which science has measured. These ether waves pass through the cornea, lens, and vitreous humor, and, taking effect upon the little rods and cones in the external or hindmost layer of the retina, induce in them a molecular change which is propagated as a nervous current through the optic nerve to the brain, and on arrival there produce the sensation we call blue. Once more, when sugar or quinine takes effect on the nerves of taste, there arises the sensation which we call sweet or bitter; yet we are no more authorized to infer that these substances are sweet or bitter in themselves than we are authorized to infer that the string sounds or that the coat is blue. And in regard to the sense of feeling, too, we may remark that the sensations of pressure and temperature do not in the least help us to say whether a given body is hard or soft, hot or cold, in itself. For instance, if one hand be somewhat raised in temperature and the other correspondingly lowered in temperature, and both dipped into water that marks a given temperature by the thermometer, the water will produce a sensation of warmth in one hand, and a sensation of coldness in the other. At any rate, the water will not produce the same sensation of temperature to both hands, but will seem warmer or colder to one hand than to the other.

While we may accept the adage, "De gustibus non est disputandum," we shall find that the common saying, "There is no accounting for tastes," is untrue. Easy formulae like this, expressing apparently familiar truths, quickly obtain currency, and have no doubt too often been the sources of long standing and deep-rooted errors. Among errors of this kind, we may mention those familiar expressions, "What every one says must be true," and "The voice of the people is the voice of God." The fact that no two persons perfectly agree in their aesthetic tastes has perhaps been, from a very early period in the history of our race, familiar to almost every one endowed with an ordinary degree of intelligence. Though this fact has been long familiar, no light could be cast upon the subject while men were satisfied to accept without questioning what they had always heard spoken of as a truth unquestionable.

That the blind are unable to discriminate contrasts in colors, or the deaf unable to discriminate contrasts in timbre and pitch in sounds, is clear enough to every one in possession of his normal faculties. And the inability of the blind or the deaf to discriminate contrasts in colors or in sounds is at once known to be due to structural imperfections of their organs of sight or of hearing. To the consideration of the structural differences in these organs, then, we may mostly confine ourselves in accounting for differences in aesthetic taste. The constitutional or physiological state of the individual is also an important factor that enters into a phase of the question, and will therefore claim a share of our attention in the course of our remarks. Factors of minor importance may be passed over.

To those who have given but little attention to the physiology of the senses, a few remarks on the structure and functions of the visual and auditory organs will be useful in comprehending more clearly the substance of the argument. Let us take first the organization of the eye, the window to the soul through which are received impressions that arouse by far the greater number of our aesthetic feelings. It is not needful for our present purpose to trace the genesis of retinal nerve-fibres and the different parts in the organization of the developed mammalian or human eye. The eye is generally, as we all know, very nearly spherical in shape, and is composed of membranes and humors. About four-fifths of the outer layer of the wall of the globe, called the sclerotic or white of the eye, is formed of a hard, opaque, thick tunic, and serves as a protective covering. Directly under the sclerotic is the choroid, chocolate-colored and rich in blood vessels. It is composed of three layers, the inmost of which consists of small cells, bearing pigmentary granules, and is so arranged as to resemble a tessellated pavement. Lining the inner surface of the choroid is the retina, an extremely delicate and almost transparent membrane. It is in fact nothing else than the flattened extension of the optic nerve; and, extending nearly as far as the ciliary processes and crystalline lens, surrounds the vitreous humor filling the posterior cavity of the globe. It is composed of a great number of minute rods and cones, perhaps not more than one-thousandth of an inch in diameter and one-hundredth of an inch in length, packed closely together and disposed perpendicularly to its surface. Examined by the microscope, it presents a delicate mosaic or tessellated pavement of the extremities of the optic nerve, the rods and cones directly opposite to the pupil being much more closely packed together than those situated laterally to it. And the light of recent investigations in histology makes it almost certain that each of these little rods and cones is supplied with a separate nerve-fibril, capable of independent stimulation, and excessively sensitive and ready to change, and capable of giving out molecular motion in changing. The cornea is a transparent membrane forming the anterior fifth of the globe, and is fitted into the sclerotic in the manner of a watch-crystal over the metal face of a watch. At a distance of perhaps two or three lines behind the cornea, like the dial plate behind the watch-crystal, is the membranous curtain called the iris; and the circular opening in its middle is the pupil. The office of the pupil is to regulate the number of rays of light requisite to the proper stimulation of the retina in the function of sight. The optic nerve is composed of a vast number of closely compressed filaments, and enters the posterior part of the globe rather to the inner or nasal side. The aqueous humor is a limpid transparent fluid, and fills the anterior chamber of the eye; that is, the space between the cornea and iris. Between the aqueous and vitreous humors is the crystalline lens, a circular and highly transparent body, which, in the human eye, is about four lines in diameter and a little more than one in thickness, with its axis in a line with the centre of the pupil in front, and to a point near the yellow spot in the background of the eye. The vitreous humor is almost a perfectly transparent albuminous fluid of about the consistence of thin jelly, and occupies the posterior three-fourths of the globe. The cornea, the aqueous humor, the pupil, the crystalline lens, and the vitreous humor form the different media through which rays of light emanating from external objects reach the retina and produce the sensation of sight. To treat further of the morphology of the eye, and of the functions of all its different parts, would lead us too far out of the way. For a more comprehensive understanding of its mechanism, the reader must be referred to special treatises on the subject; or he may extract the eye of an animal and by dissecting it carefully instruct himself to much advantage.

We may now proceed to the consideration of some of the differences in aesthetic taste due to structural imperfections in the organ of sight. Let us take first the color-blind. A case came under my notice some years ago of a boy who was absolutely blind to all rays of light that impinged upon his retina, except those proceeding from a green object. As his retinal nerve-fibres responded only to a single set of ethereal undulations of a given length and velocity, visual impressions could excite in him no ideas corresponding to our ideas of the other colors of the spectrum. There is also what is generally known as Daltonism, or innate imperfections in the perceptions of colors. This defect of vision discovered by Dalton in himself induced him to investigate the subject by a series of observations made on himself. Other savans have taken up the subject, and it is now known that the number of persons affected with this visual imperfection is much more considerable than is generally supposed,—probably about one in twenty, according to the estimate of Professor Pierre Prevost. And various facts presented in the memoirs of different eminent savans show very conclusively that persons affected with this infirmity see yellow the same as the rest of the world, but cannot distinguish contrasted or complementary colors,—meaning by this expression any two colors which, being added to or blended with one another, produce white. For instance, red and green, blue and orange, and violet and yellow are complementaries. By a very simple experiment, we can ascertain the complementaries of these colors, if there is no defect of our vision. If, after a rather prolonged contemplation of a deep-red object under a strong light, we turn our eyes upon a white ground, it will present a green tint; and vice versa. In contemplating in the same manner blue and yellow, we get their complementaries, orange and violet. And under certain conditions of health and age, we may see a complementary negative image of the object thus contemplated. Dalton recognized in the solar spectrum but two or at most three colors, the yellow, the blue, and perhaps the purple. But his yellow comprised the red, orange, yellow, and green of the normal eye; and his blue he confounded with purple. Yellow and orange were therefore the only colors he saw like the rest of the world. But the complementaries of these two colors, violet and blue, were to him pale blue and crimson respectively. We might pursue the analysis of this class of imperfections in the perceptions of colors much further, but it would draw the argument out to too great a length. It will perhaps be asked, What is the explanation of these phenomena of vision? Why, for instance, does the yellow of some people consist of the red, orange, yellow, and green of the normal eye? Profoundly interesting as these questions are, complete answers cannot be given here. The perception of a given color, however, is known to be due to the number and length of waves of luminous ether that takes effect upon the nervous fibres of the retina in a given time. If the longest waves with the least vibratory velocity reach the eye from the upper end of the spectrum, and decompose the unstable nerve matter in the ends of the retinal nerve fibres, the sensation of a red color is the result. If the shortest waves with the greatest vibratory velocity reach the eye from the lower end of the spectrum, and take effect upon the retina in the same manner, the sensation of a violet color is the result. But a person whose retinal nerve-fibres undergo no molecular change or sympathetic vibration when the longest waves with the least vibratory velocity from the upper end of the spectrum strike them, will have no sensation of color answering to red of the normal eye.

The waves that produce the sensations of colors vary in velocity from four hundred and thirty-nine billions to six hundred and ninety-seven billions per second. It thus seems possible that a highly complex and perfect eye might distinguish an almost unlimited number of tints, or that there may be practically an unlimited number of differences in perceptions of colors, due to structural differences of the eye. Whether those laboring with such defects of vision as Dalton appreciate form the same as people with normal eyes, is not shown in the memoirs consulted. We may suspect, however, that they might be competent critics of marble statuary (unintended), as the rays proceeding from what we call white objects give them visual sensations not differing from the rest of the world. The cornea and crystalline lens might, I think, be of such structure and composition as to give all objects whose rays pass through them and form an image on retina, an appearance of having greater length or breadth than they present to the natural eye. But there would be some difficulty in investigating defects of vision of this kind; and unless an individual had one eye that saw everything like normal eyes, we would rarely hear of such cases even if they existed. There are well-authenticated cases, however, in which the eyes of the same individual do sometimes differ in respect to their degrees of defectiveness. Mr. Herbert Spencer, in his Principles of Psychology (vol. 2, p. 249), refers to two cases, in each of which the eye least appreciative of colors is most appreciative of forms. It seems very likely, too, that if investigations were made with proper care, it would turn out that such cases are by no means isolated. And then there is another kind of defective vision, in which the individual is long-sighted in one eye and near-sighted in the other. An acquaintance informs me that she has a relative with one eye near-sighted and the other normal. Probably most opticians could give some interesting experiences in regard to the different kinds of defective sight. Investigations into the chromatic aberrations of the eye have now established the fact beyond question, that our organ of vision is not, as was formerly supposed, absolutely achromatic. It cannot be absolutely achromatic, for this reason: The white light of the sun, which is composed of the colored rays of the spectrum, in passing obliquely through a transparent medium of a given density into a transparent medium of a different density, is refracted, and also undergoes dispersion to some extent. While some rays of light are streaming into the eye in the direction of the axes of the cornea and crystalline lens, other rays of light are streaming into it at all angles, up to an obliqueness of something like 80° laterally and 80° vertically. Other defects of vision, such as spherical aberration, astigmatism, the blind spot, the venous shadows, etc., could be dwelt upon if our space permitted.

When we consider the great differences in distances at which near-sighted and far-sighted people see objects distinctly; when we further consider that the form and color of an object can be best appreciated only when it is seen within the limits of ocular adaptation or distinct vision; and when we take into account the various defects of vision above referred to,—we see how impossible it is for many people to view things alike from the same stand-point, and how natural it is for them to differ in their æsthetic tastes.

DEATH.

A PAPER READ TO THE PROGRESSIVE SOCIETY OF OTTAWA, CANADA.

BY J. G. WHYTE.

It is the law of all organic structures on the face of the earth, whether vegetable or animal, that sooner or later their existence is terminated by death or dissolution. They are distinguished from inorganic bodies in that they come into existence as scarcely perceptible specks, grow in bulk, attain to maturity, decay, and die. The vital energies by which the circle of actions and reactions necessary to life is sustained having attained maturity at length begin to decline, and finally become exhausted. Inorganic bodies preserve their existence unalterably and forever, unless some mechanical force or some chemical agent separates their particles or alters their composition; but in every living body its vital motions inevitably cease sooner or later, from the operation of causes that are internal and inherent in its frame. And this seems to have been the constitution of organic bodies since the first dawn of life on this world. The record of the rocks exhibits to us traces of death and reproduction among animals, on even a larger scale than that which we now witness. The simpler the structure of an animal, the less is its faculty for self-preservation; but Nature makes amends for this by increased fertility. In proportion as the nervous system increases in complexity does the animal extend its range of the environment in which it seeks for subsistence, and in which it learns to defend itself from enemies, and in the same proportion its life lengthens and its fertility decreases. The same law holds good with man; the inferior and less cultured races among whom we live are more fertile, have larger families, than the more cultured, and many people disquiet themselves unnecessarily at the prospect of the inferior races overrunning the world; but although greater numbers are born; they have less faculty for self-preservation, greater numbers succumb to the dangers round about them, fewer in proportion see maturity or old age. The law, then, being that every organic structure should terminate its existence by death, it becomes an interesting inquiry what means Nature has adopted to prevent such knowledge being a burden to the creatures she has made, and embittering their existence while in life. With regard to the lower creatures, there seems no reason to doubt that she withholds from them all knowledge of death as the end of their existence. There is no evidence to show that any creature lower than man has its enjoyment of life impaired by any premonition of death. By depriving them of reflective faculties, Nature has kindly and effectually withdrawn from them this evil. In consequence, they live in as full enjoyment of the present as if they were assured of every agreeable sensation being eternal. Death takes the individual by surprise. This is specially the case with the herbivorous animals. The carnivora are prompted to steal upon their victims with the unexpected suddenness of a mandate of annihilation. They are also impelled to inflict death in the most instantaneous and least painful method. The tiger and lion spring from their covers with the rapidity of the thunderbolt, and one blow of their tremendous paws inflicted at the junction of the head with the neck produces instantaneous death. The eagle strikes its sharp beak into the spine of the birds which it devours, and their agony endures scarcely for an instant. When a dog catches a rat, his first effort is a violent shake which effectually extinguishes all feeling in its prey. Dr. Livingston narrates in his travels that he was much struck by a similar circumstance when he fell into the jaws of a lion; the immense animal shook him so violently that he was quite unconscious when his assistants rescued him.

Nature having thus beneficently made provision for terminating the lives of her creatures as painlessly as possible, and withholding from them all prospect of death, we may now inquire what means she has taken to reconcile man, her highest creature, to this necessary termination of his existence. Man inherits a constitution similar in many respects to that of the animals round him, but he has in addition a highly complex brain and nervous system. The effect of these endowments is, that he possesses intelligence, he is enabled to gather knowledge of the objects among which he lives, to reflect and reason upon that knowledge. He is thus able to take a far more extended grasp of the environment or surrounding circumstances, both in space and in time, than any of the lower creatures. He is able to take cognizance of the past and the future, as well as of the present. He can observe the great fact of the invariableness of phenomena, the inseparable connection of cause and effect, and he thus forms the idea of law. The more completely he systematizes his knowledge, the more completely he guards himself against the dangers amid which he lives. By conforming his conduct to the conditions which surround him, he can lengthen his days and make them more secure; and he learns that premature death forms no part of the order of Nature as far as man is concerned, that it is a result of infringement of natural laws. Death in old age only is an inherent part of the human constitution. Besides the selfish instincts which are sufficient for the lives of the lower animals, human beings possess moral sentiments, feelings which put them in sympathy with their fellow-men. It is by virtue of these feelings that we are made happy by the happiness of others, that we come to regard the welfare of the community as a worthy object of pursuit, an object to which even our own self-regards may be laudably sacrificed. Under the influence of these feelings, we perceive that an infinitely greater amount of enjoyment of existence results from the order of Nature by which one generation is removed to make room for another, than if the original inhabitants of the earth had remained on it forever. By the natural decay of the faculties and physical functions consequent on old age, Nature little by little withdraws man from the enjoyment of life as well as from the desire for a continuance of it, and he sinks calmly into that sleep of oblivion which rounds the end as it does the beginning of his life. As night succeeds day, as winter succeeds summer, so by insensible gradations does dissolution succeed evolution, does death succeed life.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

But men have in all ages fed themselves with the hope that death is but the portal to another state of existence beyond the grave. In some ill-defined region, generally supposed to be somewhere in the starry heavens, they believe that their lives will be perpetuated forever. Contrary to the analogy of all things round about them, they imagine that though this existence had a beginning, yet it will have no end. This belief had its origin in a semi-barbarous age, when there was little or no knowledge of the constitution of Nature, when as yet man's knowledge of the environment was confined within narrow limits, and it is still strongest in the minds of the most ignorant. The devout Roman Catholic and the old woman of the poet Cowper who knows nothing but that her Bible is true, have a far firmer faith in immortality than the profound philosopher who has spent a lifetime searching diligently for the truth. In an early stage of civilization, it was inevitable that men should form erroneous ideas of things; should, as Huxley says, take some of the innumerable ways of going wrong, rather than the one way of going right. Having no knowledge of science, they were unable to account for natural phenomena, and when they met with anything strange or wonderful they ascribed it to the agency of invisible spirits with powers and wills like their own. It was but a step farther to believe that the spirits of their departed chiefs and kindred should remain hovering round them, and be ready to help or to hinder them in their affairs, according to the way in which they were propitiated. The belief in spirits seems to have been continually growing in strength up to the time when science dawned upon the world; it would appear to have reached its highest pitch in our ancestors of three centuries ago. To them the earth and the atmosphere swarmed with spirits,—spirits of departed men and women, good and evil spirits of other kinds, legions of devils without number. Satan was to them, as to the Apostle Paul, "The prince of the powers of the air," and his emissaries were ever lying in wait to get possession of the souls of poor human beings; always ready to make compacts, especially with the old and the feeble of the weaker sex, whereby supernatural powers should be enjoyed during this life in exchange for their souls in the next.

These were the days when the Church and the clergy were in all their glory; when they levied fierce war against Satan by exorcisms, by torture, by fire and fagot. The atrocities perpetrated at this time in the name of religion make one sick to read of. It was the clergy of these times that made the creeds which now bind the Protestant world,—men who had—many of them—looked on with composure at poor old fellow-creatures perishing at the stake. It is their dictum on the doctrine of eternal damnation which now weighs so heavily on the morals of the clergy of our own time, and makes them so loathe to part with that beneficent dogma. While there was this universal belief in immortality and in disembodied spirits, there was the most deplorable ignorance of everything in this world which it was really of importance to know; the whole attention was centred on the future and spiritual life, to the almost total neglect of life in this world. The habits and dwellings of the people, the streets and lanes of towns and cities, were filthy and wretched beyond description. Pestilences broke out which swept off such large numbers as to make it appear probable that if the power of the Church had not been broken by the dawn of science, Europe in a short space of time would have been depopulated.

It is the part of true wisdom to be content with the constitution of Nature as it really exists, and, instead of looking for a future and unattainable state of existence, to strive earnestly to make the best of this. The whole world is full of sources of happiness, would we but seek for them aright. Nature has not provided man with a bare sustenance only. The organs with which he has been endowed not only serve to guard him against the dangers amidst which he lives. They have besides a sphere of pleasurable activity. The vibrations of the air which strike upon the ear not only make us aware of external movements: they are also capable of being developed into music,—a source of the purest enjoyment. The olfactory nerves, which warn us of the presence of noxious things, convey to us also the delicious fragrance of flowers and herbs. And what a world of beauty and delight is opened to us through the source of sight, time would altogether fail to describe. We are the heirs of all the travail of Nature through thousands of ages. All the modifications of animal structures which she has wrought, all the changes which have been brought about by the continual survival of the fittest and best, have culminated in the constitution of man.

Although, however, there is no evidence for, nor reason to suppose that there is, any life beyond the grave, there is one respect in which we may be said to live hereafter; that is, in the influence of our lives on those who succeed us. The humblest human being that lives can do something, and every day does something, to help or to hinder the cause of truth and right-living in the lives of others. If we were not so absorbed in self-regard, it would be a solemn consideration for us that our unrestrained passions and propensities may be sources of sorrow and suffering to thousands of those who come after us; or, on the contrary, that our firm adherence to the rule of right may cheer the hearts and strengthen the better natures and help the progress of our successors far away into the future ages.

It is a common belief among our Orthodox friends, that our views, however true they may appear to us while in health and life, will altogether fail us when we come face to face with what has been improperly called the king of terrors. They believe that only an abiding trust in the atoning blood of Christ can sustain the human soul in the prospect of the dark valley and shadow of death. Few of them ever examine into the foundations of this belief. Nothing could be more unsatisfactory or contradictory than the account of the origin of death given in the beginning of the Bible. We are there told that God created man in the male sex only; that having discovered something to be wanting he made the female by an afterthought. They were placed in the Garden of Eden without any intimation of mortality, or that they were to increase and multiply. Death was the penalty visited on them for eating the forbidden fruit, and not the original intention of the Creator. So that we are to infer that these two were to constitute the human race. Death and reproduction were caused by sin. So dire was the sin of the original pair that in addition to the curse of having offspring, all their progeny fell under the wrath and curse of God,—a wrath so fierce that it required that all of them, after their lives in this world, should be plunged into a state of torment, from which they could never hope to emerge through all eternity. To rescue a small number from this horrible fate, he sent his Son to suffer and to die, in order that his justice might be satisfied, and that he might rescue the purchased few to dwell with him in heaven forever. The Christian who believes in all this has of all men the greatest reason to fear death. He never can be quite sure that he is among the number of the ransomed; he cannot be sure that death will not be to him the portal to a state of torment too awful to think of; and he knows that the vast majority of his race—including many of his own kindred—are bound for this condition. Such passages of Scripture as "If the righteous scarcely are saved, where shall the sinner and the ungodly appear?" may well fill his soul with uncertainty and alarm when he comes to part with life. And even though he should be among the number of the saved, if there be any sympathy in his nature the thought of the fate of his fellow-creatures would cloud all his thoughts with grief, and make happiness to him impossible. Compared to such a belief, how grand and inspiring is the faith founded on the constitution of Nature. Instead of the eternal perpetuation of evil and suffering, so marked a feature of the Christian faith, we believe that Nature has always been working, is now working, and will continue to work for the ultimate extinction of everything that is bad or imperfect, that everything coöperates for the survival of the fittest and best, and we look forward to the future when knowledge shall cover the whole earth, when men shall live their lives in peace and health and happiness, in conformity with the eternal laws of Nature. To pass from the old superstition with all its horrors into such a faith is to be born again, is like the passage from darkness into light, from death into life.

PROMISED REVIVAL OF SODOM AND GOMORRAH.

It is reported that French capitalists have secured a grant for a railway line from Jaffa to the interior of Palestine, which will open up the Jordan valley and the whole region north of the Suez Canal. In certain contingencies this road might become of great military usefulness, but it appears further that the productive resources of the country are considerable, and, what is more surprising, that the Dead Sea itself can be turned to commercial account. Chief of these at present are the stores of natural combustibles for which that region is noted.

Hitherto the main obstacle to the development of steam traffic in the Levant has been the total absence of combustible material. Not only Egypt, but the shores of Syria and the Red Sea are completely stripped of wood, and the coal imported from the West commands a price ranging from $10 to $24 a ton. Now the masses of asphalt continually thrown up by the Dead Sea attest the presence of vast subterranean layers of fossil vegetable matter, and these signs were not long overlooked by the enterprising men attracted to Suez by the opening of the canal and the movement of commerce in that direction. Recently numerous soundings have been made between Jaffa and the Dead Sea, which, so far, have not disclosed any deposits of coal proper, but, on the other hand, have laid bare inexhaustible beds of lignite.

Of itself, this store of lignite is likely to prove an inestimable gain to the industries and commerce of the Levant; but we should add that the juxtaposition of asphalt in great quantities furnishes the elements of a mixture of lignite and asphaltum in the form of bricks, which is equal in heating capacity to the richest bituminous coal, while its cost on the ground is only $2.50 a ton. It is known that similar bricks, made up of coal-dust and bituminous debris from gas works, are much sought after by French railways, since, besides their heating power, they greatly facilitate stowage, owing to their regular shape. Of course the bitumen of lower Palestine has been known from immemorial times, and was used to impart solidity to the structures of unbaked clay in Assyria and Egypt; but it may be said that the discovery of the subterranean combustible has lifted once for all the curse which has so long rested upon Sodom and Gomorrah, and will transform the wasted shores of the Dead Sea into a focus of industry and a magazine of wealth.—Scientific American.

HYMN TO AMUN-RA.

NEW TRANSLATION FROM THE FRENCH.

[A papyrus lies in the museum of Boulaq at Cairo, which, after being published by the Egyptian official archaeologist, M. Mariette, has been subjected to a profound study by an advocate of Paris, M. Eugène Grébaud, a graduate of the "Ecole des hautes études," and one of the rising school of French Egyptologists, who have felt the impulse of the rare genius of the Vicomte Emmanuel de Rougé, conservator of the Egyptian Gallery of the Louvre. M. Grébaud published in 1873, in the Revue Archéologique, his translation of this remarkable monument of that brilliant literary reformation which seems to have taken place under the Second Ramses of the Nineteenth Dynasty, about 1400 years before Christ. In the following year appeared his elaborate commentary on the first part of the hymn; with a preface giving his new theory of the Sun Worship of the Nile. Referring the reader to this exciting brochure of three hundred pages published by Franck, Rue Richelieu, Paris, 1874, we limit ourselves to a free translation of the hymn itself, which, with all its defects of archaic style and childish fancies, deserves the admiration of Christian souls for its depth of devotion and breadth of sense.—J. P. L., in Christian Register.]

I adore thee, Amun-Ra! O bull of Heliopolis!
O god of gods! Divinity well loved!
Keeping alive the vital heat of life
In every animate being! O thou good!

Homage to thee, O Amun-Ra, thou lord
Of the world's throne, throne of the North and South,
Dwelling in Thebes; all Nature's mighty bull,
At home in fields, stalking with giant tread!
To Kema's owner! Lord of Western lands!
And equal ruler of the Arabian East!
A king in heaven! A prince upon the earth!
Lord of all things! Preserver of all things!

Playing thy rôle unique among the gods!
Fair bull of the herd of Heaven's divinities!
Chief of all gods! Master and lord of Truth!
Sire of the gods! Author of men and beasts!
Ruler of things! Who bringest forth all plants
Nutritious; pastures which feed all beasts!

Thou germ divine, produced by mighty Ptah!
Thou beautiful child of love! The gods behold
Thee, and in prostrate adoration lie.
Thou author of all things on high, below,
Illuminating both earth's hemispheres!

Thou traversest the sky with mien of peace,
King of the South, and king too of the North,
Lord of both regions, Ra, the truthful sun!
Grand is thy power. Thou art Terror's Lord,
Moulding the earth into thine own self-form,
And fate-dispensing more than all the gods.

Lo! at his shining all the gods rejoice.
Adoring crowds give incense in Pa-Ur;
And in Pa-Neser other crowds arise.
He comes from Araby, and all the gods
Love the rich perfume of the break of day.
Prince of the dew, he passes to the West,
And in Tu-Niter shows his glorious face.

Swift to his feet the gods fly prostrate down
To recognize the Master as their own.
O fearful Lord! they cry; O grand in wrath!
Monarch of souls! Owner of diadems!
Granting increase of products to the earth!
Bestower of provision for all life!
To thee be adoration, sire of gods!
Who hast hung the sky and spread abroad the land!

Sound watcher art thou, O Chem-Amun, Lord
Of Time, and author of Eternity!
Master adorable, whose seat is Thebes!
Whose beauteous visage shines with horns of light.

Lord of the Cobra-crown and double plume—
His brow beset with the white diadem—
The serpent Mehen and the serpents Uat
Adorn his front within the sanctuary—
The double crown, the Nemes hood, the casque.
His fair face takes the diadem Atef;
Beloved alike its symbols North and South.
He in his hand the A-mes sceptre holds;
The sceptre Ma-Kés; and the Nocheck flail.

Fair chieftain, rising with white diadem!
Lord of irradiations, making light!
The gods to thee their acclamations give.

He tenders both his hands to them he loves.
His enemies he overthrows with flames.
It is his eye which overthrows his foes;
His eye the dart which pierces the abyss,
Making the Nak snake vomit back its prey.

Homage to thee, O Sun! thou lord of Truth!
Mysterious in thy chapel, Sire of Gods!
Khepru the great creator's in his bark;
His word's emitted, and the gods exist.
Thou, sire of beings intellectual,
Determines for them all life's various plan;
The artisan of their existences,
Defining even their colors, this from that.

He hears the prayer of him who is oppressed.
He's sweet of heart for him who cries to him.
He sets the timid from the audacious free;
Judges the mighty and the unfortunate.

Lord of Intelligence! His word is fact.
The Nile comes down (from Nubia) at his will.
Lord of the Palm (that lovely, gracious tree
Which giveth nourishment to thinking men)
Bestowing movement upon all things light;
E'en in the abyss is active to produce
Delicious things, so that the gods themselves
Take pleasure in the beauties of his Light,
And as they look their hearts grow full of life.

O Sun, invoked in Theban sanctuaries!
O crowning rays in Heliopolis!
O AM! lord god of new-moon festivals!
For thee the moon reserve; her last six days.

Prince paramount, master of all the gods,
Showing himself upon the horizon,
A chieftain of the people in Auqer;
Mysterious more his title than his birth;
For Amun is his sacred, secret name.

Hail, thou inhabitant of Quietness!
Lord of delight; owner of diadems!
Wearing the Urer crown, the double plume!
Fair with the Sesht ribbon round thy brows!
And on thy head the regal bonnet white!

The gods delight to fix their gaze on thee;
Thy brows pressed firmly with the double crown.
Thou art beloved, on-moving through both worlds;
Thou radiant semblance of two human eyes!

The Pdw folk are ravished with thy light;
All creatures swoon beneath thy radiance.
Yet 'tis thy love in the heaven of the South,
And 'tis thy grace in the heaven of the North.
It is thy beauty conquering all hearts,
Thy love compels the world to drop its arms.

Thy beauteous doings paralyze our hands,
And hearts grow faint with wonder seeing thee.

O Form unique, producing everything!
O One and Sole, producing all that is!
Men issue from his eyes; his word makes gods!

Author of pastures where the cattle feed,
And of nutritious plants for human need;
He nourishes the fishes of the flood;
He breathes the breath of life in every egg;
Feeds the winged Repen and the Chemus fowl,
Insects which creep, and insects which do fly,
Bats in their holes, and birds in all the wood.

Hail, artist of the total round of forms!
One and alone, but with a thousand arms!
Who never sleeps while all mankind seeks rest,
Seeking, pursuing still his creatures' good.
Divine Amun, confirming every thing!
Tum and Hor-hut, voiceful, worship thee!
We worship thee because thou dwell'st in us!
Prostrate before thee, we whom thou hast made.

Homage to thee from creatures of all kinds,
And praise be shouted thee in every land;
In the height of heaven, and in the breadth of earth,
And in the depths of waters equally.

Let gods bend low before thy majesty!
Then lift their hands and praise their spirits' sire!
Rejoice in his decrees who them begat,
And thus accost Thee: Come to us in peace!
O sire of sires to the whole race of gods!
Who hung aloft the sky, and spread the earth!
Author of things! Producer of all beings!
Supreme arch-prince of the whole race of gods!
We worship our own souls which thou hast made,
Thine energy productive of ourselves,
With loud acclaim, because thou dwell'st in us.

Homage to thee, Creator Universal!
Lord of the truth, and father of the gods!
Author of men; provider for all beasts;
Cause of all seed, supporting life on earth!

Amun, thou fair-faced bull, beloved in Ap!
So grandly crowned in holy Ha-ben-ben!
Wearing a thousand diadems in On!
Judge of the hostile pair in the Grand Hall!
Head of the host of higher deities!
The One! The only One! There is no other;
No second He in all his temple homes.
And divine dwells in the choir of gods,
Living in truth, all days, both morn and eve,
The eastern Horus.

He has made the earth;
The silver-gold, true metal, by his will.
The mingled fragrant incense and perfume
Of Ani, smallest thou, oh fair of face,
What time thou journeyest west, O Amun-Ra!
Throned on two worlds, but resident in Ap;
Ani, the god residing in his shrine.

The King is one; is all the gods combined;
Numerous his names, none knows their quantity;
Brilliantly blazing in the eastern sky,
And sleeping on the western horizon.
Each morning born anew, he overthrows
His enemies (the shades); Thoth lifts his eyes.
He lays himself in splendor down to rest;
The gods enjoy his beauty; all exult
Who enter in the train of his adorers.

Lord of the bark Sek-ti, and the bark At,
Which bear thee peacefully across the sky,
Thy oarsmen sing with pleasure when they see
The evil one o'erthrown, his members speared,
Devoured with flame, his soul and body parted.
Nak, the vile serpent, now has lost his feet.
The gods are joyful, and the mariners
Of the celestial bark are satisfied;
The city of the Sun is full of joy;
The enemies of Tum are overthrown.

Neftanch, Life-Lady! now thy heart's at rest;
The haters of thy lord are overthrown;
The gods of Chera now are jubilant;
The citizens of Chem prostrate themselves;
They see him mighty in his regency.

Seed of the gods, O Truth, thou lord of Thebes!
By this thy name thou art author of all truth,
Lord of all provender; fecundating plants;
Amun thy name; bull of thy mother, Earth.
Author of men inventing every form!
By this thy name, Tum Chaper, the Creator.

Great Hawk, establishing the feast of Bast;
Fair faced, establishing the feast of Mam!
Symbol of sacred rites, and lord of crowns!
In vain the cobras Wat assail thy face.
The Pdw rush to thee; men turn to thee;
At thy appearance revel heaven and earth.

Homage to thee Ra Amun! on the throne
Of the two worlds high seated. Thebes, thy city,
Loves dearly the appearing of her Sun;
And ends her hymn, like some papyrus old.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 29.

H. A. Dean, $3.10; J. G. Richardson, $3.30; Miss C. G. Tallman, $3.30; Mrs. K. B. Harrington, $3.20; H. F. Badger, $6.65; J. E. Cass, $6.40; Miss Edith E. Dague, $1.50; A. T. Lilly, $18.20; Universalist Publishing House, 60 cents; John Orth, $3.20; Wm. G. Snow, $3.20; G. O. Gale, $3.20; Solomon Cooper, $10; S. P. Simpson, $1; Albert Augell, $3.20; John Bodge, $3.20; A. J. S. Weloe, $3.20; Mrs. B. R. Morgan, $8.40; J. J. Nichols, $3.20; Mrs. H. Watkins, $5.10; Isaac May, $3.20; Dr. D. R. Stone, $1; J. M. McKachnie, $1; Mrs. H. S. Mason, $1.00; Delano Patrick, $3.20; S. B. Watson, $2; Dan'l D. Miller, $3.20; Geo. Lee, $10; D. Giddings, $1; Cash, 10 cents; E. F. Clark, $2.14; Gustav A. Shene, $3.20; Dr. F. Goodyear, $3.20; J. W. Halladay, $1.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 3, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLDOO OFFICE, No. 35 MONROE STREET; J. T. FARR, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. O'BRYEN, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIEUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SURE, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The masterly, statesmanlike, and eloquent address of Judge Hurlbut on "The Liberty of Printing," proving unanswerably the constitutional right of Congress to prohibit the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, and demonstrating to the entire satisfaction of all who will listen to reason that the postal law of 1873 should be amended, but not repealed, has been printed for cheap distribution in the form of an eight-page tract, and can now be had at this office. No better service to the liberal cause at present can be rendered than by circulating everywhere this wise, weighty, and noble plea for private liberty and public morality combined. Price, single copies, 5 cents; five copies, 10 cents; fifteen copies, 25 cents; forty copies, 50 cents; one hundred copies, $1.00.

Erratum.—On page 5, second column, twenty-fourth line, the words "authority is desired" should be corrected to read "authority is derived." This is the only typographical error noticed by the author, and it is of sufficient importance to the main argument to be thus publicly pointed out.

THE NEW YORK Herald of March 22 had the following:—

"About half-past six yesterday morning, the foreman of the jury in the United States Circuit Court charged in the case against De Robigne M. Bennett, indicted for sending an obscene publication through the mail, handed the Deputy Marshal a sealed verdict, and the jury were allowed to go to their homes. At this time, they had been out nearly fifteen hours. At the opening of the court, at eleven o'clock in the morning, there were still in attendance the majority of those who have followed the trial since its opening, and there was every confidence of a disagreement or acquittal. When order was had, Clerk Shields opened and read the verdict, and the finding of guilty was a surprise to the many. The jurors were then polled, and stated that this was their verdict. Mr. Wakeman then took exceptions to the instructions of Judge Benedict allowing a sealed verdict to be given by the jury; also to the delivery and receipt of such a verdict by the officer in charge, the reading of the verdict in court, and the dismissal of the jury until they had rendered their verdict in open court, in the presence of the judge, counsel, and defendant, which were allowed. He then moved for the absolute discharge of the prisoner, on the ground that the indictment was defective. Judge Benedict told the counsel that under the new rule he had three days to file every exception of this character, and Mr. Wakeman availed himself of this privilege. In conclusion, Judge Benedict suspended all further proceedings until the next term of court, opening in May, when argument will be heard on these motions. Bennett afterward gave new bail in the sum of $2,000 to appear when called for. It is stated that at the first ballot after leaving the court-room at four o'clock Thursday afternoon, the jury stood eleven for conviction and one for acquittal. Despite all argument of the eleven, Valentine continued to vote for the acquittal of the prisoner, but seemed to tire of his confinement toward daylight, and at half-past six yesterday morning, when the last ballot was taken, voted for conviction. After leaving the court-room, Mr. Bennett sent out invitations to the newspapers, asking their representatives to meet him in the afternoon, at the Astor House, and discuss 'a matter of interest to the press of the city and country.' To the little meeting thus convened, Mr. Wakeman, brother of Mr. Bennett's counsel, said that every journal in the land should understand that this had not been a fight for the liberty of an individual, but for the rights of literature and the press, and that if the law obtained that extracts might be read from a book and, regardless of their context, be pronounced obscene, then the Bible itself would not be safe. Mr. Wakeman was very indignant that the opinions of eminent scholars, divines, and men of letters, all establishing the purity of Mr. Bennett's pamphlet, had been ruled out of court."

THE FACTS AND THEIR MEANING.

Mr. Wright's article on the next page shows that the friendly writer is under a misapprehension as to the leading facts of the case he discusses, and consequently as to the legitimate inferences from those facts. He evidently supposes—

1. That the National Liberal League, when it was convened at Syracuse, was wholly uncommitted on the question of "repeal vs. reform."
2. That the resolution to postpone "decisive action" to the next Congress left the League still wholly uncommitted on this question.
3. That the signers of the "Card" had ceased to be candidates by its very terms.
4. That it was this "Card" which "split the League."

These suppositions are all erroneous. The facts are these:—

1. The National Liberal League, at its birth in Philadelphia, 1876, emphatically committed itself to the side of "reform" on this very question by adopting Mr. Underwood's resolutions, and, having never rescinded these resolutions, held this position still when it was convened at Syracuse.

2. The vote to postpone "decisive action" on this question to the next Congress was simply a vote not to change the existing status of the League, but to leave the Philadelphia resolutions in full force, unrescinded and unmodified, for another year. To claim that the Syracuse resolution of postponement had, or was intended to have, the effect of rescinding the Philadelphia resolutions would be to make it a falsehood on its very face, and to confess a still worse "breach of faith" than that against which the minority protested. Before the President put the question at Syracuse on this resolution of postponement, he then and there, on the platform, "stated distinctly that he understood this to be a proposition to leave the League for another year exactly as it was left at Philadelphia; that that position was in favor of 'reform' and against 'repeal'; that he himself, with all the rest of the League, had been perfectly satisfied to hold that position for two years, and desired simply that it should not be changed at all; that he could not oppose these resolutions, since they proposed to leave that position wholly unchanged." These statements, made by the President before putting the question, called forth not a word of dissent from the majority, and were supposed by the minority to express the unanimous agreement of both parties as to the meaning of the vote about to be taken. The League was committed to "reform" at Philadelphia; it would have remained so to this day, and no change would have been made until the next Congress, if the majority had honestly fulfilled their agreement.

3. The vote of postponement having left the League exactly where it had always been, in favor of "reform" and against "repeal," the signers of the "Card" found their principles approved by the Syracuse Congress thus far, and therefore remained candidates in strictest accordance with the spirit and letter of the "Card" itself. In the light of the facts just set forth, Mr. Wright's criticism falls to the ground.

It was the subsequent election alone, with the reasons then and there publicly avowed for the change of administration, which changed the position of the League by "decisive action," in violation of the mutual agreement to take no such action. If Mr. Wright had been at Syracuse, and heard the speeches, he could not have been deceived by misinformation as he evidently has been.

4. It was not the "Card" which "split the League." "Card" or no "Card," the result would have been the same. For nearly a year, our uncompromising opposition to "repeal" had been making bitter enemies of the most active repealers; and they determined to capture the next Congress of the National Liberal League, partly to reinforce the "repeal" movement and partly to punish us (as they idly hoped) for opposing it. This combination was ripe long before the Call for the Congress or the "Card" of the Directors was published. For months we had known of its existence, but steadily pursued our way, regardless of it. When, however, the time for the Congress approached, we gave warning of the plot to the liberals in ample season to have secured a different result, but they failed to appreciate the magnitude of the issue. The programme of the plot was carried out just as had been foretold in these columns on September 19. It is a great mistake to suppose that the "Card" caused the "split in the League"; the cause of that split was the long prior and finally successful plot of the repealers to capture the National Liberal League for their own movement, and the fixed resolve of the reformers not to be used for any such unworthy purpose. The "Card" was simply a consequence of this plot. The Directors would have been recreant to their trust, if they had failed to give warning of the situation to their constituency; but they gave it, and on the latter must now rest all responsibility for the result.

Mr. Wright must have been grossly misinformed respecting the facts, or he would not imagine that it was the "Card" which "split the League." That split was threatened long before, when the untenable position of "repeal" was first taken; it was rendered inevitable and incurable, when the repealers plotted to capture and revolutionize the League in the interest of a movement which denies the very existence of national morality.

Without adducing other evidence of this plot, we quote here the written admission of its existence in a letter of Mr. A. L. Rawson, the present Secretary of the National Liberal League, which, as shown by the date, was written two months before the "Card" was published:—

34 BOND ST., NEW YORK, July 19, 1878.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

Sir,—I have meditated for some time writing you on the subject of the discussion that has occupied so much space in THE INDEX and Truth Seeker over the merits of the petition. I have read very little on either side, because it is in my opinion unfortunate for the general cause of liberalism that such differences should be suffered to grow into bitterness in the liberal camp. The war against the common enemy is so much more important. I fear that this very division among liberals was one of the means of defeating the object of the petition, even in securing a modification of what all agree is an unjust law, since it permits designing men to attack the liberty of the press and of opinion under another plea.

There is a strong movement on foot to displace you as leader; and in my estimation this is more unwise and will be more hurtful to the general cause, if allowed to go on, than the quarrel over the petition. If liberals hope to win, they must work together, sacrificing every private interest, feeling, or desire of vengeance even, for the common cause.

I hope to see you at the indignation meeting, Aug. 1. Rest assured, differences settled, you have many warm friends in New York.

Yours,

A. L. RAWSON.

As early, therefore, as July 19, there was "a strong movement on foot" for the very purposes afterwards carried out at Syracuse. To Mr. Rawson's smooth and oily letter we made no reply; for we considered it at the time as instigated by the very "movement" to which it referred, in order to convey a threat of removal from the Presidency of the League, unless we changed our course, and to make an indirect promise of reelection as a reward for coming out in favor of "repeal." Neither the threat nor the bribe had the slightest effect, for they appealed to a personal ambition which did not exist. We continued to oppose "repeal," because we knew that the demand for "repeal," if made by the liberals as a whole, would be the moral and political ruin, not only of the Liberal League movement, but of the liberal cause in general. To the suggestion of reelection on a "repeal" platform we were utterly indifferent; our sole desire was to save the League and its cause from a disgraceful wreck.

That our construction of Mr. Rawson's letter had been perfectly correct was abundantly clear to us at Syracuse. He there threw off the mask, made the chief speech in support of the change of officers, and urged the League to punish us for having "betrayed the liberals" by opposing "repeal"! That was the entire and the only reason offered for a change of officers: namely, that they had opposed "repeal." When Mr. Rawson made his absurd charge that we had "betrayed the liberals," and exclaimed with an impassioned gesture, "And now shall such a man be rewarded for his treachery?" shouts of "No! No!" went up from the repealers all over the hall. Of course we neither made nor desired to make any reply; the opposition and abuse of such men, incurred because we had been faithful to liberty and morality combined, were the most flattering compliment we had ever received.

Doubtless Mr. Wright has never heard a word of all this. If he had been there, he would have seen what the election meant. It meant that the majority of the National Liberal League practically rescinded the Philadelphia resolutions in favor of "reform," violated thereby the agreement just made to take no "decisive action" on that question for another year, and committed the League to "repeal" in the most effective manner possible.

The conflict in the Syracuse Congress was between irreconcilable moral tendencies, forces, and principles; and the worse triumphed. A great victory for the better was won when the minority made their resolute protest, withdrew, and reorganized on the original principles of the League. But this moral conflict is still going on for the mastery of liberalism, its organized movements, and its future destiny. The national government, by repeatedly punishing men for circulating their opinions, is trampling upon liberty; the "repeal" party, by denying all national morality and demanding the abolition of all restrictions upon the use of the mails, whether innocent or criminal, is trampling upon morality; the "reform" party alone, recognizing the obligations of national morality and demanding that freedom shall be maintained without giving license to crime, stands for liberty and morality combined.

In comparison with the transcendent and overshadowing importance of the principles involved in this great issue, all personal considerations must vanish like smoke. We honor Mr. Wright for his great public services; we love him for his private goodness; but our duty is inexorable. The supreme interests of the liberal cause which we are set to serve demand that at least one public exponent of it shall stand inflexibly for reason and right in this conjuncture, undaunted by the delirium which is sweeping over his own party, undeterred by the fierce, bitter, and unscrupulous assaults of opponents, unseduced by the siren-voice of his own private affections, and steadfast in pointing out the one straight path which alone leads to safety for the cause of liberalism. In all other directions ruin lies in wait for it.

Liberty and morality must be maintained in just balance and proportion; organizations, journals, individuals, are nothing in comparison with this necessity. However incredulous or indifferent others may be as to the importance of the public issue now forced, not only upon all liberals, but equally upon the government and upon all the people, we must stand unmoved at our post, and speak the word that is needed, however unwelcome. But we shall not stand alone. The needed word is already heard from other lips, and will yet prevail, if truth is indeed stronger than error.

WHAT DID IT?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Your lady correspondent T., seeming not to distinguish between the National Liberal League and its executive officers for the time being, is puzzled at my statement that the League did not unequivocally commit itself to "repeal" by its change of officers from opponents to advocates of repeal. She wants to know what this means, if it does not mean committing the League to repeal. Of course it means that a majority of the representatives there present were in favor, for some reason or other, of the change of officers which they made; but it is not quite absolutely certain that they all voted to remove all the old officers whom they did remove simply because those officers were opposed to repeal. They had just voted to postpone that question to the next annual meeting. It is difficult for me to see how that vote bound them to reflect the old officers, all or one. It may have been their duty to do it, but I cannot see how it was that vote (to postpone the question) which made it their duty. If each side was in earnest in its opinions on the question referred to the next annual meeting, had it not the right to vote for officers favorable to its own view? Those officers, whatever their opinions might be, could not decide a question unanimously postponed for a year's consideration and decision by the next Congress. If decidedly favorable to repeal themselves, the new officers could no more commit the League to it, in face of the League's resolution to keep the question open, than the old officers could commit it against repeal, if they should be reflected. Now no man can believe more fully or gratefully than I do in the honesty, integrity, and intellectual force of Mr. Abbot, or more sincerely deplore the fact that he and his worthy associates in office were not reflected. Yet I am not able or disposed to question the honesty of those who refused to vote for him and the three other officers who signed the "card" which appeared in THE INDEX of Sept. 26, 1878. That card set forth a platform of three articles, to the greater part of which probably every member of the League would cordially subscribe. But it also included a clause asserting the right of Congress to exclude a certain class of literature from the United States mails, the very question in dispute. The card then proceeded to say:—

"We decline to be candidates for reflection, if the principles of the above platform shall fail to be approved by the National Liberal League at this Congress."

Well, the League had just failed to approve them by referring the question in regard to the United States mails to the next Congress; so Mr. Abbot and his three associates, by their own card, were not candidates. It is for him to show how, after the Congress had just voted against committing itself for one year on the repeal question, the members, and especially the repealers, in view of his card, could reflect the signers without committing it against repeal. Surely the honors are easy. If the reflection of these cardinals would not have nullified the League's unanimous vote, and committed it against repeal, the election of others could not and did not commit it in favor of repeal.

It was this unfortunate card which split the League,—I trust only temporarily. I have no fault to find with Mr. Abbot, who had an undoubted right to take the position he did. But I do not see how he or his friends can blame any member of the League for taking him at his word, as not a candidate for reflection. If he had consulted any competent politician, he would have been informed of the natural, if not inevitable, consequence of that "card." But Mr. Abbot himself is far better than a competent politician. ELIZUR WRIGHT.

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 251 Washington Street, Boston.

Neal Dow is seventy-five.

The first steel pen was made in 1830.

California accepts the veto without a murmur.

Mr. B. F. Underwood is lecturing in Wisconsin.

There are in the United States six million farmers.

Russia has nearly one hundred holidays in a year.

American coal is sold in Switzerland for $10 a ton.

Dr. Döllinger, the famous Catholic leader, is eighty years old.

The Hindus are said to be the most cleanly race on the earth.

Gunpowder is one thousand times denser than the atmosphere.

The Russians in Brazil are returning to their native country.

The largest public building in the world is St. Peter's, Rome.

The church property in Massachusetts is valued at $30,242,800.

The Chinese Sunday-school at Chicago has twenty-six attendants.

"Simon, the stalactite," is what a preacher recently called him.

A bill to authorize cremation has been introduced in the Illinois Legislature.

Four States of the Union have unconditionally abolished capital punishment.

It is stated that the boot-blacks of Liverpool are generally addicted to gambling.

Intemperance tells most severely upon men between thirty and fifty years of age.

Mr. Murray's Golden Rule is a sort of waste-paper basket, filled with a little of everything.

Queen Victoria's crown contains upwards of three thousand precious stones, worth $560,000.

One hundred thousand families settled during the past year on twenty million acres of land.

It is between the ages of twenty-five and thirty years that the most people become insane.

Dr. Beard thinks drunkards are automata. What is the good of such a theory as that?

Scientific dogmas have to be given up as well as religious dogmas. There are no fixed stars.

The Bible says that "no man has seen God." But it does not say that no woman has seen God.

Thirteen fire insurance companies have gone out of existence in the State of New York since 1876.

When Congress votes a pension to Jefferson Davis, it will be time to shoot the American eagle.

The papers have commenced to pray to be rid of Talmage. But, like Banquo's ghost, he will not down.

The old custom of burying suicides at midnight and without religious ceremonies is still followed in England.

Dean Stanley says Americans, more than Englishmen, are inclined to devote large fortunes to public purposes.

Rev. Humphrey Noyes built the Onelda Community out of material which he found in the second chapter of Acts.

Beecher says: "The Baptists go wherever the water is ankle-deep." That would be a little more than a foot deep.

The second prize for a processional car in the Carnival at Rome this season was awarded to a car full of young devils.

A missionary in Alaska says the natives are not savage and brutal, but are a superior class of people. They are eager to learn.

Colonel Thomas A. Scott writes from Egypt that Americans have "the best and greatest country on the face of the earth."

The Jews in Jerusalem eighty years ago did not exceed three hundred. There are now over thirteen thousand in the once holy city.

The tomato is a native of South America; the onion came from India; the bean from Egypt; and the pea was found in the West Indies.

The last number of the Princeton Review contains a very able discourse by Rev. Phillips Brooks, on "The Pulpit and Popular Scepticism."

The Philadelphia medical and dental colleges have turned out five hundred and sixty-two graduates this spring, against six hundred and sixteen in 1878.

Medical science is constantly advancing. An apparently dying man has been restored to life by injecting milk, warm from the cow, into his veins.

It is stated that Garibaldi has lost influence with the radical Republicans of Italy on account of his acceptance of a pension from the Italian government.

Thirty thousand people attended the communistic celebration in Chicago, on the evening of March 23. Over three thousand kegs of beer were drunk during the night.

Some of the modern prophets venture to assert that France will be Protestant within forty years. Then we can count on its being rationalistic within eighty years.

Prof. Denton claims that a piece of stone taken from the Mount of Olives and laid on the forehead of a sensitive person enabled her to describe Jerusalem at the time of Jesus.

New York has passed a bill to repress vagabonds, which means to drive them somewhere else. It is evident that the tramps "must go"—somewhere. But nobody wants them.

Mr. Moody thinks that "saying the Lord's Prayer without feeling and meaning it is as bad as swearing." Either swearing or saying the Lord's Prayer is wholly unnecessary and meaningless.

Another invention in telegraphy is reported. A writer writes at one end of the wire and a pen marks at the other. The apparatus is shortly to be made public before the Society of Telegraph Engineers.

Catholic missionaries have succeeded better in China than have Protestant missionaries. They have been abler men, and have shown more penetration in the study of the Chinese character and habits.

The Orthodox have tired of Col. Ingersoll, and now the Unitarians have commenced to demolish him. Rev. J. T. Sunderland offers an adverse opinion of Col. Ingersoll's moral and religious influence.

The opportunity to attend morning prayers at St. John's Chapel during Lent, instead of the College Chapel, has not been improved by Harvard students. Only fourteen have taken advantage of the privilege.

China has ten thousand colleges, her libraries outnumber ours ten to one; there is hardly a Chinaman who cannot read and write; in good manners, China leads the world. What strange evidences of heathenism are these!

Rev. Mr. Talmage undertook to figure out in a recent discourse what heaven had cost. It was bought with a price, but he did not reduce it to dollars and cents; and so we refer all who are anxious to know its cost to his sermon of March 23.

Mr. Anthony Trollope, at a recent meeting in London to consider the political advancement of women, said he thought "the political privileges of the world must go with the power of the world, and the power of the world must go with the purse."

The Investigator records the exposure of the celebrated spiritual medium, Mrs. Huntton, at Beebe

Plain, Canada. When the spirit of the "Big Indian" appeared, it was seized, and proved to be Mrs. Huntton herself. Spiritualism needs to sift its mediums.

The Free Christian Church of Italy has twenty-seven churches, twenty-five hundred communicants, three thousand children in its day-schools and seven thousand in its Sunday-schools, nineteen ministers, and twelve evangelists. Its property is entirely free from debt.

John Henry Newman—the possible cardinal—possesses a gaunt, emaciated figure, a sharp and eagle face, a cold, meditative eye. As an orator his manner is constrained and awkward. He delivered his sermons when at Oxford without change in the inflection of his voice, and with no action or gesture.

Charlestown claims a man as President of one of her temperance leagues who professes to have drunk more liquor than any other man in Charlestown. This is a high qualification for his position, and one which peculiarly fits him to talk upon the subject of temperance, and to direct the youth of the city in right paths.

Devlin, who was recently hung at Cambridge, indulged in considerable gaiety just previous to his execution. Besides sleeping as soundly as innocence, and eating with the relish of a good appetite and a good conscience, he actually sung merry songs and danced a jig or two to show his indifference to his approaching fate.

The world can easily twist an action into a law or a man into a God, when profit hangs on the other end. The authority of half man's actions to-day depends upon some accident or fraud of the past. Man wants a little of the fabulous yet in his meat and drink. He loves to think that Jesus is present when he drinks his wine and eats his bit of bread, although it is a mystery.

Scribner's Monthly for April contains a paper on the great inventor, John Ericsson, giving an account of the man and his inventions; an article on the actors and actresses of New York; an account of Henry Bergh and his work; a discourse on the tendency of modern thought, as seen in Romanism and Rationalism; besides poems by half a dozen well-known writers, and the usual allotment of fiction.

New Hampshire has delegated to women the right to vote at school meetings. The first experiment of woman exercising her right to the ballot was not wholly without good results. There was less boisterousness and profanity, which are the usual concomitants of a New Hampshire town meeting. We regret to see that the Massachusetts Legislature voted to lay the bill, allowing women to vote on school matters in this State, on the table.

Rev. Henry Morgan says: "Liberalism, and that only, is the cause of Boston's religious decline. This has broken down the Sabbath, discarded the Bible, paralyzed the arm of the law, opened Sunday theatres, concerts, excursions, emptied the churches, killed the public conscience, and sowed the seeds of distrust." As the larger part of what Mr. Morgan charges upon liberalism is for the public good, we cannot make any very serious criticism of his remarks.

Christian ministers are working hard to tell what the "Gospel of Christ has to offer to workingmen." It is this: "Come unto me and I will give you rest." But workingmen have had rest enough, and are ready to hear the gospel which says: "Come unto me and I will give you work." To find the inadequacy of Christianity, confront it with any universal want or demand. It is a good thing to preach, but it does not touch the world to-day in any point where it heals and helps.

There are to-day in the entire country three thousand six hundred and eighty-two public libraries, containing no less than twelve million volumes. This vast educational system has grown from that little circulating library which Benjamin Franklin started in the house of Mr. Grace one hundred and fifty years ago. No better precedent was ever planted in the American mind, nor one that has borne better fruit. Libraries are both schools and churches. They make teachers almost unnecessary and preachers entirely superfluous.

A short time ago the New Testament story was enacted at the Grand Opera House in San Francisco. The characters of Jesus Christ, Pontius Pilate, Joseph, Judas Iscariot, Peter, the Virgin Mary, and other actors in the drama, were represented on the stage. The press and pulpit tried to prevent the play from being performed, and partially succeeded,—the manager apologizing for not producing the last four scenes of the play, saying he was obliged to defer to the antagonistic sentiment of the public. A good audience was in attendance.

DISCONTENTED pauper (on the Christmas dinner): "Well, this is the wust Chris'mas dinner as ever we 'ad since I've been in the 'ouse! I thinks as when we 'as a dinner party the master ought to ax us whether we likes it well done and whether we takes fat, and not cut the vittles and show! it on our plates anyhow!"—Punch.

IN THE struggle of life with the facts of existence, science is a bringer of aid; in the struggle of the soul with the mystery of existence, science is a bringer of light.—G. H. Lewes.

Communications.

"A QUESTION FOR MATERIALISTS."

EDITOR INDEX:

Dear Sir,—In your issue of March 20, I notice an article under the above heading by Mr. H. Clay Neville, of Ozark, Mo., wherein he makes some reflections on the "Cause of life," and offers some objections to what he considers "the materialistic theory of evolution."

Although not a professed "disciple of materialism," yet perhaps I may be allowed a word. I know not whether Mr. Neville accepts the theory of the gradual evolution of the vegetable and animal kingdom from what Prof. Huxley calls the "Physical Basis of Life"; but if he does, then the only point that asks for explanation is: How is what we are accustomed to call "inorganic matter" changed into living protoplasm?

Haeckel's Moneres, of which more than a dozen different species have been described, are composed of simple protoplasm. In the language of that illustrious naturalist, "Their whole body, in the fully-developed and reproductive condition, consists of nothing but a little mass of structureless protoplasm, whose changing, variable processes all at once discharge the various life-functions,—movement, sensation, transmutation of matter, nutrition, growth, and reproduction. Morphologically considered, the body of a Moneres is as simple as an inorganic crystal. We cannot distinguish in it separate parts; or, rather, each part is equivalent to each other. . . . The creature is at all events, from the anatomical point of view, perfectly simple; an organism without organs. It proves incontrovertibly that life does not depend on the coöperation of different organs, but on a certain chemico-physical constitution of amorphous matter,—on that albuminous substance which we call sarcoid or protoplasm, a nitro-carbon compound in the semi fluid state."

When the two gases, oxygen and hydrogen, unite chemically, the result is water, a substance possessed of properties very different from the properties of the two gases that unite to produce it. This is the case throughout the whole field of chemistry, both organic and inorganic. This being the case, is it any less scientific to speak of the properties of protoplasm than to speak of the properties of water or alcohol or sugar, or any other chemical compound? May not that peculiar manifestation which men have named life be simply a property of protoplasm, just as sweetness or a crystalline structure are properties of sugar? We may not know the ultimate cause in either case, but why should we call in an extra-natural agency to account for the properties of protoplasm, while we are perfectly satisfied to leave the properties of other substances within the limits of the natural?

Michael Foster, M.D., F.R.S., in the introduction to his Text-Book of Physiology, discusses at length the following properties of protoplasm: "1. It is contractile. 2. It is irritable and automatic. 3. It is receptive and assimilative. 4. It is metabolic and secretory. 5. It is respiratory. 6. It is reproductive. Such are the fundamental vital qualities of the protoplasm of an amoeba; all the facts of the life of an amoeba are manifestations of these protoplasmic qualities in varied sequence and subordination. The higher animals, we learn from morphological studies, are in reality groups of amoebae peculiarly associated together. All the physiological phenomena of the higher animals are similarly the results of these fundamental qualities of protoplasm peculiarly associated together. The dominant principle of this association is the physiological division of labor corresponding to the morphological differentiation of structure."

Dr. Edmond Montgomery, in an elaborate article on "Monera and the Problem of Life," speaks as follows, in discussing the contraction and expansion of living protoplasm: "Is it a specifically vital force which executes the contraction of motility? Or is it a molecular activity of a known kind which gives rise to vital motion? Fortunately our monera give us plain information upon this point. The living substance contracts because it suffers decomposition, as can be directly witnessed."

He then shows that it is chemical composition that causes expansion, and concludes as follows: "This is shown on the one hand by the products of decomposition being separated and eliminated under our view, and on the other hand by the combining substances being brought together, and effecting their union during inspection. We have no occasion, then, to appeal to the intervention of any specific force in order to understand motility; that is, to understand it in the same manner as we understand other natural processes not belonging to vitality. We have evidently only a display of specific chemistry. But, then, chemistry is specific all through, down to  $H_2O$ ,  $CO_2$  and  $NH_3$ —and who knows how much further?"

And again: "And, now, what has become of this most vexed problem of problems—the origin of life? Is not protoplasm a chemical compound like other substances, merely varying from them in its degree of molecular complexity? . . . Do we greatly concern ourselves about the origin of  $MgO$ ,  $SO_3$  +  $7H_2O$ , or any other mineral substance? Why, then, should the origin of some combination of C, H, N, O be made a question of the life and death of our principal philosophies? Has it actually come to this, that the scientific foundation of our creed rests on the decision whether  $COO$  is or was once changed into  $CHO$  by natural or supernatural means, and this when there is plenty of H about in our world? . . .  $COO$  is indisputably an inorganic compound.

$CHO$  is indisputably an organic compound. This designates accurately the actual depth of the gulf existing between organic and inorganic nature."

It will be well worth the while of any one who is interested in this question to study carefully the articles from which I have quoted.

Huxley's "Physical Basis of Life" can be found in his volume of Lay Sermons and Reviews. Haeckel's "Moneres" are discussed in his Generelle Morphologie, Vol. I., p. 133, in his Natural History of Creation, and in his Anthropogenie, third edition, p. 414. See also an able article in the Popular Science Monthly, Vol. XI., p. 841. Dr. Montgomery's "Monera, and the Problem of Life" can be found in the Popular Science Monthly, Vol. XIII., p. 455-563-577.

If Mr. Neville will carefully study the articles named above, he may conclude that the chasm "between the stone which a mason dresses for a place in a building and the mind of the designing architect" is pretty well bridged.

Most respectfully,

C. J. BUELL.

ROSENDALE, N. Y., March 22, 1879.

"THE IMPEACHMENT OF CHRISTIANITY."

MARATHON, Wis., Jan. 30, 1879.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT:

Honorable Sir,—I have just read over your tract on "The Impeachment of Christianity"; and you will allow me to say I regard your subject thus named far too large for the few words you have allowed yourself to use in its elucidation.

As I think, you should at least have made mention of how "Christianity had done good," and what the good, if any, it had done; and also what good, if any, it is yet doing. Christianity, as I think, was first propagated by the oral testimony of the immediate living disciples of Jesus. They spoke to the people of the Christ, his doctrine, his precepts, his life, and personal manners, his faithfulness as a reprover of evil-doers, and of his kindness as a tried friend, and also of the importance of obeying his precepts and imitating his examples. Those who obeyed these teachings were by so doing made suffering outcasts in the communities in which they lived. They lived and suffered in hope, and often died in triumph, in sight of their persecutors; and thus the veritable heroism displayed justly advanced their persecuted cause.

Their dispersions spread their thus living cause everywhere; and though everywhere killed it yet would not die. By these faithful, persecuted men a book of remembrance was written, commonly called the New Testament or covenant, which, joined to the old or legal and prophetic history of Judaism, has become what is known in common as the Bible, which the early teachers of Christianity declared true, and to be the rule, and the only sufficient rule, both of the faith and practice of all mankind. Soon selfish, artful, interested persons, whom the people had come to acknowledge as priests of this same profession, found themselves unable to abide its requirements; hence the suppression of the Bible from the hands of the common people, and the claim by them of being its sole exponents and oral teachers, and the assurance among the commoners of its importance only as taught by themselves, all home understanding being by them discarded. A minority among the people rejected this darkness, thus generally made to be felt. And all along the line of the Dark Ages a hated, persecuted minority carefully preserved the true word and testimony of the Scriptures themselves, and hence they have been kept mainly uncorrupted to the present hour.

I need not stay here to prove a sentiment that sound-thinking minds invariably admit; namely, that civilization is never advanced except as some generally-admitted sentiment holds a majority of the minds of a people, where civilization to any extent at present exists. Hence the sentiment that the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments are the rule, and the only sufficient rule, both of the faith and practice of all mankind, on which the early Christians insisted, naturally became that central sentiment, and thus advanced the civilization of all parts, coming under the influence of a common Christianity. The Scriptures teach central honesty if they teach anything, inasmuch as they enjoin: "As ye would that men should do to you, so do ye to them likewise." By an enlightened observance of this precept, not a man, woman, or child on earth could possibly be dishonest. Not less is it true that by an enlightened obedience to the first precept of the old dispensation, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself," no person could possibly be dishonest or unlovely.

Again, those Scriptures say: "The love of money is the root of all evil." Again, you should not be unmindful that "this same love of money is the mighty mainspring of your active enterprise, that fits men for attention to objects of honorable ambition; on which the progress of society depends." It should be in your mind a truth, as it is a fact everywhere. The gold god of this world has not in him or out of him one moral restraint; he will bring no agent to account for his doings. Hence a money or cash gospel (so much preach for so much pay) prevails throughout Christendom, in place of a life gospel without money and without price, as taught in the Bible.

A cash gospel may conduct its followers safely to their last breath; a life gospel promises, true or false, to its followers a glorious immortality. Your missiles should have been aimed at the cash gospel, not at the true.

The notions you may fancy you have in yourself superior to those taught in the Bible may be satisfactory to yourself; but, as they are not general, therefore, however good or great, they are not civilizing; and as you diminish among the masses of mankind general and central ideas, so you are (perhaps unconsciously) fitting human society for universal anarchy, rather than for advanced civilization.

You should have fought the selfish, artful, interested mockers of Christianity, who have assumed its name only that they may use the influence of that honest name in order more effectually to advance their own nefarious schemes. No counterfeit could ever gain headway among mankind, if there were not among men a pure coin. I think your definition of Christianity is manifestly wrong. Instead of its being "the great system of faith and practice which is organized in the Christian Church," it is the great system of faith and practice which the nominal Christian, in early and later ages, more or less adopted in order to advance more or less his own wise or unwise ends. Hence, really, instead of manifesting to the world a pure Christianity, it has, both as a Papal and Protestant Church, manifested an apostasy under the name of Christianity. Hence these organizations, first and last, have no real power against your well-directed attacks. Yourself, as I think, are only defective in aim and definition. Shoot at the nominal Church, at the apostasy, but let a broad difference ever be preserved between that and Christianity.

Subject to your correction, allow me to define Christianity: "Christianity consists in the honest, faithful, earnest manner of the living persons who obey the precepts and follow the examples of Jesus the Christ, as set forth in the New Testament, and as harmonized with the law and the prophets of the Old Testament of the Jews."

Jesus said (John xvi., 2): "Yea the time cometh that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service." In fulfillment of this saying, millions of men and women, who loved the good and the true better than they loved life, at loss of truth and goodness have been sacrificed. Love of money impelled the killing in the name of Jesus, to do God (as they said) a service. But does any one think this killing was Christianity? It was done in the Church, done in the name of Christianity, not for love of God but for love of money. As the apostasy has prevailed, men, Papal and Protestant, have held the notion that their services, their propagandism, bring God in debt to the Church. In fighting this foolery, you have my best wishes and my hope of your continued success. With high regards, yours,

L. D. TANNER.

LABOR IS KING.

"When a man has no design but to speak the truth, he may say a great deal in a narrow compass"; but in considering so complex a question as that of Money, in the space that can be allotted to him in THE INDEX, he must assert some things which he cannot stop to prove. But he will not assert the incompetency of those who take a different view from his own, unless he can prove it.

Of course by value we mean the value in exchange; and the equitable measure of equivalency in exchange is the labor cost of producing the articles exchanged. Equal labor for equal labor, is the law of equity. The labor cost determines the exchangeable value of gold and silver bullion, as well as that of all other articles produced by labor.

But gold is that article of merchandise for which there is the most universal demand; and as the supply is naturally limited, its value in open market more nearly approximates its labor cost, or is less affected by fluctuations of supply and demand, than that of other products of labor. For this reason, gold has gradually come to be selected as the standard of value by the most important commercial nations.

The question is unfortunately complicated from the fact that on account of the supposed steadiness of its cost, and for other good reasons, gold is used as coin money in addition to its use as a standard. As money it performs functions which it cannot do as bullion, and has on that account a slightly increased value; but not much, since nothing is charged by governments for coining it. But its use as a standard grows out of its value as gold, and not at all from its use as money.

Of course we cannot have money without having a unit, which in this country is called a dollar. We cannot say dollar, or think of it intelligently, without referring it to a definite something, and that something is a gold coin of a known weight and fineness, which is believed by the best thinkers to be the best approximate representation of a definite amount of labor that can be found. To use the word dollar without referring it to some definite standard of value is to talk nonsense; a dollar with no standard by which to determine its value would not exchange for hats or anything else.

No government has ever been able by law to determine and fix the purchasing power of any dollar; that is determined by natural laws which no government created and none can annul. It is true that a government may make token coins of silver or copper or other metal which will circulate for small change at a nominal value greater than their bullion value, and in fact with no reference to that, simply for the convenience they afford. But let the attempt be made to constitute such money legal tender, or to have it used in unlimited quantities, and it will be found that it will buy no more as money than its value in the open market as bullion. A government which buys silver bullion at eighty-five cents, and coins it into a dollar with which it pays one hundred cents, commits a very mean swindle.

No doubt a good theoretic argument can be made in favor of bi-metalism; but the most prominent and esteemed advocates of that theory frankly admit that no country alone, certainly not the United States, can sustain the double standard without the help of other countries, and especially without the help of England. That help, there is no prospect of ever getting. In fact, gold has always been the practical standard in this country, and the attempt to maintain both metals (if successful) would result in silver, now a depreciated metal, becoming the single standard.

I never said or intimated that the price of gold determined its value; what I said was that the price of silver bullion in gold coin determined its value, that being the only practical way of measuring its value in exchange for hats, wheat, etc., etc. It may be impossible to prove that the cost of producing silver has diminished, but I believe it has; and certainly a given quantity of it can be bought for less labor than formerly. "A decline of all things, as measured by a unit of labor, is in the line of a true progress"; that is to say, that progress consists in increasing the productiveness of labor. And in proportion as labor produces more, more of the products remain in the hands of the laborer.

But we are still suffering from an abnormal production stimulated by the greenback inflation and the unhealthy demand caused by the war,—abnormal because greater than can be distributed under our present system. What is needed is to improve our system of distribution, and not to attempt by legislation to inflate the value of silver against the laws of production and exchange.

We have practically reached firm ground, where our standard (although not scientifically perfect) is the same as that of the great commercial nations with whom we trade. Let us not abandon this hard-won vantage-ground, but let us not forget that our currency must continue to be, as it always has been, mainly "paper." The best use we can make of gold is as a standard and as that kind of merchandise which all the world is glad to accept as legal tender for the settlement of balances. The best use we can make of silver is for subsidiary coins. For the rest, a paper currency as good as gold is far better for us than gold coin would be.

F. S. C.

STARVATION.

Men are not working for what they need to eat and drink, but for what they do not need; and the money which should make the laborer independent goes in too many cases to make himself poor and miserable, and to swell the wealth of the rich. Men must learn how little they can get along with. Do not understand that we believe that the working-man ought to live on "kail and potatoes." The men who work ought to have what is good to eat and drink. I do not have much faith in emptiness, and a man behaves better and works better for being well fed. An empty saint is not so good as a full one. But many could have better food and better clothes for themselves and their families, if they did not spend so much money for needless stimulants. Vice imposes a greater tax on labor in every country than does government. We are different beings in want from what we are in plenty. To us who have enough to eat, this question of labor does not assume the importance it does with those to whom hunger is a constant reality and starvation a possibility. There is a wide difference between having all of our wants supplied and supplying them. They who have never known what it is to hunger cannot comprehend how much human beings can suffer. They declare with virtuous indignation that they would starve rather than beg or steal. It is only the power of irresistible necessity that tells us what we will do. Begging and stealing are not worse deeds in the eyes of humanity than is feasting when others are starving. Where justice is not a pleasure, it should be made an obligation. We cannot believe that men have the moral right to hold and enjoy the exclusive privileges of millions of dollars, when their brother-men have no means to obtain a dinner but by asking for it at a stranger's door. This is a hard task for a brave, though a hungry, man to do. Do we imagine that, because men have no money, they have no feelings, no self respect, no manliness; because they have rags upon their bodies, that they have none of that pride of human nature that hates to beg where it is able and willing to work? To beg or to starve is a sad, hard alternative, and makes crimes which laws cannot deal with. The following paragraph, taken from a New York paper of a recent date, indicates a chapter in our country's history which is being written faster than most people suppose: "A poorly-dressed man knocked at the door of a house on East Forty-second Street, yesterday afternoon, and asked for something to eat. He was refused. He turned away crying, and soon after fell dead in the street from starvation." Now who killed that man? You will say it is not a crime to refuse to feed every one that asks for food. That is true; but is it a crime to ask for bread when man cannot get work? Let a robin alight beside our door, and crumbs will be scattered to keep it from death; let a dog come into our yard, and he is honored with a bone and a crust. Let a man ask for bread, we give him a stone; let him ask for shelter, we point to the street. To the hunger of the brute, we open our hands. Shall we shut them to the famishing of men? A piece of bread is not much to give, and a beggar is cheaper than a thief. You will say, If a man steals, the law will deal with him; but if a little charity will save man from stealing, is it not better to exercise it? We are told that tramps are a bad class. Perhaps tramping has made them so. There is one thing certain: this hungry class has to be dealt with. The question is, How shall we deal with it? People today are not willing to lie down and starve to keep the peace. Man has the right to live, and, when hunger becomes too hard to be borne, it cries out: "Peace if possible, bread at any price." When men forget law, property, country, and remember only themselves, we have a reign of terror. The worst revolution is led by starvation. When men fight for bread, all distinctions are forgotten and the whole world is levelled. When the "railroad riots" threatened the safety of our cities and towns, men were asked, "Would you strike the hand that feeds you?" "No!" replied the men, "we would strike the hand that starves us." We think that the American people have learned the lesson of "strikes." They stand for a protest against wrong, but they generally end in regret. The strike for liberty, for human rights, for justice, the world need not fear; but the strike against honest labor we do need to fear.

L. K. WASHBURN.

PURCELL.

One of the noticeable phenomena of the flush greenback times was the gigantic building operations of the Roman Catholic clergy. Costly cathedrals and episcopal palaces were the order of the day. The Roman Catholic masses were poor, but work was plentiful and wages were high. Instead of being allowed to build houses for themselves, they were made to contribute the spare moly of their earnings to ecclesiastical purposes; although, large as these contributions must have been, they did not account for the enormous means which were wielded by their clergy.

But the hard times which have been upon us since 1873 have unveiled the mystery. Leading Catholic prelates and their priests have added to their sacred functions the business of bankers. They have become savings institutions. The superstitious reverence of their flocks, which is diligently cultivated and encouraged, has given them unlimited control of their superfluous means, which they have unhesitatingly invested in property which can yield no income. The day of restitution has come, as it was sure to come, and the holy trustees are found bankrupt. In the impolite language of criminal jurisprudence, they are embezzlers. The Archbishop of Cincinnati is not alone. He is only the most conspicuous example, as the public will find out in the course of the developments which are coming.

Many pillars of Protestantism have been undermined by financial temptations, and fallen. An air of sanctity and an ostentatious profession of religion in all creeds are open sesame to the confidence of the average public. The leading Catholic prelates have outgrown our republican institutions rapidly. They add to their sounding titles the names of our leading cities and states. In fact, they have assumed the airs and state of royalty. This bubble is sure to be pricked, and the wind let out of it. The Purcell defalcation with its enormous proportions is an eye-opener even for the most stupid and bigoted fanatics of Romanism. But the prelates are, after all, hardly to be blamed. They are courted by our demagogues of the democratic persuasion; they are idolized by their own people, who receive them on their return from occasional visits to Rome, with torchlight processions, and they are otherwise pampered as if they were more than men. What wonder that their heads have been turned by all this adulation and servility? The logic of events will set everything right in the long run. I have said that our Catholic prelates have outgrown republican institutions. So have our great railroads done, our manufacturers, presidents of life insurance companies, and other needlessly rich people. The day is fast approaching when the aggrandizement of individuals at the expense of the public will not be permitted. No man is worth a salary of five thousand dollars per annum. Where individuals are pampered and enormously enriched, the rest of the community has to suffer humiliation to meet the expense. Look at the social fabrics of West European countries to-day. In the light of reason they are abominations. A large fraction of the population of rich England are tramps, in order that a few dukes and capitalists may own all the land.

B. W. BALL.

OBEDIENCE TO NATURE.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., Feb. 28, 1879.

EDITOR INDEX:

Sir,—I am much pleased with THE INDEX generally, and particularly with your definition of religion as the effort of humanity to perfect itself. To my mind, the chief purpose of the Creator, as far as our present life is concerned, is not physical and mental ease, rest, and quietude, but mental and moral development. I believe, as a mass, men are earnestly seeking their happiness; they fall through ignorance. They do not perceive that their suffering and discomfort are the result of the constant violation of the inexorable, unchangeable physical and moral laws, or that only as they study, observe, and live in harmony with them can they be comfortable or happy. The German proverb says: "Through suffering cometh knowledge"; and the knowledge thus obtained will enable us to avoid future violation of law, and suffering from like cause. Thus knowledge becomes the saviour of mankind, and pain and suffering incentives to study and investigation of the causes of our affliction. I think the physical laws of life are vastly more difficult to comprehend than the moral, and that physical or material science and knowledge is more needed than any new moral precepts. But we should never violate either. Great is the reward of obedience—fearful the consequences of violation.

W. W. TUCKER.

A WESTERN paper gives this little bit of back-wood gossip between parent and child: "Is the howling of a dog always followed by a death?" asked a little girl of her father. "Not always, my dear; sometimes the man that shoots at the dog misses him," was the parent's reply.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 8 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1873.

To THE INDEX ASSOC., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.

Mrs. E. D. OHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Mrs. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

J. L. STODDARD, Boston.

ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.

O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.

W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.

BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 90 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. WASON, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Oheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Oella Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesab Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wason.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it, by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,"—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna O. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.

Mrs. E. D. OHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Mrs. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

J. L. STODDARD, Boston.

ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.

C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.

W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.

BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES:

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	5.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.35
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.00
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 1 vol.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	3.25
The World-Priest.....	3.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	5.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	2.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	3.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	5.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.50
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COORELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions, by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Meeson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	1.50
The Descent of Man. 3 vols.....	4.50
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESOATES (HENRI). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELLIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 3 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portraits.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.25
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stehr. 3 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	3.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 5 vols.....	5.00
GALTON (FRANCOIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 3 vols. Per vol.....	1.35
Elective Affinities.....	1.35
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 3 vols.....	5.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. E.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures. 1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	15.50
HUMPHS (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mutilations of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeltons.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mosses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.25
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.50
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Feeds. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Joseph F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	13.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities. Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LEOKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES'S Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	5.00
LEWES (G. E.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 1 vol.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	6.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	3.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Selection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Stars.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.00
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
On the Science of Language. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCOIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.35
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	2.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLIV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc., with 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Universe of Heaven.....	1.50
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
ROHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	1.50
Universal Progress.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The same—Book Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	3.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 5 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair. The Newcomes. Adventures of Philip. Pendennis. The Virginians. Edmund, and Love the Widower. Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	1.50
The Maine Woods.....	1.50
Cape Cod.....	1.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	1.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.35
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.50
Electricity as a Mode of Motion.....	1.50
On Sound.....	1.50
Radiant Heat.....	1.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TITTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sting and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	1.50
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	1.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Banisterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	1.50
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	4.50
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
Wo Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

331 Washington St., Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

M. J. SAVAGE'S NEW NOVEL, Bluffton,

Describing in a very interesting way the processes of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical. 12mo. Price $1.50.

Also, by the same author,

The Religion of Evolution:

"An exposition of religion in the light of the most advanced science. A brave and reverent thinker."—London Inquirer. Price $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

A FINE CHANCE TO CLUB.

We have made arrangements with the respective publishers to club THE INDEX with the following first-class magazines, for a year, at the astonishingly low rates annexed:—

Fortnightly Review.....$5.50 instead of $8.50
North American Review.....5.75 " " "
Popular Science Monthly.....6.00 " " "

To the subscriber, this is equivalent to getting one of these leading periodicals at the usual rate, $5.00, and THE INDEX besides at only $0.50, $0.75, or $1.00. The offer is necessarily confined to names not now on our mail list, and is made solely to increase the circulation of THE INDEX, whose friends will find it a great aid in kindly seconding our efforts to this end. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

UNITY.

A FORTNIGHTLY ORGAN OF

Freedom, Fellowship, and Character in Religion.

Editor.—H. M. SIMMONS. Publishing Committee.—ROBERT COLLYER, J. L. JONES, O. W. WENDT, J. C. LEARNED, W. C. GARNETT.

Vol. III., beginning March 1, 1879, will contain Robert Collyer's "Table Talk"; two series of articles on "The Liberal Preachers of America out of the Pulpit" (our Poets and Essayists), and "The Growth of Doctrine, or the Old-New Creed"; Unity Sunday-school Lessons, etc.

Price $1.50 a year. Clubs of 10 at $1.25.

Room 57, 75 MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

THE SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has special articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
94 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. BANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Right Hon. J. Lubbock, Prof. Clifford,
Lionel A. Trollope, Author of Supernatural Religion,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Lealie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?

11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamous Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.

23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidence for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Sent to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 12 and 20, 1878.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1873, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuyper, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament (in preparation). Price $2.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 204 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 233 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 268 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Barclay, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.25.

THE GHOSTS: Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. B. G. Ingersoll (his latest lectures). 232 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 234 pages. Price $1.25.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.00.

"By far the best edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half calf, $5.00. Will be ready March 30.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

"No book published in the world at any time or in any age has had the influence and effect on the thinking part of the community as this work. It has done more to open the eyes of the ignorant and credulous, and sweep away the cobwebs of dogma and superstition than any other book. It no doubt has a strong rival in Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom, but the books are of altogether a different class. Both are far ahead of anything else of the kind published. They are a library in themselves. A study of these two books will give the opponent of dogmatic Christianity a great advantage in discussion. Every point is carefully and minutely investigated, and stripped of any rotten accretions. The most devout and sincere Christian can find nothing but which is mainly and respectably argued and free from offensiveness, which is not often the case in books of this nature."—London Times.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WESTERN LECTURES

MRS. CLARA NEYMANN intends to go West, on a lecture tour, in February and March, and would like to make additional engagements to lecture on social and free-religious themes, whether in the English or German language. Please address her for particulars at 97 Maiden Lane, New York.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried.
E. C. WALKER.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE

OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 150. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters of Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 34 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 25, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. ... It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Edin's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublime lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 24, 1879.

WHOLE NO. 487.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatharian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

M. RENAN, the pestilent radical who wrote the biography of Jesus as if he had been only a man, not a God, has been at last received into the French Academy—the highest literary distinction to be won in that country.

DEAN STANLEY, in his new book of Addresses and Sermons, shows how hard it is for the most liberal Christian to drop the impossible claim of Christianity to be "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth": "By Liberal Theology I mean a theology which, whilst comprehending all the wholesome elements of thought at work in the world, yet holds that the Christian belief is large enough to contain them; which insists not on the ceremonial, the dogmatic, or the portentous, but on the moral side of religion; which insists on the spirit, not on the letter; on the meaning, not on the words; on the progressive, not on the stationary character of Christianity."

THE MISCHIEF done by the late anti-Chinese agitation is beginning to reveal itself: "The passage of the anti-Chinese bill by the American Congress and its subsequent veto attracts great attention in China. The native newspapers in Hong Kong and Shanghai, especially the former, are extremely bitter against the proposed measure, claim the protection guaranteed by the treaty, and draw a picture of the future relations of the two countries, and the exclusion of Americans from Chinese soil. They exaggerate the consequences to America of the withdrawal of Chinese labor, but speak with moderation, though firmness, of the reactionary movements of China on her own ground."

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CONNECTION, assembled in Conference at Syracuse, April 4, passed unanimously, by a rising vote, the following resolution: "Resolved, That we recommend that our next General Conference place such an expression of the decided convictions of this body, in our Book of Discipline, as shall give us before the world an unequivocal standing on the subject of the acknowledgment, in the Constitution of the United States, of Almighty God as the source of authority and power in civil government, and of the Lord Jesus Christ as the ruler of nations, by whom kings reign, and princes decree judgment." The day will yet come when the liberals of America will rue the suicide of their National League.

THE SPRINGFIELD Republican very sympathetically notices Mr. Frothingham's approaching departure for Europe: "Mr. Frothingham leaves his people and his work in May, to the great grief of all who love him and have listened to his preaching. He is out of health and tired out, and must rest. It is one of the things that must be, and yet how sad it is; for his society will fall to pieces when he goes. No one can fill his place, for he personally was the magnet which held the thread of all hearts, and the majority of his people would rather stay at home and read his old sermons than to hear any one else from his platform. A social reception for his society and intimate friends will be held at the Union League Theatre on the 22d of April; later a more public reception will be given him, but where is not yet decided. It is to be hoped that Mr. Frothingham may leave America knowing how many people love him, for although people who do not know him call him cold and unimpressionable, there are those who know how his keenly sensitive heart has been wronged by the unjust and bitter things that have been written and told of him; no man has warmer and more tender friends than he, and no preacher could leave America, except perhaps Phillips Brooks, who would leave such a gap behind him."

THE NEW YORK Sun notes the aggressiveness of Orthodoxy: "Many orthodox pastors in Massachusetts are looking forward with impatience to the beginning of the campaign against 'Sabbath breaking,' the plans for which are now pretty well matured. It is understood that the very heaviest pulpit artillery obtainable will be brought to bear, and that the Sunday newspapers will come in for their full share of the cannonading. Yet the few Sunday newspapers printed in Massachusetts, so far as we have had the opportunity to notice them, are not very dangerous publications. They give up a great part of their space to reports of sermons and other religious reading. Their editorial discussions are seasoned with salt. If they also print secular news, that is no more than is done by the most approved religious weeklies over which deacons and titling men nod on Sunday afternoons unrebuked. Firing on one's own friends is always a bad blunder. With so many strongholds of Satan still to be reduced, these Massachusetts preachers might well consider the matter further before selecting the Sunday newspaper for bombardment. It is currently reported that in outlying districts of Massachusetts hill towns, men and women are to be found who cannot tell what the inside of a church is like, who are really as utter heathen as any to whom Massachusetts ships missionaries, and whose habits of life make creditable some of the worst stories in Mather's Magnalia. It is asserted that children are growing up amid these surroundings without even the most rudimentary notions of morality—to say nothing about religion. If this be so, it is a state of things that might well arrest the attention of the Massachusetts pastors at their approaching conferences. Surely, the saving of men from brutishness is a matter of higher concern than the laying down of rules as to the observance of a day."

JUDGE SAMUEL T. DOUGLASS, of Detroit, in a letter dated April 11, very kindly expresses his approbation of the course pursued by THE INDEX with regard to the question so prominent during the last eighteen months and the deeper ethical issues involved in it: "I heartily approved of your course at the last Congress of the Liberal League. I have always stood aloof from that organization, not because I did not for the most part sympathize with its proper and avowed aims and purposes, but because of my apprehension that in the natural course of things it would in the end come under the control of a class of demagogues and agitators with whom I was unwilling to be identified. I can scarcely refrain from saying that, in my judgment, your editorials during the past six months have been of signal ability—I mean especially those which have dealt with great ethical problems. I do not always agree with you in practical questions; but when you are in your natural element of ethical speculation, I am always enlightened and generally heartily concur. Your articles on natural religion (I am not sure that was the title) and on 'The Final Appeal in Morals' interested me very much. Every sensible man acts for the most part almost unconsciously upon the principles enunciated and developed in the article last referred to; but no one, so far as I know, has heretofore given so clear and logical an exposition of the subject." The approval of such well-trained minds as Judge Douglass gives us increased confidence in the truth of the principles in question. They are indeed, as he so pertinently suggests, the perhaps unconscious practical rules of action of "every sensible man"; but there is great practical as well as scientific gain in arriving at a clear and correct formula of them. Men knew how to reason cogently long before Aristotle formulated the laws of the syllogism; but his development of these laws gave a great stimulus to progress in many ways. If the recent discussion should have the ultimate effect of advancing liberalism from the crudity of Individualism to the maturity of the Scientific Method in morals, the world would be equally a gainer now.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. B. P. HOLLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHENKMAN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM FAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSANTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. HORACE BEAVER.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 W. J. E. HARRIS.....Editor of "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. R. B. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS.....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST.....Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH OADY STANTON.....Tenny, N. Y.
 MISS RALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburg, Va.
 JOSEPH MC DONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....O. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ANDREWS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Kenia.
 Iowa.....J. O. MICHEWEE, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARMWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wilkesville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....S. B. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMERKANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....B. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. OUPLAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....O. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT O. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. B. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....221 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence B. Brown.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
 SYRACUSE, N. Y.—President, John W. Trussard; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Trussard.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
 ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
 JACKSONVILLE, FLA.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.
 ROCHESTER, N. Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y. MOSES HAY, Rochester, N. Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-S. B. URBINO, West Newton, land, N. Y.
 Z. T. WATKINS, Syracuse, N. Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N. Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUSARD, Syracuse, N. Y. E. ABBOT, Cambridge, case, N. Y.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mrs. M. N. LADY, Albany, N. Y. case, N. Y.
 HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, case, N. Y.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
 T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N. Y. HOPE WHIFFLE, Boston, Mass.
 B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thordike, CHARLES ELLIS, Boston, Mass.
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y. JOHN W. TRUSARD, Syracuse, case, N. Y.
 EDWIN TUCK, Chelsea, Mass. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N. Y.
 JOHN HILL, Watertown, N. Y. JOSEPH MC DONOUGH, Albany, N. Y.
 E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston, Mass. W. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N. Y.
 THOMAS DUGAN, Albany, N. Y. JOHN PREST, Albany, N. Y.
 JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N. Y. O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, R. P. HOLLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

[For THE INDEX.]

Exclusive Rights in Religion.

A DISCOURSE BEFORE THE FREE RELIGIOUS SOCIETY OF PROVIDENCE, APRIL 6, 1879.

BY FREDERIC A. HINCKLEY.

There are many people who never speak or write the words "Free Religion" and "Free Religious" without putting an interrogation point after them. Like a bright boy I heard of the other day, they say in a reflective sort of way: "Free Religion, Free Religion,—oh, yes; that means free of religion." These questioners are mainly of the old faiths, persons to whom religion means stated church services and the punctilious, but no matter how superficial, observance of church forms. So long as one does as his grandfather did before him, so long as he sleeps with sonorous dignity at the foot of the family pew, he passes for religious, no matter what his trading malpractices or his neglect of the small and homely virtues.

Then there are a few thoughtful men and women in the churches and among ourselves who really question conscientiously, and, as they hold, with reason, the right of the free religious body to the word religion. They say that long years of custom have made religion signify a special recognition of God and a confession of obligation to him, and they fall back upon the dictionary as the court of final appeal, and claim to have the verdict in their favor.

Now if this were a merely superficial question about the proper use of a word, I should care little to waste time in discussing it; but beneath the surface is involved the character of the thing itself, and what have been supposed to be some of the most sacred rights of the individual soul. If there is any one thing about which men have been peculiarly sensitive, which they have felt to be worth fighting for and dying for, that thing has been religion. And to-day if there is any one thing for which, more than for any other, acquaintances are cut and friendships broken, that thing is religion. When, therefore, any man or class of men sets himself or itself up as in a special sense the custodian of religion, and declares of another man or class of men that he or it is destitute of religion, a very critical issue is raised, upon and about which there is more than one side to be heard. When a man says to me: "I have got religion and you have not," I feel much as I should if he said, "I am good and you are bad; I tell the truth but you are a liar," or made any other comparison essentially odious in its character. Nor is it simply a matter of feeling. I believe it can be shown that there is and can be no such thing as an exclusive right in and to religion, but that each man must be left free to interpret it for himself, according to the dictates of his own individual consciousness.

To show some reasons for that belief,—to show that in clinging to the word religion I am actuated by something stronger than the prejudices of the past,—is the task I have set myself to-day.

The word religion is derived from one of two Latin words, one signifying to gather or collect again, to go through or over again in reading, in speech, or in thought; the other, to bind anew or back, to bind fast. It is then a going over again or a binding fast, according to the view we take of its derivation. In either case, theology is not necessarily involved. It is when we come to the definitions that we get that.

The first definition in Webster is as follows:—
 "The recognition of God as an object of worship, love, and obedience; right feelings toward God as rightly apprehended; piety."

The corresponding definition in Worcester is this:—
 "An acknowledgment of our obligation to God as our Creator, with a feeling of reverence and love, and consequent duty or obedience to him; duty to God and to His creatures; practical piety, godliness, devotion, devoutness, holiness." In the second definition, "Any system of faith and worship," and the third, "The rites or services of religion," the two dictionaries agree.

It will be observed by a comparison of the first definitions that Worcester's is broader than Webster's, adding the words practical piety, godliness, devotion, devoutness, holiness. Now holiness includes purity and integrity of moral character, and, if one were inclined to make an ingenious plea, or (as the saying is) to indulge in hair-splitting logic, he might show from this that religion according to the dictionary means purity or integrity of moral character, and that, where these were not, whatever the professed belief, there religion could not be. I believe, however, that the plea would be of doubtful value, and prefer to begin by yielding the point claimed,—that religion, as defined by the lexicographers, is, as Webster puts it, "a high sense of moral obligation and spirit of reverence or worship which affect the heart of man with respect to the Deity."

But I utterly deny that the dictionary is the court of final appeal. Nor am I able to see how any one who denies the infallibility of the Bible can assert, as some do assert, the infallibility of the dictionary. There is just as much danger in tying to the one as to the other, and the one needs to be subjected to the reason just as much as the other.

What is a dictionary? Nothing but a mile-stone to show how far language has travelled up to a given time. The lexicographer, about to make his record, looks around him and selects such material as seems to him to pass muster. He always recognizes that certain words which his predecessor recorded have been condemned by what I will call, borrowing Mr. Abbot's phrase, the "Consensus of the Competent," and he marks them obsolete. He also recognizes that certain other words which in the days of his predecessor were considered improper have become so established by custom, or (let us say) approved by the "Consensus of the Competent," as to make their admission to the new list allowable. As examples of the former class, you will find in the large editions of Webster, the word c-a-t-e, cate, meaning food, and the first and second definitions of the word c-l-e-r-k, commonly pronounced in England clerk, meaning a clergyman, an educated person, a scholar, etc., marked obsolete; and the word h-e-f-t, heft, signifying weight, ponderousness, is an example of the second class within my own recollection. The word minify, the opposite of magnify, of recent invention and not now in the dictionary, is perhaps destined some day to be there, because it will commend itself to the good judgment of mankind. The word caucus, now of universally admitted respectability, and probably a corruption of c-a-u-l-k-e-r-s, caulkers, though we do not really know its origin, is an illustration of how some words grow, by methods the very reverse of those adopted and approved by scholars.

So, too, we are constantly using words with other than their dictionary meanings. For example, Webster gives the words Socialism and Communism as synonymous and interchangeable, but students of the questions these words represent, speaking with accuracy, use communism in the sense in which it is defined in the dictionary, viz.: as implying a negation of individual rights in property; and they use socialism as representing what Webster calls a more precise, orderly, and harmonious arrangement of the social relations than that which has hitherto prevailed, but as a help to, rather than a denial of, individual rights. The word love, in the phrase free love, has been most shockingly abused and perverted, so that now by general consent it is understood that when a person says free love he means free lust, and when he says free lover he means free luster.

The word religion itself, during all the ages of Papal supremacy in Europe, did not mean necessarily recognition of or obligation to God, but an order of monkery; and taking the monastic vows was termed going into religion.

Cases of this kind can be multiplied indefinitely, but they all show just this, that the dictionary is subject to constant change; that the process of abolishing and creating words, and varying and sometimes entirely changing their meanings, is constantly going on; and finally that the dictionary is not infallible, and cannot be on any question of vital principle the court of final appeal. It is simply the record of the verdict, rendered from time to time by those regarded as the most competent, upon what is proper in the spelling, pronunciation, and definition of words. Without this "Consensus of the Competent," the dictionary is as dead as the blue laws of Connecticut.

To say, therefore, that according to the dictionary, Religion cannot exist without a distinct recognition of a personal God and of a special relation of the individual soul to him, is simply to say that such was the prevailing view of those considered most competent to judge, when the dictionary was last revised. To claim anything more than that for it, to claim that it is a dictum, from which, for you and for me, there is no appeal, is to give it an authority which belongs to no book, however sacred, and to no man or set of men, however learned. Language is the servant of thought, not its master; and, while every sensible person will respect the recorded opinions of the competent, he will always reserve to himself that right of appeal to the individual and collective reason of mankind, which is the most profound of all authorities.

Now the popular religion of the past and of the present believes that the chief element in religion is a distinct affirmation of a personal God. It cannot conceive of religion as separate from theology; but the drift of liberal thought has been to make a definition of religion not involving in any degree whatsoever theological conceptions. It has claimed, unanswerably as it seems to me, that religion is a sentiment, a sense of dependence first. That in the order of development, the intellectual conception of God or of that which we mean by God, though calling it sometimes under other names, comes afterward. This sense of dependence may exist, and does exist, before the mind is sufficiently developed to have a thought about God.

It has been this constant attempt on the part of the majority in Catholic, Evangelical, and Liberal Christianity to identify theology with religion, often indeed to make it its very soul, which has caused protest after protest, and given life to the come-outism and radicalism of our own time.

Now we have in this country an organization calling itself the Free Religious Association, and announcing as its objects the promotion of the practical interests of pure religion, the encouragement of the scientific study of theology, and the cultivation of the fellowship of the spirit. And we have in our own movement here an organization calling itself the Free Religious Society of Providence, and declaring in its preamble its belief "that a reasonable and natural religion finds its best and truest expression in the physical, intellectual, and spiritual development of mankind," and in Article II. of its Constitution, its object to be "to promote the practice of virtue, the study of truth, and the fraternity of man."

It is at once evident that when the Free Religious Association talks about pure religion, and our Free Religious Society about reasonable and natural religion, they do not mean what the popular religion against which they protest means. To them pure religion and reasonable and natural religion do not necessarily include a recognition of a personal God or an acknowledgment of special obligation to him; understand me, they do not exclude them, but they do not necessarily include them.

"Very well, then," says the popular religion; "you have no right to the name and you do not actually possess the thing." We say at once: "Show us your authority." They reply: "The dictionary." "Good," say we; "but we appeal from the decision of the dictionary to the 'Consensus of the Competent.'" At just this stage, the candid mind will ask us to produce our testimony, and we are more than glad to do so.

The point now to be proved is that the word religion is used by many very able and representative persons, persons who are helping to make the sentiment and therefore the word-definitions of the future, in a way other than that now authorized by the dictionaries. Mr. Emerson, than whom in our day no man is a finer master of good English, says:—

"The whole state of man is a state of culture; and its flowering and completion may be described as religion or worship."

Mr. David A. Wasson, whom many think, next to Emerson, the finest mind in this country, defines religion thus:—

"Religion, in its broadest, simplest definition, is the consciousness of universal relation." And elsewhere more in detail:—

"Parity in morals; true faith of man to man in politics; in science, the devoted pursuit of law, the recognition of a speaking universe; in art, truth; in industry, a due giving for all taking; and acquiescence in that order which is for the health of the whole,—these are religion, as whatever is which expresses a living, cordial, ordered, productive wholeness,—a unity which is first human that it may be divine."

Samuel Longfellow, who certainly would not be charged with unduly emphasizing what has been somewhat contemptuously termed mere morality, says:—

"I call righteousness an essential part of religion. To some men who have little of devout sentiment, or who have speculative difficulties about belief in God, or in a God, morals or righteousness is the substance of their religion; and if it gives a sacred sanction and an immutable ground of nobleness to their lives, it is truly a religion."

Samuel Johnson, one of the most poetic and spiritual of all liberal thinkers, says:—

"The harmony of the Soul with the Universe is Religion." And again:—

"To love and trust the laws of being, is religion."

The definition of Mr. F. E. Abbot, the able representative of the more aggressive side of radicalism, must be entered here, though you are all familiar with it:—

"Religion," he says, "is the effort of man to perfect himself."

This is in striking contrast, but not inconsistent, with an old Hindu definition:—

"What is religion? said Hitopadesa. It is tenderness toward all creatures."

"Religion," says a modern writer, "is the recognized principle of action." "Religion," says another, "is faithfulness to one's highest ideal."

Surely there is not much theology in all these; nothing which the old schools, planting themselves upon the dictionary, would recognize as religion. And yet there is about them that grand affirmation of virtue and of ceaseless aspiration and growth to which somehow men of all shades of speculative belief defer, and which sound depths in the human heart which no theology could ever reach. But there is one other authority from whom I desire to quote. Matthew Arnold says:—

"When we are asked, What is the object of religion? let us reply, Conduct. And when we are asked further, What is conduct? let us answer, Three-fourths of life." And again:—

"Let us put into the Hebrew 'Eternal' and 'God' no more science than they did,—the enduring power, not ourselves, which makes for righteousness."

And still again, with great force and clearness, he says:—

"Morality, ethics, conduct, are by many people, and above all by theologians, carefully distinguished from religion, which is supposed in some special way to be connected with propositions about the Godhead of the Eternal Son, or propositions about the personality of God, or about election or justification. Religion, however, means simply either a binding to righteousness, or else a serious attending to righteousness and dwelling upon it. Which of these two it most nearly means depends upon the view we take of the word's derivation; but it means one of them, and they are really much the same. And the antithesis between ethical and religious is thus quite a false one. Ethical means practical; it relates to practice or conduct passing into habit or disposition. Religious also means practical, but practical in a still higher degree; and the right antithesis to both ethical and religious is the same as the right antithesis to practical; namely, theoretical."

I might go on with quotations of this nature from others of the world's progressive thinkers, but I have given enough to establish this point, that there is a definition given to religion precisely such as we hold it to be, by a large number of able scholars and writers, whose thoughts, however little they may be supported to-day by public opinion, and whose use of words, however little it may be sanctioned by the dictionary, will exert a wide-spread influence upon the future. We have the unquestionable support of these minds in denying the assumption of evangelism that, in religion, belief is primary and conduct secondary, and in asserting, as we most earnestly and persistently do, that in religion conduct is primary and belief secondary.

If then you ask me, "Is a distinct recognition of a personal God an essential part of religion?" I reply, No, religion may exist and does exist without any intellectual conception of God whatsoever. The atheist, disbeliever or denying the existence of a supreme intelligent being, may be religious; and the churchman, believing in such being and affirming his belief with each returning day, may be utterly without religion. Because religion is not belief in a God, it is being godlike; it is not profession of a creed, it is constant progress toward a divine ideal. It includes a deep sense of obligation surely, but it may be an impersonal obligation. A sense of obligation to seek the truth and to be faithful to the best we know, a recognition of human brotherhood and an honest effort to discharge the practical, every-day duties of life,—these make religion.

When I see a man without an aspiration for anything better than he has and is, satisfied with his own condition and that of everybody else, I see a man without religion. I care not whether he attend services in the Catholic, the Evangelical, the Liberal Church, or in Barney's Hall; but when I see a man who is ever trying to make his life better than it is, and who has some sense of a brotherly relation with his fellow-men, I care not if he deny every iota of speculative belief upon which the Church stands or we stand, I see a man full of the spirit of religion. The great difference between Church people and ourselves is, that they take things on trust, while we want to know the reasons for what we profess to believe and to be. The description of Clennam by Dickens' Young Barnacle, of the Circumlocution Office, meets the case exactly:—

"He's a most ferocious radical, you know," said Young Barnacle.

"Is he? How do you know?" said his friend Gowan.

"Egad, sir, he was pitching into our people, the other day, in the most tremendous manner. Went up to our place and pitched into my father to that extent that it was necessary to order him out. Came back to our department and pitched into me. You never saw such a fellow."

"What did he want?" asked Gowan.

"Egad, sir," returned young Barnacle, "he said he wanted to know, you know! Pervaded our department—without an appointment—and said he wanted to know!"

That is just the trouble with us; and because we "want to know" some things before we profess to know them, we are ordered out of what men recognize as religion. I for one decline to go. If I live long enough, I mean to demonstrate that the religious world can spare neither me nor my creed.

The Orthodox say: "We confess our faith in God, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost."

I match that by saying—I believe in the integrity of the Universe, with a power behind it and in it guided by reason and love, and working through unchangeable and unceasing law. I cannot bring myself to talk about that power with what Matthew Arnold calls the astounding particularity of license of affirmation of our dogmatists, as if it were a man in the next street. The profound reverence and (I hope) humility in which I bow before the Unknowable will not permit me to think for a moment that I can grasp the creative power, when I understand, as it were, but a drop in the great ocean of what has been by him or it created. Shall I then be told that I have no religion? Verily, if reverence and awe and faith have anything to do with religion, I am full of it.

Again, Orthodoxy says:—

"We believe in Jesus Christ, the Incarnate Word."

I match that by saying—I believe in all souls, and that just in proportion as they are holy they are the Word Incarnate. That includes Jesus and many more. Surely if belief in the Incarnate Word is a part of religion, I must, so far as it is concerned, be more religious than my Orthodox brother, for I believe in it in a far broader and more universal sense than he does.

Still again, Orthodoxy says:—

"We believe in the Holy Comforter, who is present in the Church to regenerate and sanctify the soul."

I match that by saying—I believe in the Holy Spirit of Truth and Love, which is present everywhere, outside as well as inside the Church, to regenerate and sanctify the soul.

Which is the more truly religious, to box up your comforting spirit within the four walls of a building made with hands, or to let it out freely in the great temple not made with hands, where all, without other passports than their own God-given desires, may receive of its inspiration?

Yet again, Orthodoxy says:—

"We confess the common sinfulness and ruin of our race."

I reply to that by saying, with all frankness, that it seems to me the great lie of all the ages; and by affirming the opposite—that I believe in the natural tendency of the race toward all that is noble and pure and true. Which is the more religious, the belief that rules out everybody and then requires an expiatory death to wipe away their sins upon certain conditions, or the belief that rules everybody in, and holds that the relation between man and the infinite first cause is so intimate that nothing can be needed to make it strong and enduring?

Orthodoxy says, referring to its creed: "We receive these truths on the testimony of God, given through prophets and apostles, etc., a testimony preserved for the Church in the Old and New Testament Scriptures."

I say, referring to my creed—I receive these truths on testimony which to me seems divine, some of it in written and some of it in unwritten scriptures the world over, and in the present as well as in the past time. Who has the right to declare that his is the real article, and mine is not?

Do not mistake the issue, friends. This comparison is forced upon me by the impertinent assumption, constantly made, that "we the Evangelicals have religion, and you the Free Religionists have not." But I make it not to reverse the verdict. If what the Catholic believes leads him to live a better life, it is for him religion; and for one I say, God speed him in it. If what the Evangelical Protestant believes leads him to live a better life, it is for him religion; and with all my heart I say, God speed him in it. But I ask them both, in the name of all that is catholic in the broad sense, to remember that my right in the universe is just as good as theirs, and that it is just as much their duty to give me room to interpret religion for myself as it is my duty to give them room to interpret religion for themselves. If Free Religion makes me no better than I could be without it, if it is not an honest faith with me, then they have a right to say it is not religion; but if it leads me into high realms of aspiration and effort, then it is to me religion.

Another thing. This is not a matter to be settled by a majority vote. There is just as much tyranny in forcing a principle upon the human conscience by a vote of the majority as in forcing it at the point of the bayonet. In the enactment and interpretation of law, or in the creation of public opinion, any attempt at dictation on the question of what makes religion has ever been, is, and I believe will ever be an act of insufferable despotism.

If the Irish or the Chinese are ever found, as some think they will be, sapping the life of our free institutions and overthrowing public and private morality; if they are ever found doing all this,—they must be dealt with in precisely the same manner as we should deal with our own native American citizens, not as Catholics, not as Buddhists, but as violators of the law; and it will be an everlasting shame to this country and to us, if we ever permit our laws to discriminate in the realm of honest religion.

I speak for the right of private judgment,—I speak for a broad application of the principle of religious liberty,—when I affirm that the Buddhist has precisely the same right to the enjoyment of what to him is religion that I have to the enjoyment of what to me is religion; and I have the same right which belongs to my Orthodox and my Catholic brother. There can be no exclusive, but there must be equal, rights in religion.

"Why not, then," I hear some one say, "since the word religion has been appropriated,—why not use some other; for example, the word liberal or the word moral?" Simply because neither of these words represents the thing as well. Any one is a liberal who advocates greater freedom from restraint, but religion is not necessarily and never exclusively that. Any one is moral who refrains from speaking falsely and from doing evil. Religion includes that, but much more. Morality may exist without any aspiration toward a high ideal, but, to make it all we mean by religion, the fine sense of personal longing and of universal relation must be added to it. So far as I know, there is no other word which so fittingly describes the combination of a sense of dependence and obligation, faithfulness to an ever-advancing ideal, and relations of justice and love between all human kind as the word religion. Certainly in common usage it would be even more difficult to identify our principles by the words liberal and moral than by religious. Liberal is made to mean anything and everything, and associations carrying the banner of moral reform are as numerous among our opponents as among ourselves. Joseph Cook, who in intelligence is far ahead of the average evangelical preacher, cannot see the difference between the Free Religious Association and the National Liberal League now. What would be his obfuscation, if one were the Liberal Association and the other the Liberal League, it is hard to tell. I belong to an association in Boston, called the Moral Education Association; but there are members of that organization whose ideas of morality are the exact opposite of mine. So I think nothing would be gained by a change of name.

Besides that, my right to the name and the thing religion has been questioned, and when my right to what is legitimately mine is questioned by a band of monopolists, I propose to maintain rather than surrender it. I decline to yield the point that the faith which teaches that the things of this world are of no account, and that all a man need do to insure his eternal felicity is to repent upon his death-bed, is more religious than the faith which teaches that this world is all we know to-day, and that the only way to enjoy felicity, here or anywhere, is to begin to lead a pure and holy life now, right away, while we have control of trust-funds, while we hold public position, while we are to some extent at least free agents; not after all these things are taken from our grasp and we have no choice but to submit.

There is another class of arguments on our side to which I would like briefly to refer. There are many people who would say on the abstract question, "Free Religion is not religion," who would not stand by that statement when they saw it personified in some men and women. There was a young man in Boston in 1833 who wrote to a friend who had been troubled about his spiritual welfare:—

"I do not think I have a basis for faith to build upon. I am without religious feeling. I seldom refer my happiness or acquisitions to the Great Father from whose mercy they are derived. Of the first great commandment, then, upon which so much hangs, I live in perpetual unconsciousness.—I will not say disregard, for that, perhaps, would imply that it was present in my mind. I believe, though, that my love to my neighbor—namely, my anxiety that my fellow-creatures should be happy, and disposition to serve them in their honest endeavors—is pure and strong. Certainly I do feel an affection for everything that God created; and this feeling is my religion."

The author of this letter evidently knew little of, and cared less for, theology; but he had real religion. A few years later, it publicly identified him with the cause of good morals. It enabled him, still a young man, to plead for peace in the presence of the armed soldiers of his native commonwealth and country; it sent him without any effort of his own to the nation's capital to be for twenty-three long and arduous years the tribune of the people; it compelled him to grapple with chattel slavery in America as no man before him had done; it brought upon him the assault of the assassin; and when after these years of faithful service in which—

"He never sold the truth to serve the hour,"

but was true to her with his party and against his party, with his friends and against them, the news was wafted along the wires, "The great Senator is dead," it brought a sense of personal loss to us all. The pathway from the Capitol to the grave was moistened with manly and womanly tears, and strewn with flowers.

And why? Not because he attended church, for he rarely did; not because he had changed the essential doctrine of his youthful letter, for he never had: but because his whole life had been a constant exhibition of natural and practical religion. It was for this that he lived, for this that he died. It was because of this that the politician hated him and the oppressor assailed him. His learning was great, his oratory of no mean order, but it was his sense of justice, his broad and generous sympathy for the suffering and sinning, his aspiration for the highest for himself and his fellow-men,—in a word it was his free religion,—which made him the mighty man he was, and will keep his memory sacred as the incorruptible statesman with the white soul.

We do not stop to ask much about the theology of the world's real heroes. Who cares what John Brown and Robert G. Shaw and Wilder Dwight believed? We know what they were and what they did, and we count it the sure promise of their own, as it was of their country's, redemption. They were religious men, every one of them, as were Jefferson and Thomas Paine, as is every man who lives an earnest, progressive, helpful life.

Within the past month, a man to whom we were all eager and accustomed to listen, and who had, I think, not a little of the true spirit of religion, has vanished from mortal vision. I am no fair-weather eulogist, and I cannot forget his faults, grievous ones that they were; but in spite of them, there was in this man something so intense, something so meteoric and yet so constantly shining, something so inspiring, so stirring, so catching, that at times he moved some of us as we were never otherwise moved. There was much of it in his personal magnetism, but one who ever heard him can feel something of the old influence in reading his published words, and some of them will help to mould in the future the lives of men. What was the secret of his marvellous power? There were those who could state a case more logically, many who could state it more clearly, than he; but he had at heart a moral purpose so strong, a perception so alert, a disposition so sensitive, that, when he spoke, his soul spoke. It was not simply a voice, it was not simply a thought, it was a whole man fired for some great principle of liberty and love, that warmed us to the white heat of divine resolve. It was because he was an apostle of the religion of the heart, of the brotherhood of man, that, spite of a rhetoric which sometimes well-nigh swamped his thought, and spite of weaknesses to which his friends could not be blind, he had such a power with his fellows. "There is one," they said, "who accepts the religion which obeys the orders for the day."

That was his religion. It is ours. It is that which makes this platform as broad as the universe of truth, as all-inclusive as the universe of man. Tell me it is not religious? Tell me that, when I stand upon it, I am in danger of ruining my own soul and dragging down others with me? I hope I am not insensible to the responsibilities accompanying it. It is with a deep sense of them that I would say to the young men and women of this city and land, could my poor voice but reach them:—

Oh, young men! Oh, young women! Do not trouble yourselves about creeds. When the time comes, as come it will if you think for yourselves, when doubts perplex your minds, do not be anxious; give them free swing, assured that they are the forerunners of healthy affirmation. It matters little whether you attend church or stay at home; it matters little what your speculative beliefs or lack of them: but it does matter, in a degree far beyond power of expression, that you be honest in your every thought and deed, that you learn to see through shams and to grasp realities; that you live lives of stainless purity and ceaseless aspiration; that you open your hearts to all who seek or need your sympathy and love. Without such principles as these, no ambition can be worthy; with them, any ambition will be hallowed, and, consecrated to their service, its attainment made divine.

So as you look forward to future duties and successes, let me say to you in language borrowed from another:—

"Go forth into the many mansions of the house of life: scholars! store them with learning; jurists! build them with justice; artists! adorn them with beauty; philanthropists! let them resound with love."

Thus shall you become the apostles and prophets of a religion too comprehensive to leave out one human soul, and too reverent to assume to set boundary lines to the cause of Truth.

SECULARISM AND ITS ALLIES.

[The misapprehension expressed below that Free Religion insists dogmatically upon belief in God and Immortality, as a test of fellowship, is so well removed by the foregoing admirable statement of Mr. Hinckley, that it needs no further correction.—ED.]

Much of the religion of to-day is apologetic, or rather exculpatory. A thoughtful American, Mr. L. K. Washburn, has defined it as being "only speaking God's name with a pious accent," and he goes on to say that "people want religion put into prayers and sermons and hymns; into forms and ceremonies and signs; because it is easier to put it into such things than to put it into good lives and good deeds. Human suffering and want seem to be of little account in this Christian world. God must be worshipped properly, if men and women starve." This means that the Christianity of the nineteenth century is a sham, a cloak assumed in order to relieve the wearer from the necessity of serving humanity. The love of God is put forward as an easy means of satisfying the conscience, and religion is made to consist of prayers, psalms, sermons, and sacraments, all of which are of easy performance, and call for little or no self-denial and exertion. The proprieties are easily conciliated on the Sunday,—the one day in seven upon which the modern Christian brings forth his religion; the other six days of the week are devoted to the service of Mammon and the "curled greed for gold."

"They talk of fate, and calculate,
And keep accounts, and measure, and weigh;
That's the way the world goes round,
That's the story of to-day."

But if the Christian religion is a sham, it is also the fact that the so-called religious life is but too often a falsehood. Instead of being a life of virtue, of benevolence, charity, truth, and love, it is but a thing of outside show, a form without a substance. The Bible, the Church, Sabbath observance, and prayer are fetiches or charms which now usurp the place of true religion, and the use of which constitutes the religious man of modern society.

Secularism is essentially different from Christianity, because its aim is directly contrary to that of the latter. The secular brotherhood is the brotherhood of man, while that of Christianity is limited to those only who believe that Jesus "Christ" is God, and the Savior of those who confess him to be such. The object of the Secularist is to promote the earthly welfare of every individual of the human race, and to unite all men in this endeavor; that of the Christian is to bring all mankind to recognize the divinity of Jesus, with the view of redeeming their souls from the doom incurred by the sin of Adam and Eve, with which every child of humanity is tainted. We consider that the true religion consists in devotion towards humanity, that its aim is to bring man ever nearer to perfection, perfect man being the secular ideal,—an ideal, though perhaps never wholly attained, the pursuit of which will surely tend to advance the sum of human happiness. There are many who do not call themselves by our name who are, nevertheless, at one with us in object and belief. In America there are the Liberal Leaguers and the Free Religionists; in France La Religion Laïque is attracting many who have long been, amid the wreck of old theologies, at a loss where to turn for consolation and a bond of union. Our own English system we believe to be really the most catholic of these unions, inasmuch as it is absolutely free from any theological hurdles whatever. Upon our platform the Atheist, the Pantheist, and the Theist can all join hands together in the practical work of promoting the brotherhood of man, animated by the love of humanity for its sake alone. Far narrower than this are the systems of Free Religion and La Religion Laïque. The former, of which Mr. O. B. Frothingham is an exponent, contains three dogmas, two of which have to be taken for granted, since upon them certitude is impossible. These are (1) the fraternity of man; (2) the existence of God; (3) the immortality of the human soul. Christianity is quietly shelved in this system, no regard whatever being paid to the affirmations respecting Jesus made by Christians during the past eighteen centuries. Free Religion, as understood in America, is a system of Pure Theism, which makes the promotion of human improvement by "human effort and material means" its cardinal feature. La Religion Laïque is narrower than this. Its chief exponent is M. Fauvety. He, too, assumes the existence of "the Infinite One" (God), and the possession by man of an immortal soul; but he does not think it necessary to divorce his system from Christianity, or, to use his own words, "to break with the Christian idea." His religion is one "sans prêtres, sans mystères, sans miracles,—without priests, mysteries, or miracles," and by which man shall govern himself, "en marchant vers la perfection." According to this system, Jesus "Christ" ought to be considered as the "type of perfected humanity," not as an individual. We are not quite sure that its adherents deny that the Son of Mary ever really walked the earth; but they speak of him as if he were only an ideal, and probably they leave each individual to decide this question for himself. The "self-sacrificing love of man for Jesus' sake," writes M. Fauvety in reply to Mr. F. E. Abbot, of Boston, "expresses the same idea" as that of the latter named gentleman when he states that "the noblest fruit of Free Religion is a self-sacrificing love of man for man's own sake." The Christian ideal is perfection, says the Frenchman, and in striving to attain it "we only obey the commandment of Jesus himself: Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect." Intent upon reconciling Christianity with progress, M. Fauvety says: "And now we are with Mr. Abbot when he tries to realize a more perfect form of religion than those which Christianity has inspired. It is evident that there is a better to be realized; but it is not therefore necessary to break with the Christian idea. It is sufficient to develop it by bringing the ideal of perfection 'God within us' into harmony with modern thought." Thus the work begun at the Reformation—namely, the rationalizing of Christianity—may only be effected; without this reconciliation, Christianity must be cast aside, and wholly rejected, at the peril of engendering confusion.

We can understand the position taken by Mr. Frothingham and the Free Religionists. It is, as we have already designated it, a pure Theism, acceptable only by the Theist, and excluding the Atheist and Agnostic from its communion. Possibly its founders may have thought it politic thus to restrict their system, with a view of attracting towards it the many Rationalists who scruple to identify themselves in any way with the unfashionable Ultras. Of course, we do not for a moment insinuate that the dogmas of the Free Religionists do not codify or represent the opinions of their leaders. We seriously question, however, whether the course they have adopted will prove the best calculated to unite Free Thinkers in a Humanitarian propaganda, while we entertain strong opinions respecting the intolerance, for such it really is, which refuses to allow the Atheist and the Agnostic to march in line with men whose primary object is equally dear to all. Less narrow, indeed, than M. Fauvety, the Free Religionist does not seek to bind men to profess a respect and reverence for Jesus "Christ"; but his defiance of reason is quite as great, and the theologic spirit quite as painfully manifested, when he imposes upon all who would fain unite with him the belief in dogmas which can never be proved. We can imagine the contempt with which Orthodox Christians would hear of La Religion Laïque. Rejecting Christianity with one hand, while clinging to Jesus as the ideal with the other, how will the people receive such a "gospel" as this? "It is," says Mr. Abbot, "in vain to cling to the Christian idea, or drape it with beauties which are not its own, but borrowed unconsciously from humanity. Free Religion has passed through the stage through which La Religion Laïque is passing to-day; and it will never return to it." To this statement of a Free Thinker and Secular worker, whom we both respect and admire, we would add that narrowness and restriction do not agree with his liberal mind. Freedom is the unum necessarium to Free Religion, which should, like British Secularism, combine within its ranks all who are desirous to further the advent of the religion of humanity, without asking them previously to settle for themselves the great mysteries of the universe, and of the origin and nature of life. Truth, Knowledge, and Liberty are the three essentials to Humanity, and it is a grave mistake to establish dogmatic shibboleths from which the first two of these essentials are wanting. What should we think of the Atheist who would attempt to make the denial of a "divine spirit" the test of admission to the Secular body? Yet his action would be analogous to that of the Free Religionist who makes a sine qua non of the doctrine of the existence of God or of the immortality of the soul.

*Information respecting this system may be obtained from M. Charles Fauvety, 3 Avenue Perleire, Asnières, France.

Our own system, Secularism, as defined in our principles, is free from all such errors. Our object is to unite men, not to perpetuate theologic divisions, and our motto is: "In things doubtful, liberty; in things essential, unity; in all things, charity"; above all other things, striving always to effect the redemption and to promote the happiness of the human race.

THALASPOLEKTOS.

—London Secular Review, March 1, 1879.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE FLORENCE FREE CONGREGATIONAL SOCIETY.

The sixteenth annual meeting of the Free Congregational Society of Florence was held on Monday evening last. In the absence of the moderator, S. B. Fuller was chosen to preside. The report of the executive committee was read by the chairman of the board, Seth Hunt; the treasurer's report showed the society to be out of debt, and the report of the Sunday-school superintendent, Miss M. W. Bond, gave statistics of attendance and other matters of interest. The following officers for the ensuing year were selected, and the meeting closed with interesting remarks by many of those present: S. L. Hill, moderator; A. T. Lilly, treasurer; A. G. Hill, clerk; Seth Hunt, A. T. Lilly, and Joseph Marsh, executive committee. Committee on Sunday-school, music, finance, and charity were chosen, as was also an advisory board of eight members. About a score of new members joined the society.

The following is the annual report of the executive committee, which was read at the meeting:—

Report.

Cosmian Hall stands for liberty to do right. It has no sympathy with that freedom which means licentiousness. The Free Congregational Society of Florence, which has a home within these walls, announced with its very first breath, as among its leading objects, "our advancement in truth and goodness," "the promotion of good morals," as well as general intelligence, and "liberal religious sentiments." It was the first religious society organized on the principles of the Golden Rule, the Declaration of Independence, and the Constitution of the United States, which alike unite in declaring against persecution or the infliction of pains and penalties for opinion's sake; allowing the iron hand of authority to be wielded only against overt acts of immorality. And yet certain religionists, strangely blind to the future welfare of the churches, to say nothing of what are termed the secular interests of the people, seem bent on destroying the dearest of our rights, bought with the blood of our fathers,—freedom of conscience. These misguided zealots are striving to put a sectarian creed into the United States Constitution, and thus force upon the people, by the physical power of the government, what they are unable to do by reason and argument.

The Free Congregational Society of Florence holds that liberty is essential to growth and the wise improvement of the talents committed to man's trust. While there may be, without liberty, a kind of negative, sickly goodness, bound up in a napkin, yet this society maintains that in order to insure a full, rounded development of man's mental and moral nature, and fit him for the highest usefulness, he must be free from the domination of church creeds; from so-called supernatural, infallible authority, from the letter which killeth, and placed under the guidance of reason which giveth life.

But while religious freedom is friendly to growth in knowledge and virtue, it is fatal to the pretensions of supernaturalism and ecclesiastical tyranny. It is therefore assailed by religious bigots. They falsely identify free religion with licentiousness, and try to make it responsible for the acts of those who, while professing liberalism, are working to break down the barriers to social corruption. One of the shining lights of Orthodoxy, true to the spirit which set up the Inquisition and shed the blood of martyrs, has within the past year publicly breathed out threatenings and slaughter against free religionists, while some of his deluded and fettered hearers clanked their chains in applause. The murderous spirit here exhibited would have essayed to call down fire from heaven on the Good Samaritan, who was the infidel of his time, but whom Jesus held up as an example of Christianity.

Thus much in the way of preliminary your committee have thought best to say, in order to show unmistakably where this society stands on the issues of the hour, and to repel the indiscriminate assaults on liberalism made during the past year by certain of its calumniators from the pulpit and through the press.

In accordance with the recommendation of the executive committee, the society, at its last annual meeting, appointed an advisory committee. The experience of the past year confirms the wisdom of creating such a body, and your executive committee would therefore recommend that an advisory board be annually elected.

During the summer of 1878, David H. Clark, who had served the society since September 1, 1875, as resident speaker and superintendent of the Sunday-school, tendered his resignation, to take effect on the first day of September, 1878. On the third day of that month, the executive committee, with the unanimous approval of the advisory board, in joint session, elected Mrs. Elizabeth Powell Bond to the office of superintendent of the Sunday-school, to fill the vacancy occasioned by Mr. Clark's resignation. It is needless to say that Mrs. Bond, through previous experience in the same capacity, and by her rare qualifications for the work, has very ably and successfully discharged the duties devolving upon her.

Your committee, still believing that the Sunday-school is the paramount and vital institution of the society, feel justified in urging a general attendance of old and young, feeling sure that all who take an interest in the school will find it both enjoyable and profitable. The report of the superintendent will present the details of the working of the institution during the past year.

That efficient auxiliary of the society, the Ladies' Industrial Union, as again rendered substantial aid to the society, as will be seen in the report of your treasurer; and your committee gratefully recognize and appreciate the generous support thus given. Every member of the society would do well to make an effort to strengthen this auxiliary and increase its membership.

The committee also gratefully acknowledge the labors of earnest workers in every department,—the teachers in the Sunday-school, the members of the choir, and all who have in any way contributed to the work of our organization.

At a recent informal meeting of your committee, with the advisory board and a few other members of the society, there was a free interchange of thought touching the best means for advancing the interests of the society. Some diversity of opinion was manifested, but the prevailing idea seemed to be that if we could have a suitable person for the office, one who could adapt himself to all our needs and requirements, it would be well to have another resident speaker; but as we had none to recommend, it seemed to be the general opinion that we should have a transient supply of one or two able speakers each month, and continue our monthly concert of the choir and Sunday-school. A large number feel that miscellaneous exercises of some kind may be profitable. Your committee hope the members of the society will give, in this meeting, a general expression of their opinions on the matters here referred to, as it is the desire of the committee that the wish of the greatest number shall be gratified.

During the past year, the following speakers from other places have occupied the platform of the society, namely: John Albee, W. N. Hailman, Mrs. Julia E. Wright, John W. Chadwick, Giles B. Stebbins, I. S. Thompson, Theodore D. Weld, Mrs. Elizabeth K. Churchill, Horace Seaver, Dr. Chas. R. Upson, Frederick A. Hinckley, and B. F. Underwood, each one Sunday; while lectures on Sunday evenings have been given by Dr. Mary Walker and Parker Pillsbury. The society has also been favored with a friendly visit from A. Bronson Alcott, who addressed the Sunday school and held one of his parlor conversations. Mr. Clark has given one discourse while resident speaker, and one since his resignation. Mr. Leppers has given three, Mrs. Elizabeth P. Bond two, Mrs. Aldrich, D. W. Bond, and Clarence E. Brown, one each. Two Sunday afternoons were occupied by funeral services of Charles C. Burleigh and Henry S. Gould, respectively. The vacation embraced all the Sundays of August, and the exercises on all the other Sundays were carried on by our own members.

The thanks of the society are due to Mr. Leppers, Mr. Bond, Mr. Brown, and Mr. Alcott, for tendering their acceptable services without compensation.

Among the subjects treated by the different speakers were "The Consolations of Rationalism"; "John Milton"; "High Schools for Mothers"; "Mortal Justice the Foundation of the Family,—the Family the Foundation of the State"; "The Function of Prayer"; "Buddha and Buddhism"; "Crises"; "Men's Estimate of Woman and what has come of it"; "Harriet Martineau"; "Evil Speaking and Evil Thinking"; "Moses and Christ"; "Love and Sacred Marriage"; "Then and Now, or the Progress of the Race"; "Horace Seaver's Religion"; "National Liberal League"; "Resolved that the Churches do more good than Liberals are willing to Admit"; "Origin of Chemistry"; "Free Religion and the Liberal League"; "Man as a Religious Being"; "Revivals and their Effects"; "Education"; "Public Opinion"; "The Disintegration of Society"; "Non-taxation of the Churches, the Bible in the Schools, God in the Constitution, Woman out."

It will be seen that most of the topics discussed on our platform relate to the welfare of man here. This world being our present sphere of action, and the one to which all our organs are adapted, we are only called upon to make the most of the circumstances in which we find ourselves. We are to think and act as men for mankind on the solid globe; not as angels for ethereal beings beyond the clouds. Our aim should be to make the earth a heaven, here and now. If we find, hereafter, a city paved with gold, and out of debt, let us go in, if we can, and enjoy it; but for fear of some mistake about the golden city, let us see that the streets we now travel on are well macadamized with good stone. How much better for mankind if all the time and thought which have been given to useless ceremonies and speculations about a world of which we know nothing had been spent in learning the best means of drawing out the resources of the earth; of multiplying the comforts and lessening the ills of life; finding out the best way to reclaim swamps, subdue wild land, and bring the soil up to its highest fertility, and above all to learn the laws of our own being, the cause, cure, and prevention of disease, and how to cultivate those moral and humane sentiments which civilize and ennoble mankind.

In looking back over the society year now closing, your committee are led to signalize it as the year of bereavement. The arrows of death have flown thick among us. We mourn the loss of our great standard-bearer, Charles C. Burleigh. We lament the deaths of those esteemed friends and members of the socety, Mrs. E. L. Hammond, her sister, Mrs. Whipple, Mr. Henry W. Rummell, Mr. Henry S. Gould, Mr. Calvin Bartlett, as well as those birthright members, the dear children, Annie Hill and Edmund Bond.

Mr. Burleigh, as is well known here, was struck by a railroad train in Florence, on the 3d day of June, 1878, and sustained injuries which resulted in his death on the 18th of that month. The magnitude of this loss to our society, to this community, and to the whole country is immeasurable. As one of the founders of this society, as its steadfast and able defender, as the undaunted and eloquent champion and friend of the down-trodden slave and of the oppressed everywhere, as a lofty example of purity and integrity, coupled with a matchless intellect, he will long live in the hearts of the members of this society and be enshrined in the dearest memories of thousands scattered over this broad continent.

Men may die,—but truth is immortal. The self-evident principles announced by the founders of this society and embodied in its platform have gone out to the four winds of heaven and will not return void. It is reported that since the death of Mr. Burleigh some of the enemies of the Free Congregational Society of Florence have been predicting that after the departure of the remaining founders of the organization, the society will become extinct. The wish is father to the thought. We believe, however, they will prove false prophets. We trust that liberal principles will here find abler and stronger defenders in the future than in the past. When the church had arrested Galileo they thought they had suppressed his doctrines. But the earth and sun moved on in their courses, proclaiming to the universe that the philosopher was right. So we believe that if every member of this society should fall, and no hand be left to bear aloft its standard, the breath of heaven would float it; the forces of Nature would conspire to uphold it. Such is the vitality of liberty, it conquers in defeat, and while dying it lives; so that of its darkest hours we may sing with the poet:—

"Yet, Freedom, yet thy banner torn, but flying,
Streams like a thunder cloud against the wind;
Thy trumpet voice, though broken now and dying,
The loudest still the tempest leaves behind."

A FEW DAYS AGO, we gave an instance of the peculiarity of the late Edward William Johnston as a journalist. In the closing years of his life, he was librarian of the Mercantile Library in St. Louis, and well qualified by his wide reading and general knowledge of books for the position. He was not satisfied, however, to act as mere librarian; he wanted to act as critic also; or rather he considered that the functions of one included the functions of the other. Being a Virginian of the old school, an extreme State's rights Democrat, and an ultra-conservative in all things, it is easy to imagine what his views of literature would be, especially at a time when all his prejudices were aroused as they were during the civil war,—the time of his holding the place of librarian. He hated all innovating authors, as he called them, and regarded every liberal mind as dangerously and disreputably radical. Hobbes, Gibbon, Voltaire, Hume, Rousseau, Shelley, Goethe, Cabanis, Diderot, Franklin, Emerson, Carlyle, and hundreds of other men of genius, he naturally underrated and detested. He deemed it necessary, not only to entertain peculiar views, but to put them in writing on the fly-leaves and title-pages of the books themselves. Consequently, scores of the volumes were soon ornamented with his opinions, conveyed in clear, neat autograph and succinct, vigorous English. Wilhelm Meister was accompanied with something like this: "A very wicked and indecent book. No gentleman should, and no lady could, read it. And then it has very little meaning. Goethe, who was not without cleverness, knew this perfectly, and wrote it in order to mystify his worshippers." The Essay sur les Mœurs et l'Esprit des Nations was introduced as stuff and nonsense by a rampant atheist. Candide was degrading licentiousness, Emile contained the germs of anarchy, and was an excuse for infidelity. The Decline and Fall was the pompous mouthing of a blasphemer. Pensées Philosophiques was destructive of all order and purity. The Revolt of Islam was the raving of a postaster. Emerson's Essays were Boston abolitionism dressed up in learned lingo. Sartor Resartus was Teutonic fustian pervaded with the idiocy of egotism. These written revillings cost Johnston his place, because he refused to discontinue them.—N. Y. Times.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 19.

G. H. A. Morse, $7.90; Frank Aquires, $1.50; Hon. Sam'l T. Douglass, $3.20; H. Southworth, $3; Mrs. C. M. Lawler, $5; John W. Griffin, $3.20; Alex. Grant, $3.20; Mrs. I. G. Hardy, $3; W. L. Hays, $3; Benj. Breed, $1.15; J. C. Chatterton, $1; Mrs. T. F. Von Arnim, $3.20; Hon. A. Taft, $10; George Allen, $1.28; David Newport, $3; E. Czaradi, $1.50; Dr. D. S. Grandin, $2.15; E. Z. Penfield, $3; W. K. Hallway, $3; T. L. Williams, $1.51; Hon. S. E. Sewall, $3.20; Eliza Wright, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 24, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLKDO OFFICE, No. 35 MONROE STREET: J. T. FAWCETT, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

EPICETUS said: "What would I have death find me doing? Something benevolent, public-spirited, and noble." How much finer to die thus than to die thinking only of one's own soul!

MR. GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE has just published through the Lippincotts the second volume of his History of Coöperation in England. It is a book to be sought and read by every one interested in that very practical subject. Mr. Holyoake is to be congratulated on the completion of an important service under great difficulties.

IF ANY of our readers desire to become acquainted with one of the noblest moral and philosophical schools of antiquity, we cannot too warmly recommend to them Mr. Frederick May Holland's Reign of the Stoics (Charles P. Somerby, New York). How to treat the subject in a more charming, instructive, or faithful manner, we cannot conceive. From beginning to end, this little book, written by a thoroughly competent and painstaking scholar, is yet alive with human feeling of the best kind, and kindles responsive feeling in the reader's breast. The Reign of the Stoics covers the period of eighty-four years during which Nerva, Trajan, Hadrian, and the two Antonines sat successively on the throne of the Roman empire. Gibbon has described this period of the world's history as that "during which the condition of the human race was most happy." Mr. Holland sketches with a loving hand, in fifty pages of historical survey, the characters which have lent its chief lustre to Stoicism; and he devotes the rest of his volume to carefully selected and well classified excerpts from its literature. It would be difficult indeed to find elsewhere so large a collection of really grand maxims in so small a compass. This is a book to be wholly praised; we see nothing in it to be blamed but its brevity.

PROFESSOR BARZELLOTTI'S Ethics of Positivism (Charles P. Somerby, New York) is a thoughtful criticism, of a rather desultory kind, of the course of modern thought in psychology and morals, with a view to "defend the principles of morality against the attacks of an empirical utilitarianism." To one already familiar with the history of morals, Professor Barzelotti's volume will be suggestive, interesting, and (to those who sympathize with his evident predilection for intuitionism) pleasing; it will hardly meet the requirements of those who feel the need of a clear, methodical treatment of the subject, based on exact and orderly preliminary statements of the views criticised. To avoid vagueness and attain precision is one of the first requisites of a good treatise on such subjects, and the want of these merits makes itself felt here. Yet there is abundance of clear critical insight and fine ethical perception, and some logical ingenuity. The author concludes that "it is impossible to establish a system of true morality on the method of induction." This conclusion, however, is true only of the induction which builds on an arbitrarily limited experience; it is not true of the induction which builds on experience in its real universality. Ethics cannot yet be regarded as a science, but only as the raw material of a science hereafter to be constructed.

A RETROGRADE IDEAL.

In another column will be found Mr. Putnam's "Statement," which of course we publish without the slightest hesitation, since he asks for its publication as "an act of justice." He declares that it is not "what he has done, but why he has done it, that makes for condemnation or justification." His "statement," accordingly, states nothing as to the facts of his case; it merely contains certain affirmations as to his own motives, and certain other affirmations respecting marriage as an institution. He says:—

"I admit that I have gone against the average moral standard of the community; but in doing so I have appealed to a higher standard—to a more delicate perception of what constitutes a pure and noble life. . . . I appeal from the average moral sentiment of to-day to the enlightened judgment of the future."

Mr. Putnam then proceeds to impeach the "present marriage institution." He avers that this institution is "thoroughly immoral," a "relic of barbarism," the "child of Orthodoxy," a "coarse and degrading method of dealing with the finest affections of which the human soul is capable," a "system of ownership backed up by the brute force of society," a "subjection of man to woman as well as of woman to man," the "outcome of Christian morality and not of scientific morality," etc. He proposes to advocate in its stead what he calls "free marriage," "nobler ideals of marriage," etc. And he "flings his fortunes with the advanced radical reformers"—by whom we understand him to mean the advocates of "free love," as they themselves have chosen to describe and denominate their own theory.

Now the public cares very little for Mr. Putnam's motives. He may or may not have been self-deceived on this head; we are quite willing to believe that he has been the victim of a vicious moral philosophy rather than an intentional wrong-doer. But he makes a fearful mistake when he supposes that his private judgment as to marriage, on which he rests his case, ought to be or will be accepted by the public as final. The sad perversion of his private judgment is evident enough in the extravagantly untrue assertions which he makes respecting the "present marriage institution." He paints it in such colors as to render his picture the grossest of caricatures, even beyond the limit of permissible absurdity. The "child of Orthodoxy," when Orthodoxy is by thousands of years its junior! A "relic of barbarism," when barbarism has no surer test than a low regard for marriage! Such wild vagaries as Mr. Putnam allows himself to advance as illustrating "a more delicate perception of what constitutes a pure and noble life" are simply evidence of a lamentable blunting of his own moral perception, under the influence of an individualism which pays small reverence to the moral experience of mankind.

That "the present marriage institution" is beyond the necessity of further evolution, or will not grow nobler, higher, and purer, in proportion as mankind become gradually wiser and better in other respects, no student of history or sociology would dream of affirming. But its evolution must proceed, as it has proceeded from the beginning, in the direction of strengthening, not weakening, that sense of mutual obligation, that reverence for the grand old virtue of constancy, that sacred devotion of each to each in the spirit of a love that "seeketh not its own," which constitute the real soul of marriage. The old "ownership" which makes Mr. Putnam and other mis-called "radical reformers" so restive, and which they would abolish by extirpating all regard for the binding obligations of marriage, is not the kernel, but the shell; it has for long centuries been growing more and more into a practical veneration for mutual and equal rights and duties, and losing more and more the character of arbitrary constraint. No doubt there is still too much of it left; but the old selfishness and wilfulness are perishing out of marriage day by day, not to make room for that base freedom which is lawlessness, but rather for that higher freedom which is reverence for law—law of the universe, and therefore law of man. Equality is the foundation of true marriage, just as it is of true friendship.

"Ownership," if mutual and equal, is simply another name for reciprocal fidelity; it is exclusive ownership of one by the other, the absorption of one individuality into the other, which alone works misery and wrong. Let husband and wife once recognize the sacred equality of love, which leaves no room for tyranny or selfishness,—let them once learn the great lesson of aiming to give rather than to get happiness through their mutual union,—and the marriage bond, instead of being a yoke to gall, becomes a garland to beautify and bless. Expunge from marriage the binding obligations of mutual duty, self-sacrifice, and constancy, and humanity straightway begins to sink to the level of the brute. Is it from these obligations that Mr. Putnam would have marriage "free"? Then he will find his "ideal" in the wild buffalo herds of the prairies. But civilization has risen, once for all, above the buffalo ideal. Individuals may return to wallow in it, if they will; they will fail to drag the world backwards to share the moral ruin they court for themselves.

THEOLOGY AT HARVARD.

A vigorous effort is being made to increase the endowments of the Cambridge Divinity School so as to add to its professorships. A new fund of one hundred and thirty thousand dollars is asked for. That this school, considered from the stand-point of liberal religion, is the best theological school in the country, all liberal thinkers will be likely to agree. And some of us who have been members of it, though conscious of its limitations, can but feel a grateful interest in its welfare. In spite of its Christian prepossessions, it stimulated free inquiry; and we remember that our minds were there awakened to explore the whole domain of religious truth, though the professors led us only over certain prescribed fields of it. The school, in fact, aroused mental wants and needs, which, by the exigencies of its method and aim, it could not itself supply. Its aim was to produce Christian ministers. Its methods were the product of the assumption that Christianity is a religion of special divine authority. Yet there can be little doubt that, by the encouragement it gave to freethought, it tended constantly to lead its students up to the point where they could not help denying that there was anything exceptional in Christian revelation. And hence into the administration of the school there came inevitable conflict between the intellectual freedom that was inculcated and the assumption, at the foundation of the school, that "Christian truth" must be the absolute and final result of all investigation.

It were to be wished that, with this new effort to strengthen the financial foundations of the school and enlarge its resources of instruction, the attempt might be made to broaden the foundation principles of the school, and reform and liberalize its methods, so that it might itself answer all the demands made upon it by the spirit of mental liberty which it professes to cherish and does incite. But the appeal which has been issued in pamphlet form to solicit contributions, though containing many single expressions looking strongly in the direction of such a change, evidently as a whole contemplates no such fundamental reform as that here indicated. Indeed, what is most painfully apparent in the appeal is the attempt to reconcile those two absolutely irreconcilable things which the school has always shown to be in conflict—mental liberty and Christian finality. Or, rather, the authors write as if there were no such conflict. They put the whole stress of their appeal upon the ground that the fundamental principle of the school is "absolute freedom of inquiry," and it is only by incidental phrases that the reader learns that the "free inquiry" must lead up to a Christian goal!

President Eliot, for instance, in his clean-cut statement, speaks as if he had in mind and at heart a genuine school for the science of religion, in which all branches of study should be conducted strictly by the scientific method. And there is reason to believe that he really desires to see such a department of theology attached to Harvard University. He describes it as "a school for the exposition, not the imposition, of opinions; a school in which one may study theology and the kindred subjects with the same freedom of spirit with which he may study law, medicine, or engineering, in the appropriate schools." And again he speaks of the school as "not pledged to anything save perfect liberty," and of Unitarians as hitherto the natural supporters of the school because they "have a practical faith in liberty" and "hold that true religion consists not in dogma or observance, but in personal goodness." Still again, he says, "In all departments of learning, gradual change of opinion is nowadays recognized as the law. Who dreams now of fixed opinions in history, philology, philosophy, or jurisprudence? . . . We are rapidly approaching the time when the untrammelled study of theology in a university or unsectarian seminary, as a noble branch of learning, will be the most natural—I had almost said the only respectable—way of preparing for the ministry." These are strong, true words, well spoken. And it is only when President Eliot quotes from the fundamental rule laid down by the founders of the school—namely, that “every encouragement shall be given to the unbiased investigation of Christian truth”—that we begin to see that it is liberty of investigation between the sects of Christianity, and not with reference to Christianity itself, to which his words must be limited. If he himself sees farther than this, he does not venture to hint it. Yet we can hardly believe that, with his scientifically trained mind, he does not see that there can be no really free study of religion which does not proceed with Christianity in the same way as it proceeds with other religions.

In other portions of the pamphlet, the same keynote of liberty is struck and persistently played upon, but with the same fatal incidental limitation to the exceptional character and authority of the Christian religion. Dr. Bellows, in his long and very interesting address, rises to impassioned eloquence over “the priceless boon of full liberty of thinking and inquiring in religious matters.” But the phrases “Christ” and “Christianity” come in here and there to indicate in what direction he thinks liberty will go, and at what station stop. The entire Committee together, in their introductory statement, put the antagonism in a nutshell, though apparently in innocent unconsciousness of it, when they say first that the school is founded and administered “solely in the interest of truth,” and then immediately add that it realizes and reconciles both mottoes of the College, the more ancient one, Veritas, and the newer one, Christo et Ecclesie. But the curriculum of studies indicated at the end of the pamphlet shows that this harmony between the mottoes is only obtained by the latter swallowing the former.

Hence, however interested liberal thinkers may be in watching the progress of the school and in the excellent work done there by some of its professors, yet the school is not such as to satisfy their ideal of mental freedom or their conviction as to the kind of theological department which Harvard University ought to have.

W. J. P.

SOCIAL REFORM.

As between optimists and pessimists there is so much to be said on either side, it may well be supposed that, as usual, the golden mean of positivism (the actual, as opposed to the ideal, condition of affairs affecting humanity) presents that juste milieu which wise and impartial observers of the course of events must needs accept, as a starting-point for any argument concerning the possibilities of the future.

Let it be understood, however, that because one doubts the dogmas of Communism it does not follow one may not be as desirous of ameliorating the condition of one's fellow-man as the most altruistic believer in sentimental socialism! It is conceded then at the outset, that a man must not live for himself alone; that, while selfishness must still continue the mainspring of human nature, it should be so subordinated to an enlightened sense of mutual duties and responsibilities, as to make it evident that a man's career must be of benefit to the world at large in some way to justify his right to existence. In fact we may accept the axiom, “Each for all, and all for each,” as containing, in a general way, the position a man should sustain towards society.

But here the individualist parts company with the communist, inasmuch as the former insists that function and capacity must of necessity determine a human being's sphere of action; and it is no more permitted to the artist, sculptor, poet, or philosopher to dull his intellectual powers by grubbing the soil for a living, than it is possible for a brawny “stevedore” to create the Farnese Hercules or Venus of Milo. Until a definite exposition of what is understood by “Communism,” by its admirers, is ventured upon in the columns of THE INDEX, there is no opportunity of coming to an assured conclusion regarding it here. But any scheme which includes universal community of property, enforced by the State, against the wishes of capitalists and landed proprietors, or that seeks to carry this theory still farther, to its legitimate and inevitable result, of community of wives and children, is utterly opposed to the natural instincts of the more cultured classes throughout the civilized world, and must expect to encounter their opposition, which can only be overcome by their thorough extermination!

Were all the wealth of the Rothachids to be subdivided to-morrow among the proletarians of France, it would scarcely make an appreciable difference to the latter, nor would one in ten thousand of the working-men be permanently benefited by the share he would receive. That, in the course of a few weeks or months at the longest, the knaves would have garnered in the large proportion, at the expense of the fools; the liquor-makers and sellers, at the cost of the consumers of alcohol—who can doubt? But if it be wrong to accumulate millions of money, it is only wrong in a less degree to hoard up thousands, or even hundreds. In nine cases out of ten, in a democratic Republic like the United States of North America, the possession of wealth indicates thrift, perseverance, hard work, and self-sacrifice on the part of its owner, or his or her immediate progenitor. Conceding that, if everybody would go to work to plant the wheat that he consumes, or to assist in some one of the many avocations essential to his comfort, there would be less work for the farmer, carpenter, tailor, to do; that if every man was his own valet, there would be no need of domestic servants; that if every one obeyed the laws voluntarily, we could at once dispense with courts, police, army, navy, and the legal profession,—it yet remains to be proved, that the multiplication of creature comforts for the poorer classes that might thus be expected would really elevate society at large. Increase the material prosperity of the working-classes, and experience shows they will soon multiply so fast in numbers as to necessitate recourse to Malthusian methods of keeping down population, or else gravitate back to the former standard of living. The individualist insists that all true reforms are moral before they are manifest in material results, and that the way to elevate the position of the proletarians is, not by reducing hours of labor, or raising the wages of employés; still less by taking the savings of the economically disposed classes and dividing them out among the dissipated, the indolent, and the vicious members of society, but by educating the youth of the country in such a way as to enable them—if they have the “right stuff” in them—to realize the advantage in the long run of fixed habits, good principles, and high character; to point out examples worthy of imitation in the careers of men like Benjamin Franklin; to insist that nothing worth having comes without diligent application and strenuous labor; that ends are proportional to means; and to demonstrate that none but weaklings, destined to fail in the battle of life, ever prate about “changing their environment,” but that true men go quietly to work to govern circumstances over which they have and can have no other control, by making the best of them! Those theorists who sit down upon the river's bank to whine that some one has not built a bridge that they might cross dry-shod, will wait until they are hungry, if not ragged, and have to wade through at last!

Genuine “reform” is an inward and not an outward growth; the world can never do for us what we should do for ourselves. Socrates, in his rags and poverty, was the admiration of Athens in its best days, and humanity shall do him honor to remotest generations; but Bottom, the weaver, though tricked out in the garb of royalty and courted by a queen, only compels our laughter! Whence the difference, and what the moral? Not what a man has or enjoys, but what he is, marks his measure and weight in the universe. Nor could all the smoothing away of the obstacles of life so much desired by communists, do more than raise up a race of slaves unfit, because unable, to exist as self-dependent freemen!

ALBERT WARREN KELSEY.

THE TENDENCY TO INQUISITION.

If I go into my neighbor's house, which according to Anglo-Saxon notions is his castle, and find there books, pictures, statues, which I think of immoral tendency, I shall have no more right without his consent to destroy them than he will have to come into my house and destroy what he thinks of immoral tendency there. But if either comes into the castle of the other and brings things which are offensive and disgusting to the lord or lady of the castle, the said lord or lady has a natural right to abate the nuisance with the least possible violence, and to seek aid in doing the same.

If I go out of my house into the people's highway, so long as I hinder no one and do nothing which will necessarily or probably injure or endanger any one, I seem to have the same right to protect myself or be protected there as in my own house, or as any other person has in his, or there. But if I there provoke a breach of the peace by language or signs which are conventionally considered indecent or insulting, I shall forfeit any legal right I may have had to protection, and shall doubtless see the inside of a jail or lunatic asylum. I may be right or I may be wrong as to the conventionality which I have treated with disrespect; but the law, which undertakes to keep the peace at all hazards, cannot, on account of its imperfection of insight and foresight, always distinguish between words or signs and overt acts. In certain circumstances, it must treat words the same as blows, because, as any intelligent writer or speaker must know, blows are sure to follow on the instant. But this is the limit. Law trenches on liberty, fatally trenches, the moment it punishes a word on account of its tendency or remote consequences,—that is to say, its assumed sinfulness; for omniscience only can judge of that. It must be allowed to punish certain things not wrong in themselves, on account of the incompatibility of the circumstances: as fast driving in crowded streets, or noisy driving in the neighborhood of public assemblies.

These principles seem to me to limit the function of government in regard to interference with liberty in the private or family domicile, and in public resorts.

Now the public mails are simply an extension of the rights of the castle, the private or family domicile. The public mail-carrier in being stone blind to the moral character or moral tendency of what a man puts into the mail under seal or wrapper, is no more morally responsible to God or man than he is for what the same man keeps in his house or castle. It is simply none of his business. Let us suppose the mail matter is addressed to a minor party that did not seek or expect it, a party unfortunately left by unwise parents or guardians “open to such influences,” to use the language of Judge Benedict, and that it is of such a character as actually to seduce the recipient into criminal conduct. This is the strongest case in favor of a postal statute of any kind to exclude matter on moral grounds. What is the natural remedy, in the light of the principles above stated? Precisely the same as when a dose of arsenic is sent by A in one State, with advice to B in another to commit a murder with it. The State law where the crime is committed, with the comity of States, is quite competent to deal with all the criminals in the case. But suppose the matter is addressed to an adult by his or her own request. Then what has Colgate, Comstock, Dr. John Hall, Mr. Edward Everett Hale, Mr. Abbot, or our Uncle Samuel to do with it, any more than with what is inside of our castles or hovels? They are worse than the slaveholders dared to be, if they meddle with it at all.

I have been speaking of matter under wrapper or seal. Suppose it open like a postal card, then it is or may be a flagrant insult to the employees of the post-office itself, and by postal regulations they should have relief from it, as in fact they have, without any intervention of Comstock. People in the mails as well as elsewhere must keep their indecency to themselves.

Now supposing Congress has the constitutional right to undertake the impossible task of excluding from the mails all wrapped and sealed matter which is really obscene, it by no means follows that it ought to attempt it, because—

1. Such matter is perfectly harmless in transitu.
2. It yields revenue and helps pay the expense of the mails.
3. It can better be suppressed, if it is to be, by municipal and State laws, and with less danger to innocent publications.
4. It is utterly impossible, whether we give $5000 or $500,000 for it, to have a statute drawn up either positively or negatively defining obscenity, which will not practically amount to a censorship of the press on all topics that relate to sex.
5. That is the subject on which the public can least afford to have a censorship.

6. There is no evidence that the diffusion of really obscene publications has been increased by the facility of sending them through the mails. The statements of what has been so sent have been made by self-convicted liars, without opportunity for cross examination. For example, what credence can be given to the story lately told in the Advertiser, that one newspaper office in Rochester printed three million five hundred thousand circulars devoted to the business of obscenity, and that one hundred thousand obscene books were destroyed in that city, which had cost $600 to print and would bring $50,000 at retail price? Credat Judæus! Surely if a man can earn $4000 a year by drawing a long bow, Anthony Comstock has done it. The Christians who can believe such a story must have been “born to be cheated.”

Now I do most respectfully and earnestly protest against the statement that "Repealers, in addition to that complete protection for liberty of opinion which the reformers equally demand, demand unrestricted freedom for the vile stuff known as 'obscene literature' to circulate through the mails." Whether this is said by Rev. Joseph Cook, the forlorn Bostonian editor of the Christian Statesman, or my excellent and always intentionally truthful friend Mr. Abbot, I cannot believe it. I could not believe it even if it were sworn to by that great Christian statesman, Simon Cameron; the still more celebrated biographer of Christ, Henry Ward Beecher; the Pope of Rome and the whole Brooklyn Presbytery. I don't see how it is possible for me to believe it, except by the method Pascal recommended for believing in the incredible dogmas of Christianity, to wit: act as if I believed, take holy water, have masses said, etc., a method which he appears to have tried effectually himself, for he says: naturellement même cela fera croire et vous abêtira. Self-stupefaction! Make yourself a sheep, and you will believe the lies of the shepherd!

What I do believe is, that the repealers in the National Liberal League, with no exception that either Mr. Cook or Mr. Abbot will think proper to point out by name, as much detest obscenity and as little demand its free circulation as either of themselves, and that all they demand is simply that freedom of the mails and of the press to which every citizen has a right guaranteed by the Constitution, and which under the present inquisitorial and persecuting spirit of the petted and pampered church corporations, he cannot be at all sure of, under any law the reformers have yet proposed. And I believe it might as truly and charitably and decently be said of all persons opposed, to giving the federal courts criminal jurisdiction in the States, that they are in favor of free murder. Is a man in favor of crime because he wishes to localize the power to punish it? or because he thinks it should not be punished in a way sure to increase it? It was the profound and impartial Beccaria who said, "An overgrown republic can only be saved from despotism by subdividing it into a number of confederate republics." The wise framers of our Constitution had read and made a note of this, and they took the utmost pains to forestall Beccaria's terrible remedy for the overgrowth of a centralized republic, by restricting the power to punish as much as possible to the separate States, and giving the general government as little power to punish as it could have without peril to its existence. They took care to avoid a mistake which, once made, could not be remedied except by revolution. It has been reserved for this second century to forget all this, and to take, in the interest of bigotry and superficial morality, the most dangerous step ever yet taken towards the despotism of an "overgrown republic." There is no use of spreading a thicker mantle of decency over the shameful tracks. The only question is, Shall the wrong step be retraced before it is too late? E. W.

[The statement against which a protest is above made may be restated thus: "reformers" demand that there shall be no restriction upon the circulation by mail of any except really obscene literature, but that there shall be a restriction upon this; "repealers" demand that there shall be no restriction upon the circulation by mail of any literature whatever, and therefore that there shall be no restriction upon the circulation of really obscene literature by mail. How this statement can be denied passes our comprehension. Our friend himself enumerates above six distinct reasons, formally numbered as such, why Congress ought not to exercise the power, even if constitutional, of restricting the circulation of such literature by mail. These six reasons are simply a demonstration of the absolute accuracy of the statement against which he nevertheless protests. By his own showing, the protest is utterly without foundation. It can only be sustained by mentioning some restriction upon the circulation of such literature by mail which the "repealers" do demand.—ED.]

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

There is a choir in every tree.

Mexico has only two cotton factories.

Dakota has a farm of forty thousand acres.

Boston is to have a new evening penny newspaper.

Twenty-four Lutheran ministers died in this country last year.

Peter's Pence for January and February produced 1,800,000 lire.

More than one-half the inhabitants of Italy can neither read nor write.

Female teachers receive higher salaries in San Francisco than in any other city.

There are one hundred and eighty-five tribes of Indians yet left in the United States.

The King of Siam has established a system of general education throughout his dominion.

A public reception is to be given Mr. O. B. Frothingham before he leaves for Europe in May.

The number of dissenters in Russia at present comprises about one-sixth of the entire population.

The height of the atmosphere, commonly estimated at forty-five or fifty miles, is in reality unknown.

It is rumored that Gov. Talbot will place two or three women on the new board of State charities.

Nearly ten thousand negroes have left the State of Louisiana during the present emigration fever.

The council before which Rev. Dr. Talmage is being tried calls itself a "Court of the Lord Jesus Christ."

The inducements offered by the Index Association to new subscribers for THE INDEX will be continued until July 1.

Ruskin is his own publisher, and makes the declaration positive that some of his works will never be republished.

Fashionable Christians of New York go to hear a Quaker lady, named Mrs. Bottome, give Bible-readings and talks.

The next course of lectures on preaching to the Yale theological students is to be delivered by Dr. Howard Crosby.

The Suez Canal cost $92,273,907. The saving of distance to the British ships going to India is almost five thousand miles.

The Moscow Gazette says that a woman was buried alive as a witch by the inhabitants of the village of Wratshevo a short time ago.

Since the compulsory education law went into effect, there has been a decrease of twenty-four per cent. of juvenile criminals in New York City.

The papers are endeavoring to establish Madame Bonaparte's plety on the fact that she is known to have prayed devoutly every night and morning.

Mr. John B. Gough has probably the finest collection in existence of Cruikshank's works. It numbers nearly twelve hundred of his best etchings.

A nephew of the poet Keats, bearing his name, is a civil engineer in Missouri. He is an elderly bachelor, and the name of Keats promises to die with him.

Women in Austria perform the duties of bricklayers and laborers, and many may be seen carrying hods of mortar and baskets of bricks up high ladders.

Ex-Gov. McCormick says that American scales, watches, locomotives, anthracite coal, and fine machinery pleased Europeans most at the Paris exposition.

Mlle. Sarah Bernhardt, who has figured as actor, sculptor, painter, and writer, sighs for other fields in which to shine, and is announced to appear soon as a lecturer.

The sediment in the water discharged by the Mississippi River in one year would make a piece of land one mile square and reach a height of two hundred and sixty-eight feet.

Robert Browning, Berthold Auerbach, and Mrs. Stowe are all sixty-six years old. Victor Hugo is seventy-six, Ruskin is fifty-nine, Tennyson is sixty-nine, and Frode sixty.

The Whitehall Review says that in Wiesbaden, if you attack the Creator, you get fourteen days imprisonment; but if you are so unfortunate as to libel Bismarck, they give you seven months.

The Americans will soon be the richest people in the world. In 1870 the valuation of real and personal estate, exclusive of government property, in all the States and Territories was $30,088,518,607.

Rev. C. A. Bartol offers to be one of a suitable number of persons to give $100 each, leaving others to contribute larger or smaller sums than that, to procure a monument to Wm. Ellery Channing in Boston.

The publishers of Scribner's Monthly announce the early appearance of a number of papers on the inventions and inventive methods of Mr. Edison, to be written by Mr. Edwin M. Fox, an intimate friend of the great inventor.

M. Castelar, of Spain, in speaking of Thiers as President of the French Republic, declares that the work which he performed as a statesman was more important than that which Washington carried to a conclusion in the United States.

It is said that a lady in New Orleans, out of her private purse, supports an asylum containing one hundred and fifty inmates. This is sensible charity, and does mankind far more good than leaving a large fortune to build a large and useless church.

The Gower telephone is described as the latest improvement in that invention. Professor Tyndall recently gave a lecture on the subject. A perfectly audible message can be easily transmitted without the aid of any battery by this new instrument.

Prof. Adler is about to move his society from Standard Hall to Chickering Hall for more room. This society is constantly increasing in numbers, and the attempt of Prof. Adler to organize human beings for ethical culture bids fair to be a success.

There is trouble in Rio Janeiro between the Church and State. The Catholic Bishop desires to rule in certain civil matters and demands the suppression of the Freemasons, while the governmental authorities are not willing to surrender their control.

The statement is made that an Egyptian desert-snail received at the British Museum in 1846, remained in a dormant state for four years; and, notwithstanding the fact that he eat not a mouthful of food during this time, he was as well and flourishing as when he was first received.

Boston has one doctor to every four hundred and twenty-five persons, or eight hundred and twenty-five in all. In the United States there are no less than seventy-five thousand physicians of all schools, besides a large number of individuals that sail under the title of Dr. who have not received a medical training.

Goldie, the naturalist, has found in New Guinea a tribe who suggested to him the origin of the rumors always current of a race of tailed men in some corner of the globe. These natives wear artificial tails. They are entirely naked, except for the caudal ornament, which is a plait of grass fastened round their loins by a fine string, and depending behind to about half way down their legs.

France has a society called "The League of Instruction." The league is the centre of four hundred educational societies with thirty-five thousand members. Thus far the league has established two hundred and forty-six libraries for the villagers and one hundred and seventy-one for soldiers, and has made contributions to over two hundred libraries that were previously in existence.

In every Italian school, public or private, girls are taught to sew and embroider, and as soon as they can they take their own dresses to school to make them themselves. The American people are beginning to see that it is essential to teach the young to do something. The equipment a boy or girl gets from a few text-books is small help in the battle of life. A wholly new system of instruction will have to be adopted before our children will receive any education worth the name.

Cremation meets with but little opposition in Germany. At Gotha, where the ceremony was lately performed, the Protestant clergy of the place were present and gave countenance to it by their assistance. In England, however, the cremation society started there is indignantly assailed by the citizens as a revival of heathenism. But as the feeling against the practice of burning the body after death rests upon sentiment merely, it will have to give way to the stronger power of sanitary considerations.

By what right does the world follow Jesus? Every soul should be a leader. Every one should be going the way to God. Running after Jesus is asking to have the light of his lantern. Why does he carry the torch for the whole world? Why have you let your lamps go out? We do not want man on his knees to somebody else. We want him above begging. There is humility in one man serving another; there is none in asking assistance. We should not say: "Who will help us?" but should look about to see whom we can assist.

In New York City there has been organized a Business Men's Society for the encouragement of moderate drinking. The project was launched by such men as Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby, Rev. O. B. Frothingham, Peter Cooper, and others of like prominence and well-known philanthropic motives. There is no doubt but that total abstinence will only be reached by gradual steps, and that one way towards stopping men from drinking intoxicating liquors is to have them begin by drinking less. Every movement to make the world better is to be encouraged, and there is chance for a great deal more temperance among mankind.

A letter was received at the Newport post-office Tuesday directed to "Hon. Wm. Ellery Channing, Newport, R.I.," asking of that gentleman his autograph, to be placed with those of other distinguished men of the present generation, and also expressing the hope that "God, in His infinite mercy, may grant the wishes of thousands, and allow the honored man to live to see the centennial of his existence." Postmaster Coggeshall, not being able to forward the letter to "the last and usual place of abode" of the distinguished gentleman, felt justified in opening and reading it, and, having done so, it was "too good to keep."—Boston Herald, April 9.

Carlyle thus describes his impressions of Methodism: "I have ceased to think as highly of that people as I used to do. I went to the Wesleyan Chapel at Derbyshire Peaks. A man got up and preached with extraordinary fluency and vehemence, and I was astonished at his eloquence. They told me that he was a nail-maker; that he wrought six days in the week with his own hands for his daily bread, and preached upon the seventh day without charge. And when he had ended, another man came forward and prayed; and I was greatly moved by the unction of his prayer. And they told me that he was a rope-maker, and that he tolled as the other. But the sum and end of all the fluency and vehemence of the sermon, and of all the fervor of the prayer, was: 'Lord, save us from hell!' and I went away musing, sick at heart, saying to myself: 'My good fellows, why all this bother and noise? If it be God's will, why not go and be damned in quiet, and say never a word about it?' And I, for one, would think far better of you." So it seemed to me that your Wesleyans made cowards; and I would have no more to do with their praying and their preaching."

Communications.

A STATEMENT BY S. P. PUTNAM.

I have no desire to bring my family affairs before the public. I shall not take the trouble to deny the misrepresentations and exaggerations of newspaper reports. Only the keenest and calmest judgment can decide as to the right and wrong, the folly or wisdom of my course; and then only after the most patient investigation. The question is not one of outward action so much as of inward motive. It is not what I have done, but why I have done it, that makes for condemnation or justification.

I cannot explain matters in a short newspaper article, and I do not purpose to do so. I will simply say that after the intensest suffering, which has shaken my being to its very centre, which has brought me face to face with God and made my soul naked to the eternal truth, I have nothing to regret. I have no backward step to take. I feel thoroughly justified for the course I have taken.

I have committed no crime. I have not invaded the rights of a single individual. If any affirm that I have, I demand proof. I am ready to meet the issue in the full light of day before any competent tribunal.

I admit that I have gone against the average moral standard of the community; but in doing so I have appealed to a higher standard, to a more delicate perception of what constitutes a pure and noble life. I have not acted according to individual whim, but deepest conviction. I have obeyed that which I believe to be the divine part of my being. I have acted with sincerity, honesty, and with my reason alive. My whole manhood, my conscience, my vision of the truth, acquit me of any wrong-doing.

I appeal from the average moral sentiment of today to the enlightened judgment of the future.

I have nothing to keep back. I am free to say that I consider the present marriage institution to be thoroughly immoral. It is a relic of barbarism, the child of Orthodoxy, a coarse and degrading method of dealing with the finest affections of which the human soul is capable. It is a system of ownership backed up by the brute force of society. It is a subjection of man to woman as well as of woman to man, a subjection which is an infinite curse, for it is a subjection of the innermost impulse, not to moral principle, but to undiscerning social interference.

In the place of ownership-marriage I would substitute a free marriage. I believe in marriage,—that is, in the orderly coming together of man and woman for the making of a home and family. I believe in marriage, the home, and the family; these are the bloom and fruit, the glory and the poetry of our highest civilization. But I believe that they can flourish best in the atmosphere of perfect liberty.

Even as religion must be free, even so must marriage be free; but, as I would not release religion from the eternal moral obligation, so I would not release marriage from the same obligation. I would make marriage the continuous expression of the finest morality—the exquisite bloom of the inward law.

In overthrowing the present system, which is the outcome of Christian morality and not of scientific morality, I wish it to be understood that I am not laboring for license, but for nobler ideals of marriage. Marriage is a gift of the past, but an imperfect gift. I would unfold it, even as I would unfold religion, into freedom, that it may give greater courage, hope, and inspiration, and make man and woman more pure and lofty, more delicately regardful of one another's honor and purity.

The marriage-question is the most unsettled question of the day. It demands the most thorough discussion. The whole world is throbbing with it. If liberals refuse to meet this question in the fair daylight of science, they are false to their trust.

I reject the old theology, and with it the old morality; but, in making a new morality, I do not purpose to follow my individual inclination, but the free, universal reason of humanity, guided by experience. To such a tribunal I gladly submit. There was a time when the Bible was considered too sacred a thing to reason about; and marriage even by many radical thinkers is looked upon in the same way. But if free thought is to be applied to the Bible, it certainly is to be applied to marriage; and social institutions and moralities are to be handled with the same fearlessness that we handle doctrines and theologies.

My best thought tells me that the old conception of the Bible is wrong. It as plainly tells me that the old conception of marriage is wrong. I can but follow my thought in both cases.

I believe in liberalism, not for the sake of immorality, but for the sake of work, development and culture,—because I see in liberalism the gospel of the future,—because I see in it happiness and advancement for man and woman.

I do not wish to drag liberals to my "level." I am not satisfied with my "level"; my ideal is still far away on the mountain heights. I still struggle for it; but in trying to reach it I can only be true to myself. I must take the path that my own conscience points out. I can obey no other mandate.

I fling my fortunes with the advanced radical reformers; whether I do so from a high moral purpose or mere selfish impulse, time will tell.

So far as my conduct is concerned, I court the severest criticism. I have no favors to ask. I do not desire charity, but simple justice. I do not pray for forgiveness, but for the full light of heaven.

I have done nothing but what has been sanctioned by Luther, Melancthon, Milton, Goethe, Shelley, John Stuart Mill, and George Elliot. With these illustrious spirits to justify the principles by which I have been guided, I have no fear of the final verdict.

"Evil is rampant, but soon known and proved,—
While goodness slowly surges to its height,
Slowly through darkening circumstance flames forth,
Slowly becomes to mortal view the right,—
Slowly because it is so deep, so vast,
So noble, when it triumphs at the last."

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

THE APPROACH OF SCIENCE.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I was so struck with the beauty and scope of the accompanying extract, contained in the second volume of Taine's English Literature, that I transcribed it for republication in THE INDEX, if agreeable to you, and consistent with the rules adopted by you in the conduct of your excellent paper. Of course, to yourself and many of your readers, it will not be new; but it is more than possible that to a larger number it would be, and it is for the gratification of such that I ask for it a place in your columns.

Cordially yours,
DANIEL CONY.

WOBURN, April 12, 1879.

Hitherto, in our judgments on men, we have taken for our masters the oracles and poets, and like them we have received for certain truths the noble dreams of our imagination and the imperious suggestions of our heart. We have bound ourselves to the partiality of religious divinations and the inexactness of literary divinations, and we have shaped our doctrines by our instincts and our vexations. Science at last approaches, and approaches man. It has gone beyond the visible and palpable world of stars, stones, plants, among which man disdainfully confined her. It reaches the heart, provided with exact and penetrating implements, whose justness has been proved, and their reach measured by three hundred years of experience. Thought, with its development and rank, its structure and relations, its deep material roots, its infinite growth through history, its lofty bloom at the summit of things, becomes the object of science,—an object which, sixty years ago, it foresaw in Germany, and which, slowly and surely probed by the same methods as the physical world, will be transformed before our eyes as the physical world has been transformed. It is already being transformed, and we have left behind us the point of view of Byron and our poets. No; man is not an abortion or a monster; no; the business of poetry is not to revolt or defame him. He is in his place, and completes a chain. Let us watch him grow and increase, and we shall cease to rail at or curse him. He, like everything else, is a product, and as such it is right he should be what he is. His innate imperfection is in order, like the constant abortion of a stamen in a plant, like the fundamental irregularity of four facets in a crystal. What we took for a deformity is a form; what seemed to us the contradiction is the accomplishment of a law. Human reason and virtue have as their elements animal instincts and images, as living forms have for theirs physical laws, as organic matters have for theirs mineral substances. What wonder if virtue or reason, like living form or organic matter, sometimes falls or decomposes, since like them, and like every superior and complex existence, they have for support and control inferior and simple forces, which, according to circumstances, now maintain it by their harmony, now mar it by their discord? What wonder if the elements of existence, like those of quantity, receive, from their very nature, the irresistible laws which constrain and reduce them to a certain species and order of formation? Who will rise up against geometry? Who, especially, will rise up against a living geometry? Who will not, on the other hand, feel moved with admiration at the sight of those grand powers which, situated at the heart of things, incessantly urge the blood through the limbs of the old world, disperse the showers in the infinite network of arteries, and spread over the whole surface the eternal flower of youth and beauty? Who, in short, will not feel himself ennobled when he finds that this pile of laws results in a regular series of forms, that matter has thought for its goal, and that this ideal from which, through so many errors, all the aspirations of men depend, is also the centre whereto converge, through so many obstacles, all the forces of the universe? In this employment of science and in this conception of things, there is a new art, a new morality, a new polity, a new religion, and it is in the present time our task to discover them.—Taine's English Literature, Vol. II., pages 311 and 312.

FIRST LIBERAL LEAGUE OF BOSTON.

The monthly meeting was held at No. 4, Park Street, on Sunday afternoon, April 20, the parlors being filled to the utmost and giving an overflow to entry and side-room, the attendance was so large. An essay on "Religion and Morality" was read by Mr. Wm. J. Potter of New Bedford. The special theories of pietist and moralist were held to light, showing the contempt of the former for the "filthy rags of mere morality," and the lofty disregard of the latter of the vagaries of religious ecstasy. The writer laid repeated and vigorous emphasis upon the importance of the moral element, while yet giving full scope for the development of that which is termed religious aspiration. He cited the words of Matthew Arnold which call religion "morality suffused with emotion," afterward adding quotations from the same author more fully illustrating the idea. The essayist gave his own modified view of this theory, desiring a clearer expression of the object of this "emotion" as the Infinite, but agreeing in the main with the preponderant stress assigned to morals. The proportion of conduct stood as three-fourths to one-quarter in its relation to emotion. Liberals hold the religionist to sharp criticism for his neglect of practice in the blind adherence to faith, too often forgetting that they thus lay themselves under manifold bonds for personal righteousness.

At the close of the essay, the air from Haydn's "Creation" celebrating the awakening of Nature's emerald was sung by a member of the League, and then the cross-questioning began. In this discussion ramblers were not wholly silent, but it drew forth yet other valuable thoughts from the essayist, as well as significant words bearing on the question from the chairman, Mr. Abbot.

At the next meeting, on the 18th of May, a paper on "The Meeting of Extremes" will be presented by Mr. T. W. Higginson. J. P. T.

"STICK!"

UPPER GLOUCESTER, Me., April 17, 1879.

DEAR FRIEND ABBOT:—

I regret exceedingly the circumstances making necessary the long controversy upon a side-issue which the League never should have become involved in, if people could have been satisfied to let it do its legitimate work. But as it has been drawn into the question, let there be no backing down; for you are clearly in the right, and it is better to be longer in attaining the purpose of secularizing the State and nation on a basis of purity than to succeed sooner, if possible, on a basis of obscenity. If the nation is to be corrupt in morals, let it remain as it is, and let Christianity (such as it is) bear the responsibility of not having conserved purity in Church and State. "Hope on, hope ever." "The morning cometh, and also the night, but the night first!"—but at length the day breaketh. D. S. GRANDIN.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—The staunch ground you have taken against "repeal" and in favor of "reform" is quieting my fears for the ultimate principles which shall be evolved out of the liberal movement.

I thank you for your persistent consistency in favor of reform and freedom, in No. 485 of THE INDEX. LAURA E. FARRAR.

PAXTON, Ill., April 15, 1879.

"LAW-ABIDING."

TIPPECANOE CITY, Ohio, April 12, 1879.

MR. ABBOT:—

I cannot think it possible that there is any free-thinker in science, politics, religion, or morals, who would not acknowledge his obligation to obey in a practical way, when such obedience was required by a law of his country legally enacted, or else acknowledge his just liability to suffer the consequence of disobedience. Certainly, no one would say, for practical purposes: "My individual opinions should be carried out in opposition to the opinions of all others, supported by requirements of law." If there are any such, I am not one of them. On the other hand, if there are any who would say that the opinions of all the world, sanctioned by law, in either science, politics, religion, or morals, should bind my conscience to such opinions, I am not one of them. And I think about here, in several millions of years, all the world will stand.

Respectfully, E. L. CRANE.

A BEAUTIFUL English lady was walking in the Rue de la Paix, when a French dandy greatly annoyed her by pertinaciously dogging her and glaring at her. She turned upon him and said: "Really, I have not a single son to give you."

MISS MADEUP OLDGAL: "Yes, I love the old oak; it is associated with so many happy hours spent beneath its shade. It carries me back to my childhood, when—when—" Young Fuddle: "When you—er—planted it?"—Funny Folks.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	"	8	"	"	"
" 26 " 51 "	"	6	"	"	"
" 52 " "	"	5	"	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEINBERG.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with 'decreasing interest.'"

Send $3.50 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Galthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna O. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal
DEVOTED TO
FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work: A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.....	1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	1.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Treasury.....	2.25
The World-Friend.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	3.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWELL). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	3.00
COONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COBBELLATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Position to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	1.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	1.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Adam Bede.....	1.00
Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Stilas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gottfried Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 5 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	1.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of Humboldt. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	16.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	2.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lyg.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopea the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERHOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.25
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.50
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Joseph F. Cooke, Jr.....	3.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. G. W. Russell, of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KER (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	3.00
LEOKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	3.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. E.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.....	2.00
Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.35
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	3.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	3.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE ORANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MULLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Kikoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.50
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLXV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PEOOTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PEOOTER (RICHARD A.). Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Sonnet, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expense of Heaven.....	2.50
ROSETTI (CHRISTINA G.). A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.). Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Spectral Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	4.50
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 26 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS). The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.75
STRAUSS (D. F.). The Old Faith and the New.....	1.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	7.50
The Glass-Boon Taine, History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	1.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmund, and Level the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THACKERAY'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.). The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 1 vol.....	1.50
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.15
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	1.50
On Sound.....	1.50
Radiant Heat.....	1.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSE (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	1.50
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	1.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Scatterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	1.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folk.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.50
Pandies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTEK'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

321 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE

INDEX for
1878,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

M. J. SAVAGE'S NEW NOVEL,

Bluffton,

Describing in a very interesting way the processes of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical. 12mo. Price $1.50.

Also, by the same author,

The Religion of Evolution:

"An exposition of religion in the light of the most advanced science. A brave and reverent thinker."—London Inquirer. Price $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

UNITY.

A FORTNIGHTLY ORGAN OF

Freedom, Fellowship, and Character in Religion.

Editor.—H. M. SIMMONS. Publishing Committee.—ROBERT COLLYER, J. L. JONES, C. W. WENDT, J. C. LEARNED, W. C. GANNETT.

Vol. III., beginning March 1, 1879, will contain Robert Collyer's "Table Talk"; two series of articles on "The Liberal Preachers of America out of the Pulpit" (our Poets and Essayists), and "The Growth of Doctrine, or the Old-New Creed"; Unity Sunday-school Lessons, etc.

Price $1.50 a year. Clubs of 10 at $1.25.

Room 57, 75 MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.*THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. R. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

NORTHERN LITERATURE AND ART ROOMS

will immediately be opened in Boston by Miss Marie A. Brown, for the purpose of giving due prominence to the many beautiful productions of Sweden, Norway, Finland, and Denmark, comprising the literature, English translations and originals, illustrated works, views, photographs, portraits, and paintings and statuary of the most celebrated Northern artists. The "Rooms" will be elegant in all their appointments, an attractive resort for all art-loving people and purchasers.

That it may become an international affair, Miss Brown invites all Americans and Scandinavians who are interested in the enterprise, and wish it success, to aid her efforts by subscribing the requisite fund. One thousand persons are desired who will each subscribe $10.00, for which Nadeshda, a poem by Runeberg, and a full set of The Surgeon's Stories, six historical novels by Topellus, as translated and published by her, will be sent them in return, as they are issued.

MARIE A. BROWN,
P.O. Box 900, BOSTON, MASS.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on New Issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Author of Supernatural Religion,
Lionel A. Tallemaque, Sir John Lubbock,
M. M. Grant Duff, M.P., Anthony Trollope,
Hon. Robert Lowe, T. Adolphus Trollope,
Lealie Stephen, Sir H. S. Maine,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir David Wedderburn,
G. H. Lewes, AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 80 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?

11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.

23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidence for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 18 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. O. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1873, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS*For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Gort. Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Keunen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament (in preparation). Price $1.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.00.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 228 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 165 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 163 pages. Price $1.25.

THE GHOSTS: Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. R. G. Ingersoll (his latest lecture). 132 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 123 pages. Price $1.25.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with Index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half calf, $6.00. Will be ready March 30.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $15.00, and the English Edition at $16.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

"No book published in the world at any time or in any age has had the influence and effect on the thinking part of the community as this work. It has done more to open the eyes of the ignorant and credulous, and sweep away the cobwebs of dogma and superstition than any other book. It no doubt has a strong rival in Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom, but the books are of altogether a different class. Both are far ahead of anything else of the kind published. They are a library in themselves. A study of these two books will give the opponent of dogmatic Christianity a great advantage in discussion. Every point is carefully and minutely investigated, and stripped of any rotten accretions. The most devout and sincere Christian can find nothing but which is manly and respectfully argued and free from offensiveness, which is not often the case in books of this nature."—London Times.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried...
E. O. WALKER.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1878, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 120. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 28, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. [A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1879.

WHOLE No. 488.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

INDIVIDUAL is a great word. But universal is a greater.

"THE WISE man," said Seneca, "looks upon himself as the citizen and soldier of the universe." Too many radicals leave the soldier out!

MR. FROTHINGHAM preached his farewell sermon to his society last Sunday, and sailed for Europe on Wednesday. The kindest wishes of all his friends follow him. May his year's rest be crowded with enjoyment and fruitful of health for many a long year to come!

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL speaks thus of a bull-fight which, as American Minister, he was obliged to witness: "I attended officially, as a matter of duty, and escaped early. It was my first bull-fight, and will be my last. To me it was a shocking and brutalizing spectacle, in which all my sympathies were on the side of the bull."

MOY JIN KEE lately spoke to a Sunday School at Harlem: "We worship," said he, one Great Spirit and many Josses; you a Great Spirit and his Son. But the Americans could learn something of my people. Confucius said that drink was worse than a rattlesnake,—rattlesnakes don't abuse their own children. The Chinese think drinking very bad; but they do something very bad, too,—they smoke opium. But the man who smokes opium don't abuse his children; he only hurts himself."

DR. BELLOWES is credited by the Independent with a sharp repartee: "Hardly any better retort is on record than one made to Professor Bonamy Price, of Oxford University, on his late visit to this country. He was not remarkable for his geniality, and at a dinner-party, at which popular ideas of heaven happened to be under discussion, he turned to Dr. H. W. Bellows and said: 'We would like to have your opinion of heaven, Dr. Bellows, as that of one who stands outside the pale of civilized religions.' Dr. Bellows replied: 'My idea of heaven is that of a great dinner-party where we can have everything we want without money and without Price.' All but one joined in the laugh."

MR. EMERSON sent this touching letter to the farewell reception given to Mr. Frothingham in the Union League Theatre, New York, April 22: "CONCORD, Mass., April 18. Dear Sir,—I have received your letter, arriving this morning, and not the foregoing one of which it speaks. I grieve not to obey your kind invitation. I am not in condition to make visits, or take any part in conversation. Old age has rushed on me in the last year, and tied my tongue, and hid my memory, and thus made it a duty to stay at home. I regret it the more that Mr. Frothingham has strong claims on me, not only on his own, but on his father's, side, who was a noble friend to my youth. I rejoice that after so long and faithful labors in the Church, he has this well-earned rest and enjoyment before him. With great regret that I must send no better reply,

R. WALDO EMERSON."

DR. CHANNING describes the right use of private judgment as follows: "I call that mind free which jealously guards its intellectual rights and powers; which calls no man master; which does not content itself with a passive or hereditary faith; which opens itself to light whencesoever it may come; which receives new truth as an angel from heaven; which, whilst consulting others, inquires still more of the oracle within itself, and uses instruction from abroad, not to supersede but to quicken and exalt its own energies." It is only as furnishing "instruction from abroad" that the individual is bound to respect the Consensus of the Competent; he must finally decide for himself. But it is only for himself that he finally decides. The decision which establishes truth for mankind is the act of mankind, and not of any individual. This is the principle of universal reason, which alone explains the unanimity of science and the authority of law.

A LADY, writing a "New York Letter" to some unmentioned journal and signing herself K. B. F., narrates an incident which warrants all her severity of comment: "And now one moralizing reflection: 'Is it true religion to pay for churches at the expense of starving one's body?' Here is a scrap from a conversation overheard at a hotel table: 'Yes, they have almost paid for their church, and Dr. — told me of one poor colored man who brought fifty dollars—fifty dollars, just think of it!—for an Easter offering, and he said that he and all his family had lived on bread and water, with meat only once a week, for three whole months, to do it, and they have ever so many little children, too.' Pah! Such ideas of 'serving the Lord' are worthy of cannibals. Is the Lord to be appeased by sacrifice? And yet that woman's face as she ate chicken-salad and sipped chocolate beamed to think of the sacrifices that other people made for the Lord's sake."

DR. JAMES INGRAM, the Free Kirk minister who recently died at Unst, in the Shetland Islands, is thus described by an English paper: "He has for some years been looked upon as perhaps the oldest minister in the world. On March 3, he was gathered to his fathers in his one hundred and fourth year. His family were noted for longevity, and spent staid lives in those remote parts. Four of them lived in one house. The eldest son of the deceased is now an aged Free Church minister. When James Ingram settled in Unst, the Shetland Isles were noted for drunkenness and a low state of morality. He at once became a teetotaler, and by the power of his example and influence brought about a great improvement among the people. It is said that he began to study Hebrew at the age of sixty, and later applied himself to Greek. Only two years ago he is reported to have said to a visitor, 'It's a verra guid warid to leeve in afta a'; for though I'm a hundred noo, and gey stupid tae, yet I'm neither sick nor sair.'"

BISHOP COXE, of Western New York, in the Tribune, expresses his fear that the changes made in our English Bible by the revisers "may raise more difficulties than they will settle"; but he comforts himself with the hope that the American Bible Society's constitution will not permit the revised version to appear under its auspices. In reply to this view, which seems at once timid, time-serving, and misleading, Prof. Grote, of Buffalo, suggests that if the gentlemen of the Bible Society should be satisfied of the superior correctness of the revised version, there may be conscience enough among them to refuse to continue printing an incorrect Bible, even though such refusal should make it necessary to dissolve the Society and organize a new one. As the Bishop takes refuge in the letter of the law, the Professor raises the question whether there may be "a higher law"; and he is frank and faithful enough to add these words: "It is certain that progress is greatly impeded by the codification of religious and secular law, because when an injustice is discovered it cannot be easily remedied by natural common-sense. The precedent bars the way, and the large conservative body of the people have a natural regard for precedent, whether it conflict with natural morality or not. In many minds, a precedent condones an injustice. But all things are amenable to necessary change, and the constitution of the American Bible Society will probably be no more exempted from this law than the English version of the Bible we at present have is found to be. I must conclude by deploring a temper of resistance to a necessary change in our Bible, and regretting that there should be a desire to keep important facts from the knowledge of the people upon any ground whatever."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.	Francis E. Abbot .....Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
Hon. E. P. Hurlbut .....Albany, N. Y.
Hon. Samuel E. Sewall .....Boston, Mass.
Hon. Nathaniel Holmes .....St. Louis, Mo.
Hon. Henry Booth .....Chicago, Ill.
Hon. George Wright .....Boston, Mass.
Hon. Eliza Wright .....New Bedford, Mass.
Mr. W. J. Potter .....Boston, Mass.
Mr. B. P. Halliwell .....Newburyport, Mass.
Mr. James Parton .....San Francisco, Cal.
Mr. F. Schuenemann-Pott .....Providence, R. I.
Hon. Abraham Payne .....Boston, Mass.
Rev. M. J. Savage .....Chicago, Ill.
Rev. B. Felsenthal .....Florence, Wis.
Rev. W. H. Spence .....Detroit, Mich.
Mr. Samuel L. Hill .....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
Mr. E. W. Meddough .....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
Mr. Horace Weaver .....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
Mr. Moritz Ellinger .....Editor of "Protestant Journal," Toronto, Can.
Mr. J. R. Hargrave .....Chicago, Ill.
Rev. Robert C. O'Leary .....Peoria, Ill.
Rev. Robert G. Ingersoll .....Binghamton, N. Y.
Dr. T. L. Brown .....Franklin, Pa.
Rev. B. S. Moore .....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
Rev. F. W. Evans .....New York City.
Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson .....Rochester, N. Y.
Mrs. Amy Post .....Tennant, N. Y.
Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton .....Lotterdam, Va.
Mrs. Rallie Holley .....Albany, N. Y.
Joseph McDonough .....Albany, N. Y.
Max Schlesinger .....Albany, N. Y.
Secretary.
W. H. Hamlen .....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.
Miss Jane P. Titcomb .....142 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.
J. A. J. Wilcox .....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.
J. A. J. Wilcox .....	W. H. Hamlen .....
F. E. Abbot .....	C. D. B. Mills .....
	D. G. Crandon .....
Executive Committee.

Alabama	J. H. Halley, Selma.
Arkansas	John Ahrens, Monticello.
California	J. L. Hatch, San Francisco.
Colorado	David T. Halls, Grenada.
Connecticut	George W. Baldwin, Bridgeport.
Delaware	Joseph D. Gault, Greenville.
Florida	T. D. Siddings, Enterprise.
Georgia	Dr. A. A. Bell, Madison.
Illinois	Dr. A. G. Humphrey, Galesburg.
Indiana	N. D. Watkins, Xenia.
Iowa	J. C. Miehner, Adet.
Kansas	John Farnsworth, Fort Scott.
Kentucky	S. B. Clark, Louisville.
Louisiana	Emerson Bentley, New Orleans.
Maine	Dr. W. H. Brown, Bangor.
Maryland	J. S. Russell, New Market.
Massachusetts	E. A. Sawtelle, Boston.
Michigan	Karl Schmemmann, Detroit.
Minnesota	J. B. Bassett, Minneapolis.
Missouri	R. Peterson, St. Louis.
Montana	W. E. Copeland, Lincoln.
Nebraska	G. Barrett, White Rock.
Nevada	William Little, Manchester.
New Hampshire	Francis W. Orvis, Passaic.
New Jersey	C. D. B. Mills (Chairman), Syracuse.
New York	J. W. Thorne, Warren.
North Carolina	E. D. Stark, Cleveland.
Ohio	Samuel Colt, Humboldt Basin.
Oregon	George Lewis, Providence.
Rhode Island	P. W. Fuller, Columbia.
South Carolina	Dr. E. H. Paige, Charleston.
Tennessee	Dr. L. J. Russell, Harrisville.
Texas	E. L. Haughton, North Bennington.
Vermont	E. Spaulding, Norfolk.
Virginia	Dr. A. M. Dent, Weston.
Wisconsin	Robert C. Spencer, Milwaukee.
Wyoming	D. P. Wilcox, Yankton.
District of Columbia	W. H. Doolittle, Washington.
Utah	W. Ferguson, Provo City.
Wyoming	Norman S. Porter.

Finance Committee.

D. G. Crandon .....Chairman, Chelsea, Mass.
Mrs. Sarah B. Otis .....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
Harlan P. Hyde .....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS. —President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
SYRACUSE, N. Y. —President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
ALBANY, N. Y. —President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
BOSTON, MASS. —President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
PASSAIC CITY, N. J. —President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
JACKSONVILLE, ILL. —President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.
ROCHESTER, N. Y. —President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester.
CHELSEA, MASS. —President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

R. P. Hurlbut , Albany, N. Y.	Moses Hays , Rochester, N. Y.
Franklin Goodyear , Cort-S. B. Ursino, West Newton, Mass.
Z. T. Watkins , Syracuse, N. Y.	W. D. Hunt , Scott, N. Y.
Nettie C. Truesdell , Syracuse	Francis E. Abbot , Cambridge, Mass.
Gustavus E. Gordon , Mu-M. N. Ladt, Albany, N. Y.
Harriet A. Mills , Syracuse, N. Y.	J. H. Adamson , Passaic City, N. J.
W. H. Hamlen , Boston, Mass.	Sarah B. Otis , Boston, Mass.
T. O. Gage , Fayetteville, N. Y.	H. P. Whipple , Boston, Mass.
B. F. Underwood , Thomaston, Me.	D. G. Crandon , Chelsea, Mass.
Catherine C. Hurlbut , Albany, N. Y.	John W. Truesdell , Syracuse, N. Y.
Edwin Turk , Chelsea, Mass.	H. P. Stark , Rochester, N. Y.
John Hill , Watertown, N. Y.	Joseph McDonough , Albany, N. Y.
E. A. Sawtelle , Boston, Mass.	M. Schlesinger , Albany, N. Y.
Thos. Dugan , Albany, N. Y.	John Frost , Albany, N. Y.
James B. Fike , Rochester, N. Y.	C. D. B. Mills , Syracuse, N. Y.
David H. Clark , Florence, Mass.	B. P. Halliwell , Boston, Mass.

What is Truth?

AN ESSAY.

BY FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

"The old question with which people sought to push logic into a corner, so that they must either have recourse to pitiful sophisms, or confess their ignorance and consequently the vanity of their whole art, is this,—What is Truth?"—KANT, Critique of Pure Reason, p. 50.

"Pilate saith unto him, 'What is truth?' And when he had said this, he went out again unto the Jews, and saith unto them, 'I find in him no fault at all.'"—FOURTH GOSPEL, xviii., 38.

"What is truth?" said jesting Pilate; and would not stay for an answer."—LORD BAACON, Essays, Of Truth.

"Truth for Authority,—not Authority for Truth."—LUCENTIA MOTT.

In the fourth gospel, which in my opinion ranks very high, not only as a work of art, but also as a philosophically developed expression of the "Christian consciousness" which was gradually created by the Christ-idea under the controlling influence of Greek thought, there is no passage more impressive or strikingly dramatic than the account of the interview between Jesus and Pilate. To Pilate's question, "Art thou the king of the Jews?" Jesus at first answers evasively by putting a counter-question as to the source of this implied accusation of treason against Caesar; but when Pilate repeats the inquiry, he boldly asserts his own royalty as one whose kingdom is "not of this world" (i.e., not of the existing order of things, which was to be followed, however, by the Messiah's reign on earth); and he then adds these memorable words: "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness to the truth." He thus, to quote the striking phrase of Hase, declares himself to be "the King of Truth." The exclamation of Pilate, "What is truth?" is commonly supposed by Christian readers to be a reverent inquiry as to the nature of truth, and to show that Pilate was deeply impressed by the august bearing and spiritual majesty of his prisoner. Sir William Hamilton apparently takes it in this serious sense: "The question, What is truth? is an old and celebrated problem. It was proposed by the Roman Governor—by Pontius Pilate—to our Savior; and it is a question which still recurs, and is still keenly agitated in the most recent schools of Philosophy." [Lectures on Logic, p. 378.] But I conceive its meaning quite otherwise. When Jesus replies to Pilate, who only wished to know whether he was dealing with a rebel to his own imperial master, a dangerous pretender to the Jewish throne,—"I am not a king of this world; I am the king of truth,"—Pilate exclaims contemptuously, "King of truth! pahaw! king of moonshine. What's truth to me?" and, without waiting a reply, goes to the Jews to say in effect that he has found Jesus to be merely a crack-brained and harmless enthusiast, wholly undeserving of execution as a traitor. The hard, practical Roman who knew no truth but that of the sword, and believed in no monarchy but that of military force, despised his captive, and would set him free as one powerless for mischief,—too insignificant to be feared. The man of action, as usual, saw only a weakness in the man of ideas; the realist turned away scornfully from the idealist, and laughed at the notion that anybody should bother his head about truth! It was the old story which is never finished in the telling, because the so-called practical men of this world are commonly blind as bats to the enormous power of ideas. But Pilate's "jesting" inquiry, to which he would not even "stay for an answer," namely, "What is truth?" has in all ages been the subject of profoundest and most anxious thought. It therefore pleased me greatly that one of your number should propose this inquiry to me as the subject of some one of my Sunday essays; and I trust we shall see more meaning in it than Pilate saw.

The word truth is so common in men's mouths, that it may seem superfluous seriously to ask, "What is truth?" What all men talk about, all men, surely, must understand. Alas, not so! Perhaps no word in the English language is so much abused as this little word truth. It stands to each man as the sum-total of his own notions, or the notions of some little party or sect in which he has merged himself. To a Mohammedan, the "truth" is Mohammedanism; to a Christian, it is Christianity; to a fool, it is his own folly. It seldom occurs to the average mind that truth is too vast to be comprehended in any human system. Every class of men has its own peculiar cant; there is sometimes, I am sorry to say, cant to be heard even in the anti-cant party. I have noticed that, in the special cant of reform, truth with a big T plays a very important part. We are all in danger of getting into the habit of using words without thought; and I suppose that cant is, in most cases, nothing but words thoughtlessly used, in obedience to mere habit or fashion. If words are used for purposes of deception, they deserve a harsher name than that of cant. With the hope, therefore, that we may all avoid the danger of using this word truth in a canting manner, and attain a larger conception of what it stands for, let us see what answer we can find to Pilate's question.

Truth is of three kinds,—that is, the word truth has three fundamentally distinct meanings.

1. There is the truth of Being or of Things. By this I mean the realities of the universe, wholly independent of all thought concerning them. Whether we think correctly or incorrectly, the facts of existence remain the same. I may think the moon to be only as big as a button, because a button close to my eye is seemingly of the same size; or I may think it to be as large as the sun, because the apparent diameters of the sun and moon are about equal. But the moon's magnitude remains permanent, neither shrinking nor expanding as my thought changes. Now suppose that all the human race should be annihilated, and suppose (what many persons believe) that there is no intelligence in the universe higher than man's, it would be irrational to believe that any change would occur in the actual relations or reality of things on account of the extinction of all comprehending minds. The earth would still roll around the sun; all the operations of Nature, all the laws of astronomy, of chemistry, of physics, of mathematics, and so forth, would be the same. Matter would retain the same properties and obey the same forces; all relations of form and extension and number, of quantity and quality, would exist unchanged by the supposed annihilation of the human race. The universe would go on as before, even if nobody were the wiser for it. Just as countless things are to-day true which no man knows, so countless other things would remain true if all men should cease to know. This unchangeable reality, which we see to be nowise affected by human thought, is what I mean by the truth of Being, or the truth of Things. Used in this sense, we see that the word truth stands for all that exists independently of ourselves,—for the vast realities of the universe which are unaffected by our presence or absence, our existence or non-existence.

2. But besides the truth of Things, there is also the truth of Thought. The former is called Real Truth, the latter is called Formal Truth. Everything is true in this second sense which does not violate the laws of logic. For instance, if the city of Hong Kong is built in the form of a square, then its four sides are all equal in length; a straight street laid out connecting two opposite corners would divide the city into two exactly equal portions; and another straight street laid out connecting the other two opposite corners, would cross the first street exactly at right angles, and would cut it exactly at its middle point. Whether Hong Kong is square-built or not, I do not know; but if it is so built, then all these things are true. The truth of Thought only requires that the laws of thought shall be obeyed,—that thought shall be consistent with itself. No matter how false or absurd a theory may be, if measured by the truth of Things; it has the truth of Thought if it is only logical throughout in all its parts. Old Dr. Johnson, it is said, came down one morning to breakfast in high dudgeon, because he had dreamed over-night that he had been beaten in argument by an antagonist; and nothing could reconcile him to his defeat, until his jackal, Boswell, suggested that since it was all a dream, the doctor had himself supplied his opponent with all the arguments by which he had been beaten,—in fact that he had only beaten himself, after all. Now so long as he was asleep, the truth of Thought would require the old gentleman to feel mortified at his defeat, since in the dream his antagonist was as real as himself; but the moment he waked up, his mortification became laughable and false, because the premises which would justify it were all gone. By truth of Thought, therefore, I mean logical consistency in the relations of our ideas or conceptions. Hence we speak of a true Catholic as one who practically accepts the authority of his church in all matters of faith; while we should call him a false Catholic, who, claiming to accept this authority as final, should yet persist in thinking independently for himself.

3. Thus we see that the truth of Things is altogether independent of thought; while the truth of Thought is altogether independent of things. But there is a third and very important sense of the word, namely, the truth of Science or Knowledge. Thomas Aquinas, who six hundred years ago earned the title of the "Angelic Doctor" among his fellow-schoolmen and theologians, says: "Intellectual truth is the adjustment of the intellect to the thing, according as the intellect declares that to be which is, and that not to be which is not." [Contra Gentiles, I., 49.] This definition has been acquiesced in by the greatest thinkers who have come after him. Spinoza defines truth as "the congruity of the idea with the thing ideatum [convenientiam ideae cum suo ideato: Cogitata Metaphysica, I., VI., 3]. Kant says: "The definition of the word truth, to wit, 'the accordance of the cognition with its object,' is pre-supposed in the question [What is truth?]; but we desire to be told, in the answer to it, what is the universal and secure criterion of the truth of every cognition." [Critique of Pure Reason, Bohn's Ed., p. 50.] I will here quote a passage from Sir William Hamilton's Lectures on Logic, p. 377, because it not only defines truth in this third sense, but also defines some other words which are commonly used with much looseness:—

"The end which all our scientific efforts are exerted to accomplish, is Truth and Certainty. Truth is the correspondence or agreement of a cognition with its object; its criterion is the necessity determined by the laws which govern our faculties of knowledge; and Certainty is our consciousness of this necessity. Certainty, or the conscious necessity of knowledge, absolutely excludes the admission of any opposite supposition. Where such appears admissible, doubt and uncertainty arise. If we consider truth by relation to the degree and kind of Certainty, we have to distinguish Knowledge, Belief, and Opinion. Knowledge and Belief differ not only in degree, but in kind. Knowledge is a certainty founded upon insight; Belief is a certainty founded upon feeling. The one is perspicuous and objective; the other is obscure and subjective. Each, however, supposes the other; and an assurance is said to be a knowledge or belief, according as the one element or the other preponderates. Opinion is the admission of something as true, where, however, neither insight nor feeling is so intense as to necessitate a perfect certainty. What prevents the admission of a proposition as certain is called Doubt. The approximation of the imperfect certainty of opinion to the perfect certainty of knowledge or belief is called Probability."

It is this last sense, that of the "harmony of thought with reality," as Sir W. Hamilton elsewhere has expressed it, that the word truth is most commonly used. Truth is said to be attained, when thought accurately mirrors the realities and facts of things. The truth of Being is nothing to us, so long as it is beyond our reach; we can but wish and search for it. Neither is the truth of Thought of any value to us, unless we are satisfied that we start right in our thinking. Good reasoning from bad premises is only misleading, as much so as bad reasoning from good premises. These two kinds of truth, therefore, that of Things and that of Thought, mislead connection and are practically worthless until we can join them in the harmony of Science or real knowledge. Science or knowledge,—the reflection of the universe, its facts and laws, in our own minds,—this is the kind of truth that is above all needed by every person. Here lies the difference between the sane and the insane man. The sane man brings his thought into harmony with Nature, perceives things as they are, and acts accordingly. But the insane man mistakes his own feverish fancies and wild hallucinations for actual facts; and he, too, acts accordingly. Knowledge is sanity; ignorance is a species of insanity. We are all insane when we presume to act on insufficient knowledge. Truth, therefore, is the great need of every soul, inasmuch as our action is all at hap-hazard, as likely to end in disaster and misery as in happiness, until we have brought our thinking into harmony with the actual conditions of life and the real facts of Nature. For instance, whatever mechanic thinks that, by joining a strike, he can compel his employer for any length of time to pay ten hours' wages for eight hours' work, or that any artificial combinations are going to override or alter the laws of political economy, is the victim of pitiable ignorance, and needs above everything to study the principles of social science. Truth is thus the food of the mind which strengthens it for dealing with life's practical duties. To establish an equilibrium or natural balance between ourselves and our surroundings, so that a proper action and reaction can take place between our own minds and the universe, is the only path to happiness or to wisdom or to virtue; and truth is the light that must illumine it.

Thus we find that the truth of Being is the grand total of realities to be discovered; that the truth of Thought is the indispensable means of the discovery; and that the truth of Science or real Knowledge, the harmony of our thinking with real being, is the discovery itself. The next question, then, old as human thought itself, is, What is the criterion of truth? By what measure or standard shall we determine it? How can we be sure that we have indeed discovered the truth of Being, and are not deceiving ourselves with some phantasmagoric illusions of our own creation?

1. The only criterion of the truth of Being is experience. "Experiment upon me, and find out!" that is the command of Nature, when we ask her for her secrets. Nobody discovers anything valuable in any other way. "The fool has to learn by experience," says an old proverb. But some wise one has emended the proverb thus: "'Tis the wise man that learns by experience; the fool never learns at all." Thought must in all cases be tested by facts. The human senses are so many instruments of research; and the human brain has got to use them in acquiring all that it means to learn of the truth of Being. The intellectual faculties are themselves but higher senses, dealing intuitively with the relations of objects just as the senses proper deal with their physical properties; and their use is only a higher kind of experience. "Test and discover!" That is the everlasting law of Nature, her only gateway into the truth of Things.

2. The only criterion of the truth of Thought is logic. Logical laws are a sure, and the only, measure of the correctness of the reasoning process, whether inductive or deductive. Whatever reasonings conform to the laws of logic, are sound; and no others are. Thought that is not logically faultless is good for nothing; it is all false. The strength of a chain, as has been well said by Archbishop Whately, is only that of its weakest link; and so the value of a chain of reasoning depends wholly on its perfection in every part. But logic cannot go beyond the truth of Thought; its use as a criterion is solely to judge whether the reasoning is good, not whether the facts it proceeds upon are real or illusory. Logic, therefore, tests only the workmanship, not the material; it applies its rules solely to determining the skill of the construction, and has nothing to say as to the quality of the stock put in.

3. Now as the truth of Science or knowledge is simply the correspondence of Thought with Things, the harmony between our thinking and the realities of the universe, so the criterion of scientific truth is simply the combination of experience and logic. Logic is, as Kant truly says, a merely negative criterion; that is, nothing can be a scientific truth which violates the laws of logic. In fact, logic has an absolute veto power in all investigation into truth; it declares to be absolutely, universally, eternally worthless whatever is illogical. But experience is the only positive criterion of truth, and its verdict is not absolute; it makes mistakes, is often partial and must be corrected by larger experience, and has no jurisdiction beyond its narrow limits. Nothing whatever will stand the test as a settled fact of knowledge, which violates any law of logic or fails to receive the seal of a positive experience. Every truth of knowledge can be verified. Verification, that is, the possibility of repeating at any time the same experiment with the certainty at all times of repeating the same result, is the test of all undisputed knowledge. Logic and experience, therefore, are the two sides of the one criterion of truth,—negative and positive; but this criterion is not absolute. Want of logic is decisive against any alleged truth; but want of experience only creates a presumption against it. There is no absolute criterion of truth; we cannot escape the possibility of error. Only an infinite experience could give us at the same time a positive and yet an absolute criterion of truth.

Such, then, is the answer I must give to the question, "What is truth?" Truth is the harmony of Thought with Things, the correspondence or agreement of ideas with their objects. Logic is an absolute negative criterion of truth; experience is a fallible positive criterion of it,—the best we have. Truths of Science or Knowledge are thus all subject to two rigorous demands; first, that they be logically harmonious with themselves and with all other proved truths; secondly, that they shall be capable of verification. Without verification, no statement or thought can be accepted as a settled truth,—although it may be a truth notwithstanding. Doubt attaches to every alleged truth that cannot be verified by repeated observation or experiment. Science is simply clarified and methodized experience; and I think that, for the permanent and stable beliefs of mankind, there is no foundation but Science, in its largest and most inclusive sense.

What a theme of unparalleled sublimity is opened to us by this simple word truth! The love of truth, the passion for truth, has been the inspiration of every great life lived on earth. Jesus spoke for every noble spirit when he said, "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness to the truth." The body feeds on a meat that perishes; but the soul feeds on the eternal truth. To seek for truth that we may live the truth, is the grandest aim of our existence. Indeed, the search for truth is a pursuit so full of delight to him who glows with a genuine devotion to it, that Malebranche exclaimed, "If I held truth captive in my hand, I should open my hand and let it fly, in order that I might again pursue and capture it." And Lessing in the same spirit declares, "Did the Almighty, holding in his right hand Truth, and in his left Search after Truth, deign to tender me the one I might prefer,—in all humility, but without hesitation, I should request Search after Truth." Expressions like these, perhaps, overstate the value of the mere pursuit, for no pursuit, as such, can be an end in itself; truth could not thus animate the soul to life-long and all-absorbing toil to attain it, were it not that, when found, it is the chief blessing of mankind. It is true, as Seneca said, that "A known truth waxes stale [sordet cognita veritas];" but only because each special truth is a stepping-stone to a truth higher and grander still. It is the infinity of truth, the impossibility that exists of finding any limit to it, that makes it an object worthy of the supreme love and allegiance of the human soul. In vain shall any one declare, "I am the Truth"; no human teacher can without audacity utter such words as these. Forever on and on,—that is the destiny of the soul that dedicates itself to truth in absolute and pure devotion. The love of truth is a moral quality of such surpassing excellence and dignity, that it ennobles, exalts, and sanctifies the spirit that is inspired by it. What is there so great in human character as the stern yet impassioned veracity that values what is true above all gain, above all pleasure, above all that is not identified with the absolute integrity of Nature? No joy compares with that which flows from truth, thus pursued and thus won. There is that in human nature which makes the simple arrival at the true more precious and more rewarding than the most brilliant triumphs of common ambition. Truth, like virtue, is its own reward; and the hope of unending being has no better guarantee of its own wisdom than the fact that he who feeds on truth feeds on the eternal, the infinite, the divine.—Reprinted from THE INDEX of June 18, 1870.

[For THE INDEX.]

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

No. XXXIV.

Let us select two other passages involving the symbolism of the numbers 4 and 3, hardly less seemingly mystical than those which have been expounded. First, as involving the number 4: "And after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree. And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God, and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, saying: Hurt not the earth, neither the sea nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads. And I heard the number of them that were sealed; and there were sealed one hundred and forty-four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel." (Ch. vii., vs. 1-4.)

It was the usage of the ancients to imagine some god or spirit or angel as presiding over every part and every operation of Nature. Not until Kepler, who supposed the planets to be drawn by delegated angels, did this habit expire. The four angels of this order, here introduced by our author, presided over the four quarters of the firmament; and hence over the four winds which issued thence. The number 4 was, as we have seen, peculiarly and especially cardinal or ordinary (compare our expression: the four cardinal points), and so especially related to the static cosmos, the space above the earth; as 3 was on the other hand related to time, things time-y or temporal, ordinal, ordinary, and current, or stream-like; beginning, middle, and end. Space is again coincident with air, breath, wind, spirit. All things spiritual are thus related to space on the one hand, and to whatsoever is breathy or wind-like on the other hand. ("The spirit bloweth where it listeth," etc.) The winds blow to bless or to blast (Ger. blasen, to blow). As their bad result, they were about to blast the land and the sea and the vegetable world, signifying the mundane or unsanctified world at large; that is to say, good spiritual influences were destined and about to emanate from the four quarters of the world, or from all directions, which would not as a blight upon the bad spiritual influences and powers then dominant in the world, and so, as it were, upon the great mass of mankind. But by divine intervention they were withheld for a time, that God might seal and so protect his own,—an idea similar to that of the passover. This means that destruction was restrained from coming upon the old social order, until the germination of the new social order should be adequately advanced. Hence, the divine command restraining the four angels from letting the winds blow, until the grand whole, one hundred and forty-four thousand of the elect, should be securely designated and so saved. There is the germ, in this symbolic outgiving, of the doctrine of the damnation of the wicked (and of the numerousness of the wicked as contrasted with the few good), as sharply contrasted with the salvation of the saints as when it came to be afterwards exoterically wrought out in the Church. Thus the doctrine of eternal damnation as well as that of the Trinity goes back to the hermetic philosophy; as was partially shown in connection with "fire and brimstone" and "the worm that never dies."

The other passage above referred to as involving the number 3 is this: "And I saw three unclean spirits, like frogs, come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet; for they are the spirits of devils working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." (Ch. xvi., vs. 13, 14.) The dragon, the beast, and the false prophet are the three modes of presentation, or three aspects of all that is elsewhere summed up as antichrist; the aggregate of all the principles, influences, facts, and persons that stood or stand opposed to the introduction and triumph of Christianity and its new social order. Nevertheless, the utterances or promulgations of these three (the dragon, the beast, and the false prophet) are so far different that they mark three distinct periods, or phases, in the reign of wickedness, which precedes the ultimate reign of the truth. An utterance or promulgation is that which comes out of the mouth. The frog is the natural and appropriate symbol of period or stop—as the serpent is of the contrasted idea of elongated continuity; of the periodicity of time—as the serpent, stretched out, is so of time itself, and, when incurved, his tail in his mouth, of eternity or endless time. The short, point-like body of the frog, first like a point, and then like a single vertebral section of the snake's body; his jump or hop (his staccato or punctuated movement); his single note or letus of voice (also punctuated),—all these render him the emblem, first of sudden stoppage (point-like) and then of the internode between two "full stops." The primary meaning of "period" is point, whence stop; and its secondary meaning is the stretch or reach between point and point or stop and stop. Such stops and interstops constitute periodicity, the concomitant and measurer of time. Imagine an immense snake or serpent stretched out at full length, and a frog jumping alongside of him, each jump being equivalent to the length of one of the joints of his body, and you have the full symbolism of time and its successive breakage into periods of time. The hops or happenings in time chronicle the periodicity of time. Hop and hap, whence happening, are etymologically related words in English. And so it is that the frog as well as the serpent is, hermetically, a significant emblem of evil.

Three, the number of the frogs, meaning also all in a less pronounced way than seven, and then, very especially, evil, perversity, depravity, inauspiciousness, all that is summed up in the meaning of the very expressive Latin word nefas, the three frogs, the indicia of the three periods or phases of evil (related also to the three woes), may well be described as "three unclean spirits," "the spirits of devils," etc. The frogs are merely the particularizations and specifications of the more general and continuous spirit of evil symbolized by the serpent, which again, in the larger view, branches out into and culminates in its three grossest forms, the dragon (false philosophy as such), the beast (false philosophy applied in the social order), and the false prophet (the false ideal and promise made by the false theory and practice). The three frogs were merely the minor utterances or promulgations or symptoms of these three more bulky masses of evil, and are, therefore, represented appropriately as coming out of their mouths.

To sum up and restate this important symbolism in a somewhat technical way: The frog is the punctuator or punctuator of the protension of time; and so of the serpent, the symbol of time. Time is the produced point, continuous and perpetual change; evanescence, uncertainty, and disappointment. Hence temporality is identical with evil, and spaceality with its four cardinal points and its character as a firmament is, alone, good. ("There is nothing true but heaven"). The frog is the marker of the periodicity of the successional line of events, of the steps and inter-steps of history; the jumper, hopper, and spanner of given spaces in time, and so, himself, consigned to evil,—time and temporalities with all their accompaniments, the number 8 included, being, from the hermetic point of view, as it must be constantly borne in mind, predominantly mundane, human, and evil; as space, with its four cardinal points, four quarters (with their presiding angels), four free winds, the wind, the atmosphere at large, the ether, and the empyrean, which are celestial, is spiritual, divine, and therefore supremely good. These are the ordinary and the cardinal spheres of universal things respectively. True, evil descends from the cardinal upon the ordinary sphere, as a punishment for its evil; as when "the four angels, standing upon the four corners of the earth," shall cease to be restrained from letting the blasting winds blow upon the earth, the sea, and the trees. The earth, the sea, and the vegetable kingdom, being the lower order of the cosmic totality, symbolize the inferior or unsanctified human world. Compare what will be said, later, of the lion, the eagle, the ox, and the man, the four living creatures (ch. iv.), the higher order of the cosmic totality, representing the saints around the throne of God.

Locusts and scorpions, as well as serpents and frogs, are, as we have seen, minor types of evil, or rather types of minor and sporadic evils. They, also, come out of the abyss (the bottomless pit, the original source of time and change; see ch. ix.). The locusts were not allowed to hurt the earth, the sea, and the vegetable kingdom, to do essential injury, but only to annoy, especially, the outcasts, "the miserable," the lower order of mankind (symbolized by the earth, sea, and trees), v. 4; not to kill but to torment five months (vs. 5, 10). Five (5) means part, partial, trivial, or little, the fraction of ten (10), which means much, a great deal, a large quantity, as will be explained presently. Torment for five months means minor local and temporary evil, such as comes from conditions, and is not inherent; the less manifestation of the general principle of evil.

"And the holy city shall they [the powers of evil] tread under foot forty and two months" (ch. xi., v. 2); and forty-two months is (thirty days to the month) twelve hundred and sixty days. "A thousand two hundred and threescore days" (v. 8) is the same term. By construing days into prophetic years, this period, as twelve hundred and sixty historical years, has figured more largely than any other number in the development of Millerism and millenarianism generally. "Three days and a half" (v. 9), taken as three years (of three hundred and sixty days) and a half, are also twelve hundred and sixty days, which are again, by the method of interpretation, years; and "a time, times, and half a time" are construed as another mode of saying the same thing, meaning twelve hundred and sixty historical years. These are very violent strains upon the meaning of the language, for the purpose of connecting the Apocalypse with literal history, as prediction. By a double and treble license of interpretation, a definite period is evolved, and conclusions are deduced which can in no way be justified by another and simpler solution can be found. Let us see.

The Apocalypse is in no sense a prophecy of historical events,—at all events, not in its primary and direct meaning; and only so in the secondary, analogical, and necessarily vague sense in which the principles of universal things are reproduced in the facts of history; or as, for example, the ultimate triumph of the powers of good over the powers of evil, or more specifically, according to the faith of the author, of pure Christianity over its enemies, is foretold. It is not, then, in any leading sense, a recital of facts or events, past, present, or future, but a symbolization of truths (eternal verities) under the guise of a seeming recital of events. I am not unaware that the main strength of the historical method of interpretation has come from a supposed identification of the symbolism here with that of the book of Daniel, which seems to bear a very literal historic meaning. I have no space here to diverge into the discussion of that subject; but I stand upon my ground as above stated, that this wonderful composition, the Apocalypse, is a dramatization of pure abstract ideas.

Another argument sometimes urged for a prophetic historical meaning is derived from the opening words, "To show unto his servant things which must shortly come to pass." Apart from the difficulty that, taken as events, the things spoken of did not shortly come to pass, and that many of them have not yet come to pass,—a difficulty which theologians have greatly labored with,—to take the statement literally is to denaturalize the recital and make it commonplace and ordinary, whereas its distinctive nature is to be symbolic throughout. The clause must be rendered in connection with the distinct instruction given a little later (ch. ii., v. 19), "Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter"; that is to say, those static and eternal principles which are alike true of the past, the present, and the future. What, then, is the meaning of the twelve hundred and sixty days, which otherwise expressed is forty-two months? The literal time element (days, months, or years) is unimportant, and the different designations are synonymous. The whole phraseology is contrived mainly, if not wholly, to introduce and display an occult numerical idea. In this connection, Swedenborg rightly says: "Times, whether they be hours, or days, or months, or years, do not signify time, but state; and numbers determine its quality" (Swed. Apo. Rev., 427). The whole riddle here is solved by the fact that 6 (3+3) is the numeral symbol of double-distilled evil (cf. 666); that 7 means utter or all; and that, therefore, 7×6=42 coupled with a word of time ("months") is our author's technical way of saying: "Until the complete culmination of the reign of evil; or, until the utter fulfillment of the evil days."

"Time, times, and half a time" means quite the opposite; viz.,  $\frac{3}{2}$ , the half of 7, and as such the antithesis or contrasted idea to that of 7; and hence in connection with time, as expressed in the phrase, it means, a short while, or for a short time; as the opposite of always or forever, which is the meaning of 7, when it is coupled with time. So the woman persecuted by the dragon took refuge in the wilderness, and was nourished in retray "for a time and times and half a time" (ch. xii., v. 14); that is to say, temporarily, or for a short season.

The Kabbalistic meaning of the number 10 is very peculiar. Ten is 7+3. Seven is all or entirety, and 3 is here significant of failure or deficiency, which is the general character of evil (cf. w. fault). So 7+3 means all + a deficiency; so that, while seeming to be more, it is really less, than seven. Hence 10 means a great deal, a great many, nearly or proximately all; and alone, or augmented into 100, 1000, etc., is the common hermetic designation of numerousness. Five, on the other hand, the half of ten, means few or little, and, as applied to time, a little while, or a short time (as previously observed), and much the same as  $\frac{3}{2}$ , the half of 7. Swedenborg, whom Gen. Hitchcock has written a book to prove to have been a hermetic philosopher, assigns these meanings to the numbers 10 and 5, without, however, showing the reason of the assignment. We have also Swedenborg's authority for saying that the tenth part has the same meaning as 10. Without this clue, the following clause would offer great difficulty: "And the same hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain of men seven thousand; and the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven." (Ch. xli., v. 13.) Now if 7 were directly applied to the number of the men killed, that would mean all; and then how could there have been a remnant? But that is not said. The 7 is coupled with and modified by a multiple of 10 (i.e., 1000), and collectively they mean nearly all. The text, therefore, rendered into plain English, reads thus: And the same hour was there a great earthquake, and a large portion of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain nearly all of the inhabitants; and those who survived were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven. When the analogy is with space, rather than with time, 8 replaces 7, as 4 replaces 3; and the double of 8 (16) emphasizes the idea; but this is also reduced from its absoluteness, and made merely augmentative, in a general sense, by adding the multiples of 10: hence we have this remarkable passage: "And the wine-press was trodden without the city, and the blood came out of the wine-press, even unto the horse-bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred (1600) furlongs" (ch. xiv., v. 20); that is to say, for a very great distance.

TO CLASSICAL STUDENT: You ask "If Atlas supported the world, what supported Atlas?" The question, dear sir, has often been asked; but never, so far as we are aware, satisfactorily answered. We have always been of the opinion that Atlas must have married a rich wife and got his support from her father.—Albany Evening Journal.

THE POPE AND THE MIRACLES.

Whatever M. Elis Réclus has to say upon such a theme as that which he treats on the first page of the Evening Post to-day must have unusual interest for all thoughtful readers. Aside from M. Réclus' well-earned reputation as a writer of great vigor and remarkable dexterity, his prominence as a representative French radical, whose exile from France for political reasons has been enforced until within a month, makes his utterance upon such a theme valuable as an expression of the opinion of an important class of French thinkers and statesmen.

Of course in M. Réclus' view the Papacy is strictly a political institution, which he regards as a source of constant danger to France and to liberty, and it is as a political power representing a pernicious political principle that he treats it. We scarcely need say that M. Réclus is responsible for his own opinions and utterances, and in laying these before American readers the Evening Post deems it unnecessary to comment upon them, further than to remind the reader that the interest attaching to such a letter as his is dependent upon the entire freedom of expression allowed to him. We in this country want to know what such men as he are thinking, not what they might find to say if restricted to our way of thinking. Hence we need not apologize for the entire liberty of expression given to this distinguished correspondent. The devoutest Roman Catholic reader will be interested in a letter which so fully and frankly represents the thought and sentiment of the extreme Republican party in France.—New York Post, March 15.

LONDON, March 1, 1879.

What has taken place at Rome behind the holy doors of the congregation of the Rites? A noise of dispute has reached the ears of the profane; there has been uproar and tumult, but the details, the facts and movements have been carefully concealed. The clerical world was visibly excited; mysterious news was whispered about, which seemed to be of great import even by the side of the resignation of Marshal MacMahon, which resignation was compared by the Jesuit nest to the shame of Sedan.

It was rumored,—in matters of the vestry we have always to deal with rumors, never with clear, simple, concordant narratives,—it was rumored that, being called upon to sanction an official consecration of Our Lady of La Salette (whose features are entirely different from those of the other Holy Virgins), the Pope had himself questioned the insane Mélanie, on whose testimony rests this ignoble story, and that, indignant at the effrontery, the ignorance and the coarseness of this creature, he had wanted to take the opportunity, once for all, to repudiate the worship of La Salette, which he has submitted to rather than accepted, and has never formally recognized. Pius IX., who was sincerely devoted to Our Lady of Lourdes, has never swallowed Our Lady of La Salette, whose apparition he called "stuff and nonsense." It seems that the new Pope would have liked to make a slight display of liberality, that nothing would please him better than to "weed the Church." There are honest folk who believe this were not too difficult a task, and were really worth the while.

At this juncture a Bonapartist journal, a friend of the throne and the altar, suddenly announced that our Holy Father had addressed a brief to Monseigneur of Grenoble abolishing the worship of La Salette. Whence, general amazement. A few simple-minded persons applauded and clapped their hands. But the sober journals merely noted the news; before expressing an opinion they needed further information. Indeed, it required but slight reflection to see that, had the news been founded on facts, had so radical a measure been adopted, it must be the signal of an upheaval of consciences, the signal of a revolution in religious matters, the signal of civil war in the heart of Catholicism. How, indeed, could Gallicanism, thrice dead and buried, possibly resuscitate unexpectedly? How could religious liberalism, so often struck down by bulls, rise again on a sudden and throttle the Syllabus? Three days later the news was contradicted on all sides in the name of Monseigneur, who traffics in the water of La Salette at the rate of five francs per litre,—the price of the better brands of cognac. Monseigneur announced that he had just received a brief from His Holiness who, said he, adds new honors to those already heaped upon Our Lady.... He grants the title of Minor Basilic to her sanctuary; he permits the crowning of the statue; and her portrait is about to receive official consecration similar to that given to the portrait of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart of Issoudun.... And Monseigneur adds that "Mélanie" will very likely sue her detractors for slander.

Monseigneur of Grenoble evidently exaggerates the new honors which have been heaped upon his Virgin; but it is no less evident that Leo XIII. dared not call Our Lady of La Salette to account; that he dared not recognize the fact that Mélanie is a hussy and an adventuress; that powerful as the Pope may be in other circumstances, so soon as he is pleased to side for a while with reason and common-sense, Monseigneur of Grenoble, speaking in the name of ignorance and superstition, is more powerful than the Pope. Some of the stockholders of the marvellous water-shop have not feared to oppose the Pope himself, and the infallible Pope has retreated before the champion of Mélanie. This fact was to be noted.

No one has cared to dwell on this fact in France; in the first place, because minds are otherwise occupied; in the next place, because Monseigneur of Grenoble has intimidated the evil-thinkers by the threat that Mélanie would sue her detractors for slander. They are no longer under the pontificate of M. de Broglie, it is true; but the judges who are devoted to our lords, the magistrates who are the tools of the priest party, hold the keys of fine and prison. Should Mélanie call upon them severely to punish her detractors; should Mélanie complain of the injury done to her beatification, and to the sale of the bottled miracle, by malevolent persons, I pity the honest man who falls into their clutches.

The poor Holy Father wanted to win the praises of the Times and of the Journal des Débats; he thought to get on the right side of the strategist who is conducting the campaign of the Cultur Kampf; for, in order to ruin Bismarck, the Vatican must first be reconciled with him. It was the Sovereign Pontiff's good pleasure to institute a few trifling reforms, to make a few very honest, very modest, very insignificant improvements, which were to have excited the enthusiasm of the by-standers. He had already prepared his soap and water; he had cut him a straw in which to blow; with a single small glassful he had enough to float a thousand great, splendid, many-colored bubbles; but, after only two or three puffs, his breath gave out: it seems that he is asthmatic.

The simplicity of Pius IX., which was all on the outside, concealed a deep penetration,—the artlessness of those Italians is made up of shrewdness; but Leo XIII., has none of that sarcastic bonhomie which caused the immense success of his predecessor. Did the Jesuits but let him have his way, Leo XIII. would be more of a Jesuit than the Jesuits; but, whether right or wrong, the Jesuits mean to rule the world and the Church after their own fashion and not after his. The new infallible Pope has made his adviser and favorite of the Reverend Father Curci, whom his no less infallible predecessor had condemned with such ado. He expected wonders from him; but nothing works, nothing has yet been done, and it is already said that Curci is going astray. Not that Curci is not as perfidious as can be desired; not that his plans are not as good as that which the illustrious General Trochu, during the siege of Paris, had deposited among the minutes of M. Ducloux, notary. We are assured by the partisans of Leo XIII. that those plans, that that policy are admirable; but, as ill-luck will have it, they are out of place. Had they been applied at the critical moment, when Pius IX. mounted the throne of St. Peter, and when millions of worthy simpletons called out to him, "Take heart, Holy Father!" they would certainly have caused Europe to retrograde a generation or two. But coming after the Syllabus they are simply senseless. There is a limit to public credulity. The Roman Catholic populations are crazed, it is true; but they are not as simple as that. It has been possible to make them accept the infallibility of the Pope, the Immaculate Conception, war against science, against reason, against human liberty, by telling them that this was the essence and the concentration of the Catholic dogma; now it is impossible for the Vatican to shake off the Syllabus which it was pleased to impose on the world as supreme law. Pater legem quam fecisti.

What Pius IX. has done, Leo XIII. cannot undo. He abided by the absolute logic of his principle; after slight hesitations he entered so fully, so resolutely, so easily into the tradition and the true instincts of the Roman Catholic dogma, that he soon thought himself infallible. This was but a curious phenomenon of childish simplicity. But, unfortunately for himself, Leo XIII. is more than a mere theologian, as was his predecessor; he is moreover a politician. In mere ordinary junctures he would even be a very crafty and shrewd diplomatist. But we are passing through strange events; we are living at a time whose grandeur and solemnity, it seems to us, are not appreciated by our contemporaries. Where a terrible will is needed, Leo XIII. has brought only a more or less refined mind; where ardent conviction, and at the very least inflexible obstinacy are required, he thinks he can manage with vulgar shrewdness, with paltry cleverness. He is too much of a politician to have good theology. He is too much of a theologian to have good policy. He displeases some and does not satisfy the others. Observe him: he does not show himself, but steals off; he does not walk, but tacks. He wanders like a soul in bale, bending before every wind of doctrine. The truth is, he is outside of the principle of his Church; he has only shifting soil beneath his feet. His qualities themselves—his best qualities especially—turn against him, while the defects of Pius IX. had much to do with his success. A sensible man, Leo XIII. would like to be practical; he has no taste for exaggeration and bluster; words do not intoxicate him; he is not inebriated with gas. A man of the world, he understands the necessities of the time, and would like to satisfy them, and this it is that will cause his ruin, thank God! A more expert and more sensible pilot could not have been placed upon the vessel of the Church which Pius IX. so recklessly launched amidst reefs and whirlpools. But here there is no need of experience; more than talent is required, and we believe that genius itself would not suffice. He is harnessed to the ungrateful task of saving his Church—a fact which brings him the underhand hatred, the perfidious spite of the ecclesiastical tribe, who still wonder how Pius IX., that providential being, as they say, and as we willingly repeat, led her gaily, brilliantly, and gloriously to perdition. Indeed, Leo XIII., an aristocratic nature, a person cultivated, delicate and refined, is too much beyond the vulgar to become one of the heroes of the vulgar Catholic; while Pius IX., that great child, had all the requisites to become the idol of the masses; ideal of the robe-bearers, he was rather a woman than a man. Although a nobleman born he could not fail to be popular, for after all he was neither better nor worse than a mere Transylvanian. It was thought that Pius IX. gave the impulse to his church, and none were more convinced of this than the worthy man himself; the fact was, however, that he merely followed the impulsion of the masses; now, every mass is a woman. The skull which bore the triple crown was the reservoir where form and consistency were taken by the aspirations of a million young devotees and fifteen million old bigots, who crowd the New as well as the Old World. He could truly say, My name is Legion. The only popularities which have equalled his in our century are those of Garibaldi and of Napoleon I.—the three Italians.

No better proof of the popularity of the late pontiff could be given than the millions of francs which spontaneously flowed into the reservoir of St. Peter's Pence. Not a day passed but a prelate brought him the subscriptions of some diocese of Europe or America. Offerings here, presents there, there was no more count kept of the crosses, the ink-stands, the vases, the golden chalices, the pens ornamented with brilliants, the hollow virgins filled with lous and napoleons, or stuffed with bank-notes, delicate symbols. The footmen of the holy man sold his drawers to rich dowagers, his socks, whose virtue no washerwoman had extracted, to old marchionesses; the bandages which had served to dress his suppurating leg were contended for. Even in the best days of indulgences no such affluence of ducats and pistoles had ever been seen, and the Vatican lulled itself with the illusion that this state of things would last a long time.

After the death of Pius IX. the river of gold and silver continued to flow rapidly for a while. Moreover, notwithstanding his bounty, the worthy man had piled up a goodly number of ducats, and it is owing to the reserve he left that the new government has been able to support itself so far.

But the treasury is visibly becoming empty, and with the pence which are brought to him and which are daily diminishing in number, Saint Peter can no longer live. Saint Peter upbraids the bishops, the bishops upbraid the vicars, the vicars upbraid their congregations, but these turn a deaf ear, and the more they are upbraided, the less they give. A wind of avarice and sterility seems to have blown over the Catholic purses. The fraternities complain, the arch-fraternities are distressed. The undertaking of the Sacred Heart of Montmartre—the plan was to enclose Paris between two fortresses of bigotry, the basilica of Saint Geneviève and another high, deep, immense cathedral—has ceased for want of funds. The interesting swarm of virgin mothers, the black and the white, the Mélanies and the Bernadettes, are also beginning to complain and groan at the hardness of the times. Those who gave them gold of yore give them only silver now; those who gave them silver give them only copper, and crabbedly at that; those who gave them copper no longer give them anything at all. And, behold! those who gave nothing are becoming bolder every day in their scoffs and banter. Things have come to a pretty pass, indeed!

Times have changed, it is said, because the Pope has changed. Prelates, beguins, monks, and monkings, nuns and nunnettes, curates and vicars, deacons and sub-deacons, beadles and sextons, all re-criminate. It is no longer the fault of Voltaire and Rousseau; it is the fault of the new Pope. Has he not taken it into his head to enter into a compact with the Revolution? Is he not concocting heaven knows what deplorable armistice with liberalism? The opposition against the Holy Father is still sly and underhand, but it is already only half concealed. It is becoming marked, especially in the ranks of those who only yesterday were the most fanatical about the papal infallibility. This might have been expected. Holidays are instituted for the celebration of the various anniversaries of Pius IX.—the anniversary of his death, of his election, of his consecration, etc. . . . But as for celebrating the election of poor Leo XIII., no one cares to think of it. On the other hand, it was rumored at Rome the other day that an attempt at poisoning was made against the Pope. Is this true? Is it false? Chi lo sa? But whether founded or not, this rumor indicates clearly enough that at that other Ganganelli the end of Ganganelli is foreseen, if he remain a Ganganelli and does not abjure all idea of reform, abdicating into the hands of the dark-working general of the Jesuits, the Reverend Father Beckx.

But what matters it, after all? Whether he live long or little, whether he be prudent or unskillful, whether he be wise or foolish, whether he be squarely ultramontane or whether he condescend to act the comedy of liberalism to the close, the actual Pontiff will have a sad end. It is upon his head that the dark Parcae have directed the fatal exploitation of the insults and taunts which the too fortunate Pius IX. was forever flinging at justice, progress, and goodness. But what matters the Pope to-day? It is with Papacy we have to deal. ELIE RECLUS.

FRANKLIN'S PARABLE.

[When Benjamin Franklin was in London, he went one Sunday to hear the celebrated Whitfield preach, who was so pleased, that in company with several of his friends he called upon the great philosopher, and a very interesting conversational season was enjoyed by all, principally upon the lack of tolerance and charity. Franklin opened his Bible and apparently read a parable from it upon intolerance. Whitfield was much surprised upon hearing it, but said nothing more about it. He went home, and hunted his Bible through for the parable in vain; then he called together a large number of his Methodist friends, but they were no more successful than he had been in their attempts to find the parable. Finally, he again called upon Franklin, and in much perplexity said to him that the parable was not in his

Bible. "Well, brother," said Franklin, laughing, "I don't think it is." The philosopher had improvised the parable with the Bible open before him, and the good divine had pretty clearly had it stamped upon his mind in his endeavors to find it. This parable was afterwards published in a book in England, but it has never appeared, we believe, in any of his lives or collected writings in this country. A venerable friend, who is a great admirer of Franklin, has sent us a copy, and we think our readers will thank us for here giving it to them.—Boston Home Journal.]

1. And it came to pass after these things, that Abraham sat in the door of his tent, about the going down of the sun.

2. And behold a man, bowed with age, came from the way of the wilderness, leaning on a staff.

3. And Abraham arose and met him, and said unto him, "Turn in, I pray thee, and wash thy feet and tarry all night, and thou shalt arise early on the morrow and go on thy way."

4. But the man said, "Nay, for I will abide under this tree."

5. And Abraham pressed him greatly; so he turned, and they went into the tent, and Abraham baked unleavened bread, and they did eat.

6. And when Abraham saw that the man blessed not God, he said unto him, "Wherefore dost thou not worship the most high God, creator of heaven and earth?"

7. And the man answered and said, "I do not worship the God thou speakest of, neither do I call upon his name; for I have made to myself a God, which abideth always in mine house, and provideth me with all things."

8. And Abraham's zeal was kindled against the man, and he arose and fell upon him, and drove him forth with blows into the wilderness.

9. And at midnight God called unto Abraham, saying, "Abraham, where is the stranger?"

10. And Abraham answered and said, "Lord, he would not worship thee, neither would he call upon thy name; therefore have I driven him out from before my face into the wilderness."

11. And God said, "Have I borne with him these hundred ninety and eight years, and nourished him; and clothed him, notwithstanding his rebellion against me; and couldst not thou, that art thyself a sinner, bear with him one night?"

12. And Abraham said, "Let not the anger of the Lord wax hot against his servant; lo, I have sinned; forgive me, I pray thee."

13. And Abraham arose, and went forth into the wilderness, and sought diligently for the man and found him, and returned with him to the tent; and when he had entreated him kindly, he sent him away on the morrow with gifts.

14. And God spake again unto Abraham, saying, "For this thy sin shall thy seed be afflicted four hundred years in a strange land."

15. "But for thy repentance will I deliver them; and they shall come forth with power, and with gladness of heart, and with much substance."

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

SPRING FLOWERS.

The dainty Snow-drop, herald of the Spring,
Lays its white cheek upon the lingering snow,
With lovely petals pale and shivering;
Her sisters stir below.

Now bursts the Crocus from its night of sleep;
The Daffodil and Hyacinth we see;
While o'er the plain the trailing Laurels creep
'Midst the Anemone.

These gorgeous blooms are dials of the Spring;
And, clothed in beauty, fair in countenance,
They mark (with life-blood through each quickening)
The season's swift advance.

Creation wakes from torpid Winter's sleep,
Sending new life through artery and vein;
As yet too young, the race grasps not the deep
Design of Flora's reign—

Her mystic beauty, her related ties,
With glittering life which flutters o'er and feeds
On nectar that her teeming cup supplies,
Responsive to its needs.

But we shall reach it; vested with fresh power,
Clear, lynx-eyed Science scans the long-concealed,
The occult use of plant and leaf and flower,
That hence shall be revealed.

ANNA GARDNER.

NANTUCKET, April 18.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 26.

A. B. Swaine, $2.25; J. Campbell, $2; American News Co., $4.84; Otto Von Geldern, $6.66; Nathaniel Cummings, $3.20; B. Westerman & Co., $2.15; Aug. Brentano, Jr., 50 cents; Thomas Harrison, $1.50; P. H. Philbrick, $1.20; Sarah E. Whitney, $3; A. Walther, Jr., $3.20; M. F. Whitehead, $5; Geo. W. Park, $3.20; F. E. Hamblet, 75 cents; A. Werner, $3.20; John L. Whiting, $10; New England News Co., $2.76; R. Wilkin, $7.70; T. B. Skinner, $1.35; Dr. T. Johnson, $10; J. C. Kearns, $1.50; J. H. Hulbert, $3.20; E. C. Walker, $4; O. A. Greenleaf, $1; D. B. Hale, $2; C. A. Miller, 25 cents; M. L. Hawley, $1; M. B. Bryant, $10; M. L. Weems, $4.40; Mrs. C. G. Francis, $3.20; W. H. Spencer, $3.20; A. M. Howland, $1.07; F. J. Humphrey, $3.20; Chas. E. Perkins, $1.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 1, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 221 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLDO OFFICE, No. 35 MONROE STREET: J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERNEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIAB WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The twelfth annual meeting of the Free Religious Association will be held in Boston on the 29th and 30th of May.

The Association will hold its opening session for business (election of officers, hearing of reports, etc.) at Union Hall, in the Young Men's Christian Union Building, on Boylston Street, at 7.45 o'clock, Thursday evening, the 29th.

The Convention on Friday, the 30th, will be held in Parker Memorial Hall, corner of Berkeley and Appleton Streets, with sessions at 10.30 A.M. and 3 P.M.

The new President, Prof. Adler, is to preside, and at one of the sessions will make a special address giving his views of the "Practical Needs of Free Religion." Other speakers and topics will be announced hereafter.

On Friday evening, the Association will have its Social Festival in Union Hall.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

THE DELHI (Iowa) Monitor tells this story: "It was a revival meeting in Hopkinton. Several had related their experience. Mr. W. being called upon, arose and spoke as follows: 'Brothers and Sisters: You all know I joined the church last winter. Shortly after I came out on the Lord's side, a man, one of the devil's agents, offered to bet $5 that I would not hold out a year. I covered that bet with $5. The time isn't quite up yet, but it will be in two weeks. Five dollars will come good to a man these hard times. Thank the Lord. Brothers and sisters, if any of you should see any man who wants to invest any money in the same way, just send him on. Pray that I may remain faithful.'"

THE MAY NUMBER of the North American Review opens with an article by the Hon. George W. McCrary, Secretary of War, on "Our Election Laws." The second paper is entitled "Campaign Notes in Turkey," and is by Lieut. F. V. Greene, U.S.A. "German Socialism in America" is concluded in this number. "Absent Friends" is the title of a graceful eulogy by Mr. O. B. Frothingham on six noted contributors to the Review who have recently died: namely, Dana, Bryant, Motley, Cushing, Hillard, and Bayard Taylor. The literary careers of these men are reviewed somewhat critically, and yet with a kindly hand. One of the most striking articles in the number is a symposium on "Law and Design in Nature." The discussion is opened by Prof. Simon Newcomb. His antagonists are President Noah Porter of Yale College, President James McCoah of Princeton College, Rev. James Freeman Clarke, and Rev. Joseph Cook, each of whom assaults the Professor's position with all the zeal of his faith, repudiating emphatically the scientific position. Mr. Lloyd Bryce follows with "A Plea for Sport." "Notes on Recent Progress in Applied Science," by President Henry Morton of Stevens Institute, discussing late experiments in electric science and molecular physics, close the number.

IS THE "CONSENSUS" A FAILURE?

Is there any practical value in the principle of universal reason, as coordinate with the principle of private judgment? Is there any practical value in the principle that, when individuals differ, a final appeal always lies from the provisional decisions of the individual to the Consensus of the Competent? That the decisions of the individual, whether competent or incompetent, and whether with respect to belief or to conduct, are final for himself, is incontrovertible and has not been controverted. But has the principle that the individual, when he has spoken or acted, is responsible for his words or deeds to the reason and conscience of mankind, no valuable applications in practice? In other words, is the Consensus of the Competent, as a court of final appeal, a practical failure?

Mr. Spencer, in his kind but vigorous criticism on the next page, comes to this conclusion. He thinks that the principle "seems to break down when we wish to use it most." Our admission that the individual is sometimes in the right, "even as against the Consensus of the Competent of his own day," destroys in his opinion all practical utility in the principle. He pictures the fanatic as complacently setting himself up as this exceptional individual in the right, and conceives no answer except—"Wait! The Consensus of the Competent of a later day will determine whether you are right or wrong."

It is not we who suggest that answer. The answer which we have not ambiguously "suggested" is of quite another sort. To the fanatic who conceives himself to be the exceptional seer or discoverer in advance of his age, we should say: "Friend, if you hold the truth in custody, all you have to do is to make it incontrovertibly plain by your facts and arguments." Submit your entire case, with all its grounds and conclusions, to the calm inspection of those who know. It will very speedily become apparent whether you are in the right. If you are in the right, you will be sustained. If you are in the wrong, you will be condemned. If you refuse to submit your case or to acknowledge the tribunal, you condemn yourself in advance. But in no case will your mere assertion of your own competency weigh a feather in determining the result. If your facts and arguments do not prove your competency, you have got to submit to the penalty of incompetency, volens volens."

Now the fanatic who honestly submits his whole case will soon reveal himself in such a light that the verdict of his own day will stand uncontradicted till the "crack of doom." There is no need to adjourn the case to another generation. Folly bears unmistakable ear-marks of its own. The ass in the lion's skin was known by his bray, and that immediately. All that was needed for the revelation was to give him a fair hearing; he did the rest for himself! So also, if the supposed fanatic is really a great discoverer, he will speedily establish his own discovery before the tribunal of the competent. The invention of printing and the wide diffusion of knowledge, by vastly multiplying the competent, have shortened by centuries the period of time necessary to decide whether the innovator is a fanatic or a genius. It is no longer possible for any man to be very much in advance of his age; but it is still possible for many men to be very far in its rear. Let the fanatic only be encouraged to expose his ignorance before the intelligent; he pillories himself. He is dangerous only while he speaks to the ignorant and avoids the well-informed. The moment he lays his whole case before the world, his power for mischief begins to perish, provided it is not revived and increased by persecution.

Now Mr. Spencer materially misconceives the kind of service which may be fairly expected from the Consensus of the Competent, as a tribunal of final appeal, when he supposes that this service is to lie in convincing the fanatic himself. We are tempted to quote Scripture, and confess that the Bible gives good counsel on this occasion: "Ephraim is joined to his idols; let him alone." The wise are utterly indifferent as to the fanatic himself; they have neither expectation nor wish to convert him; all they wish is to destroy his power for social mischief. The Marquis Beccaria (recently quoted by Mr. Wright) was plainly of our opinion on this point, and seems to have substantially anticipated our "Ordeal of Laughter," when he said: "Painful and corporal punishments should never be applied to fanaticism. Infamy and ridicule only should be employed against fanatics; if the first, their pride will be overbalanced by the pride of the people; and we may judge of the power of the second, if we consider that even truth is obliged to summon all her force, when attacked by error armed with ridicule."

Precisely so. That is the only way to deal with fanatics, so long as they prudently put their fanaticism into spoken or printed words alone. When they proceed, however, to overt acts of a criminal and anti-social nature, then we have not the slightest objection to Mr. Spencer's still more vigorous "seven-shooter" doctrine; nay, we applaud it. Society has a natural right to laugh the fanatic out of the way, if he assaults it with his tongue alone, and to knock him down, if he assaults it with his fists in addition. Of course the fanatic will not pay any heed to the Consensus of the Competent; he would not be a fanatic if he did; it is only men of sense who know enough to reverence knowledge or to profit by the world's experience. The Consensus of the Competent would indeed be thoroughly useless, if its only use were to be quoted in profitless controversy with the fanatic himself. The rule does not break down here, as Mr. Spencer thinks it does, because its practical utility lies in a wholly different direction. Every court would be "impracticable," if its object were only to convince the culprit at the bar of the heinousness of his offence; his obduracy is to be taken for granted.

Let us be clear on this point. The object of the Consensus of the Competent is not to get wisdom into the fanatic's head (a surgical operation would fall to do that), but to make plain to the community at large what is true and right in disputed issues. It is only in cases where individuals differ that there is any occasion for appeal to this tribunal. As a court of final adjudication on appeal from some individual's private judgment, the Consensus of the Competent renders daily the most important practical services to mankind; and these services would be enhanced a million-fold, provided the profound respect for proved competency which Science fosters could be universally made to take the place of the ignorant self-sufficiency engendered by Individualism. There is no higher proof of real wisdom than to know clearly what one does not know, as Socrates showed long ago. He who is thoroughly competent in any one thing ought to understand what competency really is; he at least is under bonds to be modest. The "conceit of knowledge without the reality," however, is the most subtle of all diseases. The only protection of society against its ravages is to subject the infected to the quarantine, and this is the precise function of the Consensus of the Competent.

A fresh illustration will exhibit fully, we think, the kind of practicability possessed by the rule which Mr. Spencer thinks impracticable. From the Boston Advertiser of April 25, we extract this editorial paragraph:—

In the case of Charles H. Hartwell, late freight conductor on the Old Colony Railroad, tried for manslaughter on the ground of responsibility for the fatal railroad accident at Wollaston last October, the jury, after an absence of less than two hours, brought in a verdict of guilty. Their declaration, after hearing all the evidence, is that the accident was caused by Mr. Hartwell's culpable neglect of duty. It is a severe judgment, but we cannot say it is unjust. No one accuses Mr. Hartwell of any malice. He intended no evil, but he took the risk of violating the rules which were established to secure the lives of the travellers on the road, and the result of that disobedience was terrible. He acted on his own judgment in a matter where his conduct had been plainly prescribed. He assumed a responsibility not belonging to him, and in that was his fault. The case goes up to the Supreme Court on exceptions. If they are not allowed, he will be sentenced; but the severity of the sentence depends on the discretion of the judge, taking into view all the circumstances. The verdict, however, is important as a warning to all engaged in railroading, that negligence, when so much depends on strict obedience to rules, will not be esteemed an excusable fault by juries.

Here was a case, so far as appears, of nothing but Individualism—the exaltation of "private judgment" above the Consensus of the Competent, as expressed in the standing rules of the road. The verdict is simply an emphatic declaration that the plea of "private judgment" will not be regarded by society as a satisfactory excuse for injurious acts when the Consensus of the Competent stands a visible finger-post to conduct, or as relieving the individual from his responsibility to mankind for the exercise of his "private judgment." The insufficiency of the "private judgment" plea, the responsibility of the individual to universal reason,—these are the principles that are embodied in this just decision of the court.

It is altogether immaterial whether Mr. Hartwell still considers himself "competent" and still "denies the competency" of the Directors' rules: the facts prove that the competency was with them rather than with him, and by the facts themselves was he condemned. He is probably unconvinced by the verdict; he probably considers himself aggrieved by it. The practical utility of the trial, however, does not depend on its success in convincing him of his error; it depends on its success in deterring other conductors from trusting to their own "private judgment" in similar circumstances. This is a matter that involves the lives of vast multitudes of travellers; and they have a right to demand that the Consensus of the Competent, and not the "private judgment" of any individual, shall be responsible for their safety.

Precisely the same is the test of the applicability or inapplicability of the rule which Mr. Spencer questions. This rule is not proved to be "impracticable" by its failure to convince the fanatic himself; it is proved to be thoroughly practicable, and a failure at all, if it is successful in enforcing the fanatic's responsibility to society for his words and deeds. It conspicuously succeeds, if the fear of its penalties of "ridicule and infamy" deter him from propagating principles injurious to society. It conspicuously succeeds, if the fear of still severer penalties deters him from carrying these principles into acts which are still more injurious to society. It conspicuously succeeds, if the infliction of these penalties upon the fanatic, when the fear of them has failed to deter him, does deter others from imitating him. The practical value of the reform which will have been achieved, when the defiantly irresponsible spirit of Individualism has given place to the deep sense of responsibility to mankind which is generated by Science, cannot possibly be overestimated.

The Individualist to-day, when he proclaims the absolute sovereignty of private judgment both in belief and conduct, and denies all right in the universal reason of society to hold him responsible for his words and acts, indulges the pleasing conceit that he occupies a lofty summit—is perched on "heights sublime"; whereas the poor creature has simply crawled off from omnipresent social obligation into a hole in the ground!

Hear the song which floats up from one of these subterranean prophets, through the Word for May, 1879:—

"Quoting M. D. Conway, who, when discussing love, once remarked: 'The Luther of morals has not yet appeared,' Laura Kendrick honored us by saying last summer: 'The Luther of morals has appeared, and is now in Dedham Jail.' If we were ever worthy of that high compliment, it was February 25, 1873, when, putting our faith into associated fact, we initiated the New England Free Love League, demanding the right of Private Judgment in morals, the abolition of marriage by the immediate and unconditional repeal of laws against adultery and fornication."

The italics and capitals in this extract are Mr. Heywood's own. The "Luther of morals" faithfully intones the liturgy of Individualism from his hole in the ground, and pipes the psalm of its new dispensation in a key likely to catch all ears. But "private judgment in morals" means not only the abolition of marriage and the legalization of adultery, but the "immediate and unconditional repeal" of all moral law. It is a waste of time to make two bites of a cherry. Crime of all sorts is only a matter of taste, a harmless personal eccentricity which it is "invasion" and "coercion" and "persecution" to visit even with the mildest expression of public or private displeasure. Robbery, arson, rape, murder, all are but exercises of "private judgment in morals," sacred from all censure—much more from all interference. One might well wonder why false imprisonment, a mere exercise of "private judgment in morals" by sundry other individuals, recently elicited such piteous and clamorous complaints from this not very heroic "Luther of morals." Can he not stand the working of his own rule? Why must he hurl his inkstand so furiously at the Devil of "Society," when the poor Devil was only practising what "Luther" himself preaches? There is laughter in all this for one who has even a dim sense of the humorous. Indignation over imprisonment for opinion's sake is a natural sentiment in one who holds all individuals, singly and collectively, subject to a law of justice and of right which no "private judgment" can possibly annul; but it is positively too funny in the penny-pitcher who cries: "Heads I win—tails you lose!" and then is tricked out of his copper after all. The "Luthers of morals" should be made of more stoical stuff, or they will drown the "inextinguishable laughter" of Homer's gods in the still more uproarious cackling of Yankee mortals.

Absolute moral irresponsibility—that is the inevitable and logical outcome of Individualism, with its one idea of "private judgment in morals." Strict responsibility to moral law—that is the equally inevitable and logical outcome of the Scientific Method, with its great principles of universal reason and the Consensus of the Competent. Practically, these two principles lie at the very foundation of all republican government and institutions; and they are no failure unless republicanism itself is a failure. A very hasty analysis will find them permeating the entire political and social structure of the republic, no less than the entire philosophy of modern science and civilization. Surely these are not failures. And neither are those great principles failures by virtue of which alone they exist. Individualism has no future in America; and if liberalism harnesses to its car this ill-omened steed, it too will have no future.

THE "CONSENSUS OF THE COMPETENT" A PRACTICAL FAILURE.

No doubt many "individualists" are open to the charge of egotism, as many conservatives are to that of stupidity. As the Romanist consults his Church, and the average protestant his Bible, as his oracle, so many individualists, perhaps, are laboring under the pleasant delusion that all that is needed is to tap their own breasts to find infallibility. If the former manifest a slavish reverence for everything that has the dust of antiquity upon it, the latter are too apt to exhibit a supercilious contempt for the hallowed beliefs and garnered experience and wisdom of the ages. Whoever can shake the faith of the former in the authority of the past, and can make the latter distrust a little their own part in the creation of the world, deserves the thanks of every one who believes in progress, and yet has some respect for the opinions of our fathers. Mr. Abbot for nearly ten years has taught us in THE INDEX the authority of the individual reason and the sanctity of the individual conscience; and now, if he finds truth on the other side and shows us the equal and coördinate authority of "Universal Reason" as represented in the "Consensus of the Competent," he deserves our double thanks.

But, confessing as I do that all men are almost sure to be wiser than any one man, and ready as I am to apply that principle to my neighbor and say: "Submit to the Consensus of the Competent," yet I must confess that I am so much of an individualist that, should there come a conflict between my own conscience and the conscience of the "Consensus," I must obey the dictates of my own conscience, come what will. Even though I should find myself in a minority of one, I should stand by my principle and shout with Frederick Douglass—"One with God is a majority," and I am that one! On this point Mr. Abbot would agree with me. Wherein do we differ?

Apparently in the applicability of his rule of two O's. To us it seems to break down exactly when we wish to use it most. He admits that "the individual may be, and often has been, in the right, even as against the Consensus of the Competent of his own day," etc. True! And there is no fanatic so much of a fool as not to know this fact. If you attempt to silence him with your double C extinguisher, he clamors his pet tem the louder. In vain you quote against him the "Consensus of the Competent." He denies that they are competent,—swears that he is the only competent, flings back into your teeth your own admission "that the individual often has been in the right, even as against the Consensus of the Competent of his own day," and complacently assumes his case to be an illustration of that fact.

It is useless to say, as Mr. Abbot suggests: "Wait! The Consensus of the Competent of a later day will determine whether you are right or wrong." No individual can be expected to wait until, perhaps, he may be in his grave, to get the seal of approval of his words or acts from the Consensus.

Now it is because this rule cannot surely be made to apply to the fanatic in "his own day" that it is a practical failure. A rule is only good that rules now and here. No doubt the Consensus of the Competent, in the long run, will overtake the communist and the free lover; but if it cannot catch them before they have run their life out in mischief,—if it merely hangs their ghost and damns their name,—we need a rule that has not such a "long run."

The best rule I know of for that communist who attempts to burn my reaper in order to raise his wages, or for that free lover who attempts to violate my daughter or seduce my wife on the plea that "he has a natural right to commit adultery," is, not to labor to convince him that the Consensus of the Competent has condemned incendiarism and adultery, and should rule him, but to argue with such a person with a good seven-shooter. It is the only sort of logic such people can appreciate. If the adulterer or communist tells me, as he may, that he is sincere and obeying the dictates of his own conscience, I reply: "So am I." There is no way to settle which conscience shall rule, except by the last appeal—to arms; no way but to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer. In my opinion, it is but whistling against the wind to talk about the Consensus of the Competent with people who assassinate emperors, and, worse, assassinate the purity and peace of the home.

It is because all appeals to this rule of "Universal Reason" before such fanatics are utterly vain that we say the rule is practically a failure. Let such people indulge in talk to their hearts' content; but when they begin to form in line for a charge, open on them, not with Quaker-guns or any other nonsense, but with something that will settle it, once for all, with them. Severe, is it? Well, these are diseases that demand surgical treatment. We must recognize the painful fact, and act accordingly.

W. H. S.

MARRIAGE.

Some of the Old Testament anecdotes convey lessons of the soundest sense, and one of them I would recommend to the careful attention of our much excited friend, H. Clay Neville. It is about a man who was so much afraid that the Ark of the Lord would be upset that he bore a hand to steady it, for which the Lord does not appear to have thanked him.

Mr. Neville very well says, "Every rational man and woman who has the faintest conception of the sublime loyalty of true love recoils from the loathsome atmosphere of that foul doctrine which advocates the destruction of marital fidelity. Parental fondness, filial love, and all the sweet and holy sentiments that cluster around the altar of home rise up to exorcise the infatuated heresy that would break the sacred bond of family union." Most excellently well said, and perfectly true in fact. Where, then, is the danger of family union becoming extinct even if the laws of marriage should perish? Rational men and women are a law to themselves, infinitely stronger than any statute. The heresy they loathe never for a moment influences their conduct or abates their marital fidelity. As to the irrational men and women, the only ones that marriage laws can affect at all, there is an open question whether those laws secure marital fidelity as well as they might, or even better than no laws. Mr. Neville would be well employed in discussing the question whether that "sublime loyalty of true love" of which he speaks, has been produced by the laws of marriage or by the right teaching of the nature of things; by penal statutes against heresy, or by a scientific collation of human experience. It is refreshing for us to learn from his pen the fact that there are rational men and women whose marital fidelity is perfectly safe without the constraint of statute, priest, or magistrate. So, as an assured fact, marriage and the home will continue to exist as long as such people do. This Ark of God is not going to upset itself, even by Mr. Neville's own showing.

Yet he is fearfully excited about it; sets out by discarding "serious argument" and "dignified logic against this system of licentiousness"; talks about "refined instinct," about marriage being in danger from the "free love" infamy, about a virtuous indignation sweeping away the sickly doctrine, and closes by saying that it "will be silenced by the sober sense of reason and right." Truly we would like to see a little more of that "sober sense" in Mr. Neville himself. Does he think sober sense consists in abominating, loathing, and questioning the motives and marital fidelity of all people whose opinions on a very difficult subject do not agree with his?

"Liberalism," he says, "needed the scourge it has received from public sentiment." Well, if he was ever a liberal, it seems to have driven him back to the doctrine of "total depravity," in regard to a large portion of men and women. He seems to think that nothing but law prevents them from being worse than the beasts. I am afraid it will fare with him as it did with the poor bat, that neither the beasts nor the birds will fellowship him.

Z. W.

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

There are six million Freemasons in the world.

Carlyle receives about $4,000 a year from his books.

There are twenty-six Baptist churches in France.

There are more men than women in the United States.

"Pedalistic idiot" is Californian for a female pedestrian.

Printing offices are exempted from taxation in Mississippi.

Leadville is thought to be another Western trap for Eastern men.

Mr. Moody has added another to the army of the Lord. It is a son.

The Czar is going to try to stamp out Protestantism in South Russia.

London policemen arrest any person seen dropping orange peel in the street.

Queen Victoria's palace at Windsor contains $9,000,000 worth of plate.

Photographs can be taken at midnight by the light of the Brush electric lamp.

An agricultural college for girls is a project that is being talked up in Michigan.

Mr. Moody is one of the attractions expected in Boston during Anniversary Week.

There is no higher duty than to work for the good of the whole world.—King Asoka, 350 B. C.

Rev. S. E. Herrick says: "Men are God's lost children." So many Charlie Rosses, we suppose.

The proposed submarine tunnel between England and France will be nearly twenty-three miles long.

The Chinese theatre at Sacramento, California, has commenced a drama which is to run thirty days.

The ancient prophecies, as related to modern life and need, are very much like last year's weather predictions.

There are no fewer than four thousand women postmasters in this country, and the number is on the increase.

George Macdonald, the preacher, poet, and novelist, is in very poor health. He has recently lost his son Maurice.

A German physician has demonstrated that early rising is a very bad habit. Let those who lie late in bed sleep on this.

Jacob Perkins invented the first nail-forging machine in 1790. In the same year the first American patent was granted.

Will the "returning board" be one of the planks in the platform of either political party in the next presidential campaign?

The railway interests of the United States represent a value greater than that of Great Britain, Germany, and France combined.

New reading of Shakespeare according to Simon Cameron and the widow Oliver: "The course of false love never did run smooth."

Edison is worth $150,000. He dresses plainly, hates sham, is aloof in politics, an atheist in religion, and parts his hair on the side.

Baron Rothschild holds a mortgage on the whole of Palestine, as security for his loan of two hundred million francs to the Turkish Government.

The Herald and Investigator are trying to play the parts of lion and lamb, but they have not yet come to the point where they can lie down together.

Miss Julia Smith, of Glastonbury fame, has just been married, at the age of eighty-seven. Evidently Miss Smith believes it is "never too late to mend."

The report of the president of the French commission appointed to examine the American school system speaks with cordial approbation of the high schools.

A recent writer, speaking of seeing Tennyson in a London park, describes him as "one of the oddest-looking creatures I have ever seen out of a Mormon meeting."

Dr. John Lord says that Roman law favored those who had the most money to spend on Congress. We are making rapid strides towards Rome, in a legal way.

Opium-smoking finds little toleration in Japan. A man was recently sentenced to ten years' hard labor in Yokohama for violation of the law against the practice.

Neal Dow says that "the liquor traffic in Maine is confined to the larger cities and towns,—that it is carried on in secret, and only by the vilest part of the foreign population."

There is natural and historical evidence of the drying up of the valley of Mexico since that country was conquered by the Spaniards, and the process is said still to be going on.

New York City has three hundred and fifty-six Protestant Sunday-schools. There are besides sixty-two Sunday-schools divided among the Roman Catholics, Jews, and so forth.

In Henry Varley's new Baptist tabernacle in Melbourne, Australia, there is to be a large coffee-house where eatables will be furnished at a little over the cost price. The Church moves.

Paris population is divided as follows: One million seven hundred and fifty-four thousand Catholics, thirty-two thousand Lutherans, and twenty-three thousand and five hundred Jews.

Bishop Whipple, in a pastoral letter to the churches in his diocese, has forbidden the use of flowers in church decorations, and expressed disapproval of evergreens at Christmas.

A dispute has been raging in Madras over a hair from the beard of the prophet Mohammed. Six fanatical Mussulmans claim the sacred relic. The High Court of Madras has been appealed to.

Kai Kah Wong and Shon Kie Teal, two of the Chinese students sent to this country to be educated at the expense of their government, have been graduated from the Hartford High School with honors.

Dr. Schlemann has invited Drs. Virchow and Lindenschmidt, the greatest authorities in Germany on prehistoric archaeology, to assist him in his excavations at Hissarlik; and Dr. Virchow has already accepted.

Sunday-schools originated in the Roman Catholic Church. They were started in the early period of the Protestant Reformation, with a purpose of keeping children in the Church, out of the reach of dogmatic contagion.

Remarkable electric storms are said to occur on the summit of Pike's Peak. The whole mountain seems to be on fire, and the top one sheet of flame. Electricity comes out of every rock, and darts here and there with indescribable radiance.

One hundred and sixty-one thousand eight hundred and one men of over twenty years of age have died in this State during the time between May 1, 1843, and December 31, 1877. The average age at which they died was about fifty-one years.

It is reported that Col. Robert G. Ingersoll has offered one-half his income for the next five years, if necessary, in aid of the colored refugees. How many Christian D.D.'s have made a similar offer? If ye love not your colored brother whom ye have seen, etc., etc.

The German government permits such animals as monkeys, crocodiles, bear cubs, serpents, etc., to be transmitted by post. As many as forty thousand live animals are yearly sent in this way; and if crabs, frogs, bees, and small insects are counted, the total will be among the millions.

One of a company of Japanese youths sent to be educated at Lyons was recently received as a convert to the Roman Catholic Church. These young men, who were Buddhists, were confided to a former French Consul, a devout Catholic, and he took care to place their education in the hands of priests.

The Ritualistic papers are displeased with the privilege granted Mr. Sankey of holding services in the Parish Church of Chapel-en-le-Firth, Derbyshire, England, and have called upon the Bishop of Litchfield to interfere. Hold the fort, Mr. Sankey, remembering that, "So persecuted they the prophets which were before you."

Zoölogists cannot agree as to whether the camel exists anywhere in a wild state. Lieutenant Colonel Prejevalsky, the Russian traveller in Asia, says he saw no wild camels himself, but was assured by the natives that they were to be found in a marshy depression which extends between the two great lakes of Koko-Nor and Lob-Nor.

The number of scholars in average attendance at the British elementary schools last year was two million four hundred and five thousand one hundred and ninety-seven. The Church of England schools had an average attendance of one million three hundred and sixty-eight thousand and twenty-nine. There was nearly one million at all other schools, Wesleyan, Roman Catholic, etc.

The Unitarian Church Society of Newport, R. I., have voted to organize at once for a proper celebration of the centennial anniversary of the birth of William Ellery Channing, April 7, 1880. It was proposed to vote $50,000 for a memorial chapel; to locate the church centrally; to lay the corner-stone at the centennial celebration; to have the church completed five years afterwards; and to have it free from debt before being taken for use.

Prof. Swing, of Chicago, defends Col. Ingersoll, and justifies the use of ridicule as a weapon against the absurdities of the Pentateuch. We do not see why ridicule is not just as good a weapon to use against the absurdities of the New Testament as against the Old. The miracles of Matthew and Luke are not a whit more historical than the stories of Genesis, and no more deserving credence. The Professor needs to take one step more to be consistent.

Two or three years ago, there were nearly two hundred Americans, mostly young ladies, studying in the stately Lombard capital; but this number has been reduced to seventy or eighty. A correspondent to the New York Herald, writing from there, says: "There are graves of American and English girls in the Milan cemetery with which sad, sad stories are connected; of beautiful girls who came here full of courage and high hope of fame, only to find in the city which is reputed to be the home of music, disappointment, delusion, and death."

The Hartford Courant says that the Rev. A. B. Kendig, pastor of the Trinity Methodist Church in Worcester, Massachusetts, made a prayer before his farewell sermon last week in which, after having prayed for every member of the church, the choir, organist, sexton, and ushers, he finally prayed for "the one who, although hidden from sight, yet contributes so much to the musical part of our worship," ending, "O Lord! I mean the boy who blows the organ." Rev. Mr. Kendig is now stationed at the Bromfield Street Methodist Church of this city.

Miss Ann Oliver, a graduate of a Boston school of theology, has bought a church in New York, and has commenced preaching in it. She is a business woman, and means business evidently. She announced her intention to run the church, and told how she should do it. Whether a church can be maintained in New York "without fairs, exhibitions, entertainments, or shows of any kind," remains to be seen. She intends to try it. There is one advantage which she possesses over most ministers: she can tell the truth as she sees it without being in danger of being turned out of the church for doing so. If every preacher owned his church, there would soon be a different theology preached.

Rev. Mr. Marston, of the First Presbyterian Church of East Boston, declares: "The one thing we are concerned about to-day is, what does the Bible say?" Had he declared that the one thing we are not concerned about to-day is, what does the Bible say? he would have come nearer the truth. We are concerned about a great many other things besides the Bible say-so's, and a great deal more concerned about them too. How to get a living and pay one's honest debts; how to give one's children a good education and make them industrious, moral men and women; and how to go through the world and improve ourselves and it as we go along, are questions men are more concerned about than what the Bible says.

Communications.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.

This is a subject which deeply concerns all and one, about which there may be and is at the present time some difference of opinion or sentiment. The doctrine of "Individual Sovereignty," promulgated by Josiah Warren, was defined thus: "An individual may do as he pleases in all things without being responsible to any one, abolishing all law, restraint of every kind, and establishing the sovereignty of individual will." Warren continues: "With regard to mere difference of opinion in taste, convenience, economy, equality, or even right and wrong, good and evil, sanity and insanity, all must be left to the supreme decision of each person."

Josiah Warren, so far as we can learn, first came into public notice in connection with Owen's Community at New Harmony, and while there projected his mercantile hypothesis named "Equitable Commerce," which he tried to inaugurate in Ohio, Indiana, and New York, and afterwards in Massachusetts. He founded a community on Long Island, forty-two miles east of Brooklyn, called "Modern Times." Leaving "Modern Times," he came to Massachusetts and settled in Princeton, a town not entirely unknown to fame. Mr. Warren's attempts to rearrange American society, and to supersede the judiciary by "individual sovereignty," all signally failed. Yet there are, nevertheless, persons who were the disciples of Josiah Warren who still hold as he held, that "an individual may do as he pleases in all things, without being responsible to any one." If interfered with in this exercise of "individual sovereignty," then the cry is heard that "the liberty of the press is in danger." This sentiment has often been proclaimed within the past few months, both in private conversation and in public meetings.

The Germans have an old, significant proverb, "Thoughts are duty-free." Speech is their utterance; and the press may give them publicity, provided it be free, which is but the exercise of the primordial right of communion of mind with mind. The intercommunion of minds by the press is as essential an element of civilized society as conversation in the daily intercourse of men. The anecdote related by Allan is too pertinent a caricature of the restriction of communion to be omitted in this connection:—

"Tryzns, a tyrant, prohibited talking among his subjects in order to prevent dangerous combinations among the citizens. They then resorted to communion by gestures; these were prohibited. The citizens obeyed; but it so happened that some general misfortune touched all so deeply that they were on the point of breaking forth in tears. Such symptoms of their feelings would have been a sort of communion, and Tryzns ordered his police to prevent any weeping in the market places. Upon this, at length, some idea of individual and primordial right, indefeasible by government—and that of crying must be acknowledged to be one,—occurred to the patient burghers, and they revolted, and Tryzns the tyrant was assassinated."

The press is a power which may be used to promote good or evil, according to its ability or means to influence and control the will of the people by persuasion or threats. Knowledge and wealth confer power. Does the "liberty of the press" imply unrestrained license? Persons who advocate "individual sovereignty" say yes! Others, who hold that sovereignty is a power necessarily inherent in society, and cannot be abrogated because it is the vital principle of the State, say no! The notion of "individual sovereignty" is an absurdity, too manifest to need argument with any one outside of a mad-house.

The problem for solution is to find the quantity of liberty and the species of restraint necessary to secure to the press the greatest amount of free discussion consistent with the tranquillity of the community and the safety of private character. Under the term discussion is comprehended everything that can give rise to any of the offences known in the courts by the name of libel,—that is to say, written defamation, whether against the State or individuals, or of seditious words; and slander,—that is to say, spoken defamation against the State and against persons. Thus it is manifest that the liberty of the press has and must have its limits under the most free governments, our own Republic not being an exception. The offence of libel is as well known as any other in the law; and persons either betray ignorance or are guilty of bad faith who would mislead the multitude into the belief that the word libel is a novelty without legal meaning, because it signifies, etymologically, a little book; it comes rather from libellus famosus, that is to say, a defamatory writing,—hence one of those ellipses so common in technical language. The traducer of private character or the vilifier of government is guilty of libel, either private or public, and may be subjected to punishment. The liberty of the press, like liberty or liberalism, has its limits or bounds, beyond which it is unsafe to pass, as libel suits quite frequently demonstrate to all, not excepting such as believe in "individual sovereignty."

While all are left free to think, speak, write, and publish, yet none has the liberty to defame, slander, or vilify others under the plea even of "individual sovereignty"; nor has any one, under the plea of liberty of the press, a right to print or publish and circulate what tends to promote lewdness and sensuality. Liberty of the press is in principle as proper or improper a term as liberty of breathing, talking, walking, thinking, or working would be, and its being guaranteed in the fundamental laws of nations is explicable only by the continued efforts of power to restrain it, which are more frequently successful because they do not interfere with the physical interests of man, nor directly with the majority of the people. Yet it is of equally great importance, because man is man by his intellect more than by his body, and it affects equally, though not so directly, the welfare of the whole man. Because one has the indisputable right of free speech, he has not the right to use it everywhere and on all occasions. The free power of locomotion does not entitle one to walk where he chooses, whether it be in his neighbor's garden or into his parlor; nor is he allowed to disturb a public meeting by free speech. So may utterances by writing—in other words, the liberty of the press—be limited or suspended for personal safety or the defence of the nation.

"But suppose," says Prof. Huxley, the distinguished scientist, "for the sake of the argument, that we accept the proposition that the functions of the State may be properly summed up in the one great negative commandment, 'Thou shalt not allow any man to interfere with the liberty of any other man.' I am unable to see that the logical consequence is any such restriction of the power of government as its supporters imply. If my next door neighbor chooses to have his drains in such a state as to create a poisonous atmosphere, which I breathe at the risk of typhus and diphtheria, he restricts my just freedom to live just as much as if he went about with a pistol threatening my life; if he be allowed to let his children go unvaccinated, he might as well be allowed to leave strychnine lozenges about in the way of mine; and if he brings them up untainted and unrestrained to earn their living, he is doing his best to restrict my freedom, by increasing the burden of taxation for the support of jails and workhouses, which I have to pay."

If Prof. Huxley's reasoning be sound and logical—and who can doubt it?—then who will argue that the restraining of gross licentiousness of the press is an assault upon the "liberty of the press"? If foul drains from a dwelling poison the atmosphere with typhus and diphtheria, and strychnine lozenges lying about endanger the lives of children, or leaving the latter to grow up unvaccinated, untainted, and unrestrained increase taxes, how much more to be feared than all these combined, terrible as any one of them is when contemplated by itself, are the vile publications and indecent prints sent forth reeking with foulness and impurity, thus filling "the chambers of imagery" with all manner of uncleanness under the plausible guise and pretence of a free press! Yet any attempt to enforce the law against this traffic causes all interested in such wares, whether as manufacturers or dealers therein, to cry out in defence of the liberty of the press and the freedom of speech, as if these were in danger, seeing now that the hope of their gain is gone, for by this trade some had grown very rich. "Oh liberty! liberty! how many crimes are committed in thy name," exclaimed Madame Roland, at the time of the French Revolution.

Sir James Mackintosh defined liberty as "consisting of security against wrong." The press exercises, or may do so, what may be called a censorial power, that power which watches over morality, private life, and industrial economy, so far as they are integral elements of the Commonwealth. It was known to, and acted upon by the ancient nations. In Rome it was the censorship which Cicero called the magistratus pudoris et modestie. The sphere of the censor extended beyond morality; the censor watched, for example, over agriculture and took official notice of neglected farms. The Areopagites in Athens and the Spartan Ephori had a similar tutorial power. Modern nations do not enact this censorial power into institutions as the ancients did; but we can no more dispense with the principle than they could. That is to say, we too need a power which will impel the fadulent and restrain the licentious. The press may do much in this way, and ever has under wise management.

In this discussion concerning the liberty of the press, what specific thing is any one prevented from doing, either by law or by public opinion, which any sensible person would wish or desire to do? "As to legislation intended to discourage vice," says James Fitzjames Stephen, "I do not believe that any one would succeed in getting himself listened to if he were to say plainly, 'I admit that this measure will greatly discourage drunkenness and licentiousness. I also admit that it will involve no cruelty, no interference with privacy,—nothing that can in itself be described as an inadequate price for the promotion of sobriety or chastity. I oppose it, however, on the broad, plain ground, that, if people like to get drunk and to lead dissolute lives, no one else ought to interfere. I advocate liberty—to wit, the liberty of a set of boys and girls to get drunk on an evening at a particular house of entertainment specially provided for that and other purposes; and though I own that that evil can be prevented by fining the person who keeps the house £5, the sacred principles of liberty forbid it, at least as regards people over twenty-one. Virtue, up to twenty-one, knows no compromise, but we must draw the line somewhere; and when the twenty-first birthday anniversary is passed, Liberty claims her prey, and I concede her demand. Flat libertas, ruat justitia.' I think the public would say to such a speech, you and liberty may settle the matter as you please; but we see our way to a measure which will do no harm to any one, and which will keep both young fools and old fools out of harm's way. If Freedom does not like it, let her go and sit on the heights self-gathered in her prophetic mind, and send the fragments of her mighty voice rolling down the wind. She will be better employed in spouting poetry on the rocks of the Matterhorn than in patronizing vice on the flags of the Haymarket."

LEANDER WETHERELL.

A "FRIENDS" VIEW OF THE COMPROMISE.

Says William Penn, "It is the root of rantism to assert that nothing is a duty incumbent upon thee but what thou art persuaded is thy duty." And yet he could, no doubt, tolerate the idea of Edward Burroughs when he said: "That is no command from God to me that he commands to another," for he saw that herein was the harmony of Religious Liberty with the restraints of Society organization. And this is not paradoxical, but is in just accordance with the true method of universal peace, fellowship, harmony, and patience! How wise was the practice of John Woolman under the leadings of the Spirit of Truth on the subject of slavery. He did not berate his friends, or cease his attendance at their meetings because he thought he saw in a clearer light than they; and when they tired of his advocacy of the freedom of the bondsman whom they held as such, he observed for a time a wise silence.

"After this sickness," he says, "I spoke not in public meetings for worship for nearly one year, but my mind was very often in company with the oppressed slave as I sat in meetings; and though under this dispensation I was shut up from speaking, yet the spring of gospel ministry was many times livingly opened in me, and the Divine gift operated in me by abundance of weeping, in feeling the oppressions of this people."

Thus it was that Woolman was empowered to overcome his opposers among Friends to him as a Minister, and thus he was enabled too, under the leadings of Truth, to free the society to which he belonged from the odium of slavery at that early day.

Now what was it that John Woolman relied upon in that terrible conflict between the two opposing forces? What was the secret of his power?

In his journal he thus explains how he and his companion were led whilst on a religious journey in New England: "We were taught by renewed experience to labor for an inward stillness; at no time to seek for words, but to live in the spirit of Truth, and utter that to the people which the truth opened to us." Thus he and they were preserved in the beautiful order of Jesus preaching the gospel in simplicity "without premeditation" (Mark xiii., 11). And thus were not compassed about with sparks of their own kindling, but walked in the light of the Eternal!

And this LIGHT is the true light which lighteneth every man who cometh into the world, constituting in every mind a tribunal not only of individual but also of Universal Reason, to sit in judgment upon individual sentiments and deeds; fully competent the wide world over to pronounce upon them an irreversible verdict of "good" or "bad." Thus mankind are not independent one of another but "are members one of another," and are thus united one to the other by the bond of one brotherhood. But it may well be queried herein what constitutes each separate bias wherein so many discordant tones well up from the human heart. The Poet has fitly described it, and has also fitly described its cause!

But oh! mankind are unco weak,
And little to be trusted;
If self the wavering balance shake,
It's rarely right adjusted!

DAVID NEWPORT.

ABINGTON, Pa., 4mo., 17th, 1879.

A NEW ENTERPRISE.

MR. EDITOR:—

Some years since, during the "dress reform" excitement, you kindly allowed me space in the columns of THE INDEX to express my ideas concerning the proposed reform and its effects.

The succeeding years have not caused me to change my views; but some of the garments to be worn, with their inventions and improvements, have been subjected to me for approval or the contrary.

I must frankly acknowledge that, in general, my sympathies and interests are not with the inventors, because I do not believe in the advocated abolition of corsets; that is to say, well-fitted corsets. But I have seen one or two waists which fully meet my approval, and of one of these I wish to speak, that those of your readers who are seeking such may know where to find them.

Miss Bates, room 7, 129 Tremont Street, Boston, has for sale a waist of her own device which comes the nearest to a corset of any which I have seen, and which I should choose for personal use. It is simple, pretty, well-fitting, has a few bones, and is adapted to the use of all ladies. She also makes a specialty of fitting underwear, doing away with buttons and button-holes, and added to these has a corset which she recommends to the public. Those who may favor her with their patronage will find her quick to discern the wants of her patrons, as well as obliging and kind.

CAROLINE E. STREETER.

[We wish to add that, without being one of the "competent" on the corset question, we are particularly interested in the success of this new establishment, because Miss Bates has associated with herself in it a most estimable lady of our acquaintance, Miss M. L. Akins, who was for some years book-keeper in the Index Office. It will give us great pleasure to see them prosper in their undertaking, and we venture to solicit for it the kind attention of our lady readers in this neighborhood.—Ed.]

OBITUARY.

LIEONIER, Ind., April 16, 1879.

MR. ABBOT:—

Please announce in the columns of THE INDEX the death of little Robert Ingersoll Bolens, who died April 11, from the effects of scarlatina, aged two years and six months.

Little Ingersoll was one of the "precocious" children, remarkably handsome, and of unusual intelligence. Weighing fourteen pounds when born, twenty-four at six months of age, and thirty-eight a few months before death, he bore great resemblance to his namesake, with massive head and shoulders, and would have made a man of marked intelligence if he had lived. He was in every respect worthy the name of the great orator. The child always excited remarks and admiration from all who ever saw him.

Respectfully, J. H. BOLENS.

LUCRETIA MOTT, who lately delivered an address before the Pennsylvania Peace Society, and was unanimously elected president for the ensuing year, is, in many ways, one of the most remarkable women of the time. Although vigorous in mind as ever, and taking part in public affairs, she has just passed her eighty-sixth year, having been born January 3, 1798. We can hardly think of a single man or woman still in active life, unless we except Peter Cooper and Sojourner Truth, who has reached such an age as Mrs. Mott. She was one of the very first abolitionists in the Republic, having determined in her fourteenth year, while at a Quaker boarding-school in this State, to abstain from the use of anything produced by slave labor. This was when William Lloyd Garrison, usually called the father of American abolitionism, was only three years old. She was also conspicuous in the first woman's rights convention, held at Seneca Falls more than thirty years ago, and she has been devoted to the causes of woman and anti-slavery, and helped them ever since by all the means in her power. In her twenty-sixth year she became a preacher; she has always been a zealous member of the Society of Friends,—and travelled afterward in different States, including Maryland and Virginia, advocating the interests and emancipation of the negro and the most liberal views of the Quakers. She ascribes her longevity, with excellent bodily and mental health, to her simple mode of living, her continual self-restraint, and her constant intellectual activity.—N. Y. Times.

LADY (who has accidentally knocked down the artist's newly-finished picture): "Oh dear, I am so sorry! And what a pity it should have fallen on the mealy side!"—Funny Folks.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEINER.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publia

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tarrytown, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the difference between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.50 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Chadwick, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by O. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "Proceedings" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,"—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna O. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution, by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—The Sabbath, by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—Compulsory Education, by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tarrytown, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED,

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Friends Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work: A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Medievalism.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
BROCKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero-Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-2. Per vol.....	.30
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	1.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	2.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COORELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols. Illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourses on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahl. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	6.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	6.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 3 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Rites of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGLELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mornings of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGLELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skellig.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Story.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.25
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.50
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Joseph P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerostatics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JOHNSTON (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 3 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	3.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	2.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	4.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	2.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	3.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	3.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MURKIN (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	1.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Exposes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	3.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Tropic Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.00
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Geometry, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	1.50
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.00
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	1.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	1.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	2.50
The Principles of Psychology 2 vols.....	2.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.75
Recent Discoveries in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	1.50
Universal Progress.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tanny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 3 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taines. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Taine.....	2.00
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.50
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip.....	1.50
Peacocks.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Emmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the master in the best English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. OLLIE) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragment of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.15
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farwell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Addresses before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Shing and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	1.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	1.75
WARREN'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

331 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

1 8 7 8,
Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.50, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

M. J. SAVAGE'S NEW NOVEL,

Bluffton,

Describing in a very interesting way the processes of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical. 12mo. Price $1.50.

Also, by the same author,

The Religion of Evolution:

"An exposition of religion in the light of the most advanced science. A brave and reverent thinker."—London Inquirer. Price $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

UNITY.

A FORTNIGHTLY ORGAN OF

Freedom, Fellowship, and Character in Religion.

Editor.—H. M. SIMMONS. Publishing Committee.—ROBERT COLLYER, J. L. JONES, C. W. WENDT, J. C. LEARNED, W. O. GANNETT.

Vol. III., beginning March 1, 1879, will contain Robert Collyer's "Table Talk"; two series of articles on "The Liberal Preachers of America out of the Pulpit" (our Poets and Essayists), and "The Growth of Doctrine, or the Old-New Creed"; Unity Sunday-school Lessons, etc.

Price $1.50 a year. Clubs of 10 at $1.35.

Room 57, 75 MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
94 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

NORTHERN LITERATURE AND ART ROOMS

will immediately be opened in Boston by Miss Marie A. Brown, for the purpose of giving due prominence to the many beautiful productions of Sweden, Norway, Finland, and Denmark, comprising the literature—English translations and originals,—illustrated works, views, photographs, portraits, and paintings and statuary of the most celebrated Northern artists. The "Rooms" will be elegant in all their appointments,—an attractive resort for all art-loving people and purchasers.

That it may become an international affair, Miss Brown invites all Americans and Scandinavians who are interested in the enterprise, and wish it success, to aid her efforts by subscribing the requisite fund. One thousand persons are desired who will each subscribe $10.00, for which Nadine, a poem by Runeberg, and a full set of The Surgeon's Stories, six historical novels by Topelius, as translated and published by her, will be sent them in return, as they are issued.

MARIE A. BROWN,
P.O. Box 900, Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 CENTS. Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold,	Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer,	Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith,	Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair,	Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone,	Prof. Darwin,
Edmond A. Tallemaque,	Prof. Clifford,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P.,	Author of Supernatural Religion ,
Hon. Robert Lowe,	Sir John Lubbock,
Leslie Stephen,	Anthony Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor),	T. Adolphus Trollope,
G. H. Lewes,	Sir H. S. Maine,
	Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the BOSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Pre-Christen Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TRENCHARD, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Sent to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. O. Gannett.

No. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1873, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuonen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament (in preparation). Price $2.50 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knapert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 233 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 263 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.25.

THE GHOSTS; Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. R. G. Ingersoll (his latest lecture). 233 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 263 pages. Price $1.25.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Easthorne Greg, author of the Religion of Life, etc. Complete and unabridged, with index not in other editions, $1.50. One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Inquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half calf, $6.00. Will be ready March 30.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.75, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

"No book published in the world at any time or in any age has had the influence and effect on the thinking part of the community as this work. It has done more to open the eyes of the ignorant and credulous, and sweep away the cobwebs of dogma and superstition than any other book. It no doubt has a strong rival in Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom, but the books are of altogether a different class. Both are far ahead of any thing else of the kind published. They are a library in themselves. A study of these two books will give the opponent of dogmatic Christianity a great advantage in discussion. Every point is carefully and minutely investigated, and stripped of any rotten accretions. The most devout and sincere Christian can find nothing but which is manly and respectfully argued and free from offensiveness, which is not often the case in books of this nature."—London Times.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1879.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 180. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 34 pp. Single copies, 5 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. ... It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublime lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1879.

WHOLE No. 489.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N. Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSSES.

WHEN the old Roman stoic, Seneca, declared that "he is wicked who does not practise that chastity which he requires from his wife," he taught a great and noble truth which millions to-day disbelieve in their hearts. When will the world grow up to its altitude?

IT HAS FALLEN to the lot of a Lutheran clergyman named Baltzy—where living the report says not—to ascertain to his own full satisfaction the dimensions of heaven. It is, he says, square, and contains somewhat over 948,000,000,000,000,000,000 cubic feet. Each person who goes to heaven is to have an apartment about the size of an ordinary hotel bedroom, and of such apartments he estimates the existence of 39,541,188,888,888,888, with a fraction of two-thirds of a room remaining.

THE Independent publishes this pointed letter as a "fair retort": "Sir,—In a late lecture by Rev. Joseph Cook, published in your columns, he seems to think that the Catholics have no right to make school-books, and wonders how they can get Jesuitism or Catholicism into an arithmetic. I, as a Catholic, cannot see very well how any special religion can be insinuated into an arithmetic published by Catholics; but I remember when a boy seeing the following problem in an arithmetic published in this country, when there were but few Catholics here. It ran thus: 'If the Pope can pray a man out of Purgatory in one day, a Cardinal in two days, a Bishop in three days, etc., etc., in how many days can they all pray him out?' So it seems that Mr. Cook's Protestant ancestors did know how to put Anti-Catholicism in arithmetics.—K."

THE Independent of May 1 thus alludes to Mr. Frothingham's farewell reception: "This is what the religionists of culture think of Mr. Frothingham, according to the Hon. Frank Fuller, ex-Governor of Utah, who presided at Mr. Frothingham's farewell reception last week: He has the ability to be eloquent without notes, and 'with never a lapse, never a failure, never a solecism, never an error of taste or judgment; always affluent in language, copious in illustration, convincing in logic, in argument impregnable.' Mr. Frothingham himself, however, thought that if he 'had the graceful persuasiveness of Curtis, or the heroic courage of Higginson, or the sweet reasonableness of Potter, or the steadfastness of Adler, or the joyous-heartedness of Chadwick,' he should have done better in the last twenty years."

THE IDEA of Nationalism, as opposed to the State-rights theory, is certainly making progress, when the Nation is prompted to refer thus to the President's veto message: "It goes to the merits of the matter in controversy, and claims for the Federal government the right to use the army in aid of the marshals to protect voters and repress disorders at Federal elections, or, in other words, to discharge duties which the Democratic theory reserves to the State governments exclusively. We think there can be little doubt that on this issue the Democrats will in the long run be beaten, though they will doubtless owe their defeat largely to the fact that the army is so small. They cannot make it appear that in its present dimensions it is dangerous as a police force, or is anything but a police force; nor can they convince people that the Federal government needs no police force to execute the laws."

PROFESSOR W. S. TYLER, writing from Amherst College, makes this statement in the Christian Union respecting Mr. A. Bronson Alcott, who has been generally supposed to be a radical in religion: "Of course in a Christian college like ours, set for the defence and propagation of the truth as it is in Jesus, the question could not but be often raised and often asked, Is he Orthodox, is he Evangelical? He does not hesitate to declare that he is. And no one who knows him can question his sincerity. He insists with especial emphasis on the Trinity and a vicarious Atonement. He inculcates, in his own way, most of the Orthodox doctrines. And although the transcendental language in which he expresses them sometimes raises the question whether he holds these doctrines just as they are taught in the creeds of Orthodox churches, and though he would gladly mediate between the different forms of belief and find elements of truth in them all, yet there can be little doubt that his sympathies are largely with evangelical and spiritual Christians. At the same time, the transcendental and metaphysical cast of his mind leads him to express the profoundest mysteries of the Christian faith in the forms of reason and philosophy."

A FEIGHTFUL CASE of "private judgment in morals," unbalanced by a sense of responsibility to the common conscience of mankind, occurred at Pocasset, in this State, on the first of May. Charles F. Freeman, a "Second Advent" fanatic, with the approval of his wife at the time, and the subsequent approval of his fellow-fanatics in the town, murdered his innocent little girl by stabbing her to the heart, as a "sacrifice to the Lord." The murderer claims that he did right, in obedience to his own conscience and a revelation from God. We put these questions pointedly to any Individualist who has the courage to answer them without evasion: "Did not Freeman, on your own principle, have an undoubted right to murder his child in obedience to his own 'private judgment in morals'? If you say that this right is subject to the limitation of not injuring others, what right have you, a mere individual, to impose this limitation on Freeman, another individual and your equal, when his 'private judgment in morals' refuses to recognize it at all? What right have you, in consistency with your own principle, to say one word against the murder—much less to interfere with the murderer?" Is there no "Luther of morals" bold enough to meet these questions without evasion?

IT IS REFRESHING to see that "silence and submission" on the part of decent men in the presence of "a smart and audacious ruffian" are counted by the Nation as "the black passage" in the story of Judge Barnard's career. Such teaching inculcates the best of ethics, and is needed everywhere to-day: "George G. Barnard, the famous or infamous judge of the Supreme Court, so prominent in the Ring period in this city,—that is, between 1868 and 1872,—died on Sunday. He was the most conspicuous and ablest of the men by whom the Ring was built up and enabled to prey on the community; but there was nothing very remarkable about the man himself. Persons like him, both in the kind and degree of ability, are by no means scarce in the lower walks of the profession in all countries, and can be found in almost any of the better class of bar-rooms in this city. He owed his celebrity and powers of evil to the extraordinary social and political condition of the city during the ten years following the outbreak of the war. This brought his talents into play and put him on the bench, and secured him the impunity he so long enjoyed. If a monograph of the right kind is ever written on that singular episode in American history, the rule of the New York Ring, it will give but little space to Barnard's character and career—for he was simply a smart and audacious ruffian—and a great deal to the causes of the silence and submission of the bar which practised before him until the press had broken the power of his political confederates. It is this silence and submission which constitute the black passage in that strange story. Of the hundreds of upright, able, religious lawyers who for years witnessed his villany and indecency, and blushed over them, not a man had the courage to rise in court and denounce him, and appeal to the community against him." There is a pointed moral in all this for decent liberals.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....	Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. BENNY BOOTH.....	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....	Irvington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....	Boston, Mass.
MR. WM. J. POTTER.....	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. E. P. HALLOWELL.....	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON.....	Newburgh, Mass.
MR. F. SCHURMANN-POTT.....	San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....	Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....	Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. FELSENTHAL.....	Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER.....	Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....	Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....	Detroit, Mich.
MR. HORACE SEAGER.....	Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
MRS. ISRAEL M. WISE.....	Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....	Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
W. J. B. HARGREAVE.....	Editor of "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
REV. ROBERT COLLIER.....	Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....	Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.....	Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. E. S. MOORE.....	Franklin, Pa.
ELDER F. W. EVANS.....	Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....	New York City.
MRS. AMY POST.....	Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON.....	Tenaford, N. J.
MRS. RALPH B. HARRIS.....	Albany, N. Y.
JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....	Albany, N. Y.
RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....	Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....331 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

S. A. J. WILCOX.....3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
F. E. ABBOT.....C. D. B. MILLS.
D. G. CRANDON.Executive Committee.

Alabama.....	J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.....	JOHN ARRENS, Monticello.
California.....	J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.....	DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
Connecticut.....	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....	JOSEPH D. GOBLT, Greenville.
Florida.....	T. D. GIDDINGS, Winterprise.
Georgia.....	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....	DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.....	N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa.....	J. O. MICHENER, Adair.
Kansas.....	JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.....	S. B. OLARK, Wilsonville.
Louisiana.....	EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.....	DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.....	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.....	E. A. SWEET, Boston.
Michigan.....	KEARL SCHUMMANN, Detroit.
Minnesota.....	J. R. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.....	P. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Montana.....	W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
Nebraska.....	V. U. HARRITT, White Rock.
Nevada.....	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Hampshire.....	FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New Jersey.....	C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
New York.....	W. THORNE, Warren.
North Carolina.....	D. STARR, Cleveland.
Ohio.....	AMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
Oregon.....	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
Rhode Island.....	P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
South Carolina.....	DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
Tennessee.....	DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Texas.....	R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Vermont.....	L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
Virginia.....	DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
West Virginia.....	ROBERT S. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Wisconsin.....	D. P. WILCOX, Fankton.
District of Columbia.....	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Utah.....	W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Wyoming.....	NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
EARLAN P. HYDE.....331 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
STRAUBER, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
ROSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.
ROCHESTER, N. Y.—President, Anson O. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Gale. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester.
CHENEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y. MORRIS HAYS, Rochester, N. Y.
FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Corti-B. E. URIBINO, West Newton, land, N. Y.
Z. T. WATKINS, Syracuse, N. Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N. Y.
NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, SYRACUSE, N. Y. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, Mass.
GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mt. K. N. LADY, Albany, N. Y.
HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N. J.
W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N. Y. HOPKINS WHIFFLE, Boston, Mass.
B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, CHAS. ELLIS, Boston, Mass.
JOHN W. TRUESDELL, SYRACUSE, N. Y.
CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y. E. P. STARK, Rochester, N. Y.
E. E. TURNER, Chelsea, Mass. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N. Y.
JOHN NILL, Watertown, N. Y. N. Y.
E. A. SAWYER, Boston, Mass. W. BOHLINGER, Albany, N. Y.
THOS. DUGAN, Albany, N. Y. JOHN FREEST, Albany, N. Y.
JAMES B. FINE, Rochester, N. Y. D. B. MILLS, SYRACUSE, N. Y.
DAVID H. OLARK, Florence, E. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

The Faust Legend.

AN ESSAY DELIVERED BEFORE THE GOETHE CLUB.

BY MORITZ ELLINGER.

Edmond Scherer, the latest critic of Goethe, notwithstanding that he looks at the great poet through French glasses, feels impelled to say in his Etudes critiques de Litteratures that "Faust" "is one of the greatest works of poetry, and, perhaps, the most wonderful work of poetry in our century."

Kuno Fischer, in a recent article on Goethe's "Faust" says: "The poem is the most profound exponent of a poetic life, one of the greatest and richest which the world ever beheld, of an epoch, of the spirit dominating the people." And there are those who assign to that noble creation of genius the first rank among the poetic creations of all ages. Among all the works of Goethe "Faust" looms up far above the others, and it is probably this poem which has assigned Goethe to a height where he came nearest apotheosis of any modern leader of civilization. Sublime as is the execution of the task which Goethe had set before himself, interlaced as the poem is with his innermost life, present, as it were, before his mental vision the best part of his ripest years, and thus partaking of all the inspiration his genius was capable of, we must, nevertheless, ascribe the profound and persistent hold which Faust has retained upon the popular mind to causes outside of the masterpiece itself.

Literature presents creations that take rank side by side with Goethe's "Faust" in the sublimity of their conception, the symmetry, beauty, and harmony of their execution; but their influence never reached so far up into the highest scale of cultivated society and so deep down in the lowest rank of the popular mind as Goethe's "Faust." We have the Divina Comedia of Dante, one of the sublimest products of genius; Paradise Lost and Gained, by Milton, and other works of almost like excellence,—towering monuments of inspiration; but no poetical creation has struck such a deep root and branched out so extensively into the intellectual consciousness of humanity as Goethe's "Faust." The reason for this must be sought for in the fact that Faust is not the creature of an accidental fiction, but the representative of an idea as old as humanity itself; he is the incarnation, as it were, of a principle; the type of human mind in its struggle with the crude and inscrutable natural forces, seeking to burst its mundane fetters and attempting to climb the heights which finite intelligence can never reach.

The human mind, with its magnificent endowments to roam into regions whether the body cannot follow, ever attempted to pass beyond the confines of speculation and imagination, and seize upon the pictures conjured up in a fertile brain as realities; every living force of Nature was to the ancient mind the manifestation of a powerful invisible being which could be induced to enter into an alliance with man and to do his will. The powers were credited, according to their manifestations, with tendencies that portended good or evil, and in the course of historical progress the good and evil powers were divided and subjected to the supreme rule of a Divine or semi-Divine being, who presided over and ruled the subordinate spirits under him. We have thus in the Persian mythology the Ormuzd and the Ahriman, in the Egyptian the Typhon and the Osiris, in the Bible the Egyptian magicians who compelled their deluges to imitate the miracles by which Yahve demonstrated his omnipotence, and Balaam who is appealed to by the Moabites to check the onward march of the Israelites. The book of Job, probably the most ancient metaphysical disquisition that has been preserved in its literary entity, may be said to be the original source of the Faust and Mephistopheles legend, which appears and re-appears under various forms and disguises among all nations and in almost every literature. Satan, the confirmed sceptic, who has no faith in man's goodness, smiles contemptuously at the good repute which Job enjoys with the heavenly authorities. "It is no wonder that a man who enjoys all the good things of earth clings in devout faith to God. Only let me have full power over him, and he will soon fall away from his belief in you." Somewhat like these are the arguments of the Satan-Mephistopheles of Job, and, invested with plenipotentiary power over his body, the Prince of Evil pours upon the head of the unfortunate Faust-Job all the tortures that he can command; Job, however, does not succumb to the temptations, and clings tenaciously to his strong faith. I need hardly mention that the introductory scene to Goethe's "Faust" owes its conception to the narrative as contained in the Book of Job, and probably not a little of the general idea pervading the whole poem is due to the same source.

Man is endowed with a dual nature of which the one, heaven-born, lifts him upwards to the regions of divine and spiritual purity, and the other drags him down to the dust with the lust and appetite of animal propensities. Life is a constant struggle, a battle a l'outrance between the two powers, which in man endowed with common faculties is carried on unnoticed and unrecorded. Millions of human lives have found the early grave of the victim of animal passion, of a life passed without the redeeming quality of a struggle even. A large number again carry on the battle bravely and manfully; they preserve the proper balance and, either with the hope which religion inspires or the consciousness of a strict performance of duty, they perform the task which destiny has allotted to them. There are a few whose natural endowments are much greater than those of the average member of the race; within them the struggle between the contending powers is the warring of giant forces; and history and tradition invest their efforts with a nimbus which makes them, for all times to come, the guiding stars in the horizon of humanity. The Bible tells of Jacob, who wrestled with an angel; the Jews have an Eliaha ben Abujah, who from a profound scholar, in great repute with them, turned a sceptic; he fell from grace, and to this day he figures in Jewish literature, not by his name, but by the appellation Acher, "the other." Jesus of Nazareth, according to the New Testament, had to overcome the temptations of the devil, and saints without number had bodily contest with the arch enemy of man. The belief in good and bad spirits, their actual commingling with men as their allies and servants, has prevailed everywhere and formed integral parts of the religious belief in all ages. The Chaldeans practised the various arts of magic divination, the Greeks had their oracles, the Romans their augurs, and the Talmud tells us of certain sages who compelled kobolds to do their bidding, and describes the signs by which their presence may be ascertained. Almost every renowned man of antiquity and the Middle Ages was believed to be attended by a spiritus familiaris, and not a few were suspected of being in direct league with the devil. Probably the oldest legend of which the Faust legend is a continuous thread is that of Simon Magus, mentioned in the history of the apostles. According to Justin, he was a native of Gitton, a village in Samaria; he was, no doubt, a man of great intellectual powers. He was the father of the school of the Gnostics. It is also reported of him that he could make himself invisible, that he could pass through flames unharmed, could transmute matter, make gold, and exorcise demons; in fact he laid claims to all these powers, and his name lived in the mouths of the people as a sort of Demiurg through many centuries until some other miracle-working personality took his place at the popular fireside. Unusual accomplishments, great erudition, were attributed to supernatural influence, and the general disposition to superstitious assumption was strengthened on the one hand by dogmatic affirmation on the part of the Church of the existence of a personal Satan, with his numerous household, and on the other hand by incorporating the magic arts among the practical sciences, of which astrology and alchemy occupied no mean part.

A belief in the actual interference of Satan, demons, kobolds, lemures, and unearthly beings with the doings of men prevailed throughout the past centuries; hellish spirits were credited with a ready response to summons properly issued to them; in fact, their compulsion to answer conjurations made in the proper formula was never doubted, and this belief was encouraged and strengthened by the learned and intelligent, the appointed spiritual guides.

A number of legends, which attained extensive spread, were in their character similar to the Faust legend. One of the oldest is that of Theophilus who lived in the sixth century under Pope Justinian I. Theophilus was Vice-Dominus, or Vicar of the Bishop, in Ada, a small city of Sicily. He was subsequently to advance to the position of bishop, but declined the position. The new Bishop who succeeded, wanted to remove the Vice-Dominus, and in order to retain his place he appealed to a Jew, who had the reputation of keeping relations with the satanic court. The Jew, so the legend goes, readily complied with the request and promised to give the Vice-Bishop the necessary introduction and required credentials. The story is told with great minuteness in the Speculum Historiale of Vincentius Belluacensis. When the Vicar, according to his promise, appeared, the Jew told him: "You must not be frightened, no matter what you hear or see; only beware of making the sign of the cross." He then conducted him to an unfrequented place outside of the city, and after repeated promises on the part of the ecclesiastic he took him to a concealed spot where he beheld a large assemblage clad in white robes and holding lighted candles, thronging around an elevated seat upon which was seated the prince, who was no other than His Satanic Majesty in propria persona. The Jew introduced his newly-made friend, and Theophilus, repeating his former promises and stating his request, Satan said: "If you want to be my servant I will help you." Theophilus had then to abjure Christ and the Virgin Mary, and to sign with his own hand a document containing his submission to the new master. On the following day Theophilus was duly and with great honors rehabilitated in his old position. But it was not long before the Vice-Dominus was visited with conscientious scruples. He prostrated himself before a Maria-image, and fasted and prayed for forty days and nights. At last the Virgin's heart softened and she appeared to him at midnight. Theophilus recited the creed and begged the Virgin to intercede for him with her son Jesus, after which the spirit of Mary disappeared. He fasted and prayed for three more days and nights when Mary appeared again, her face beaming with light, and brought satisfactory promises from her son. Theophilus renewed his pledges of contrition, but demanded the return of the document, to which his name was subscribed. After nine days more of penance, the Virgin Mary returned and laid the fatal document upon his chest. He took it and handed it the next morning to the Bishop before the assembled congregation, and made full confession of his disgression; the Bishop commanded him to consign then and there the document to the flames. For three days the Vice-Dominus lay prostrate at the place where he had seen the vision of the Virgin, and then surrendered his soul to her. This story is in substance a Faust legend. Theophilus makes a compact with the devil in order to obtain ecclesiastical preferment, and the same motive underlies the legend of Millicarius, who makes a compact with the devil in order to have the means of leading a life of dissipation; so does Robert, the Duke of Normandy, in the eighth century reputed to have made a pact with the spirits of the nether world for the gratification of carnal passions. But there were others, whose scientific accomplishments brought them into repute of unholy alliance, and who were charged with having bartered away their heavenly birthright for no other purpose than for the advantage of superior knowledge and wisdom. The accomplishments of Gerbert, a renowned mathematician who under the name of Sylvester II. ascended the papal throne towards the end of the tenth century, were attributed to an alliance with the devil. According to the legend, Gerbert was an indefatigable student, but became dissatisfied with the result of his study. He became a recluse from society and roamed through the woods, engaged with his contemplation. Satan meets him there and with seeming solicitude asks him for the cause of his melancholy and retirement from men's society, and in reply he assigns as reason unsatisfactory results of his search for knowledge; whereupon Satan offers to endow him with such learning as will place him above all the learned of the age. A bargain is struck and Gerbert carries off the palm of victory in every disputation, and by reason of his accomplishment he is made Archbishop of Ravenna and subsequently Pope.

In the thirteenth century there lived in Italy a certain Virgil, who for centuries lived in the mouth of the people as a great magician and conjurer. All that was known of him, however, showed that he was a great adept in the natural sciences; he preserves meat against putrefaction, cures blind sheep, exterminates vermin, and finally is imputed to have made a pact with the devil in order to become perfect in the black art. The alchemist and naturalist Theophrastus Paracelsus enjoys a like reputation in the sixteenth century; and the legend of Merlin, a member of King Arthur's round table, has much resemblance to Goethe's Faust, as he is saved from the clutches of the devil by his mother, a pure virgin, who was surprised one night by the devil, who, becoming jealous of God in having a son, selected also a virgin for the purpose of succession.

It would occupy too much time were I to enter more specifically into the various legends of a Faust-like character preceding the genuine Faust legend. This much is certain, that the adventures, accomplishments, tricks, and reports of all mediæval conjurers and magicians were contributed in part to Faust and incorporated in the history of his life, and around his head the people spun a wreath of romances and legends that changed a charlatan into an undying hero of romance, and made him the type of man's unsatisfied aspirations, spiritual and intellectual longings. Faust was probably a simple charlatan of some accomplishments, who travelled considerably, and was an adept in the art of making the people talk of him. It is established beyond a doubt that Faust is not a mythical person, but a real personage, who lived during the first half of the sixteenth century, and left traces of himself in various parts of Germany. He was born probably about 1480, as at 1506, the time we find the first traces of him in literature, he was at least twenty-five years old; and his death is to be set down between 1535 and 1540. The first mention of Faust is made by John of Trittenheim, the learned abbe, who, like all great scholars, such as Albertus Magnus, Roger Bacon, Cornelius Agrippa, was himself suspected of practising the black art. In a letter dated August 20, 1507, addressed to the mathematician John Wirling of Hassfurt, he speaks of Faust as a vagabond, a babbler, and a fraud. "Homo ille," he says, "de quo mihi scripsisti, Georgius Sabellicus, qui se principem necromanticorum ausus est nominare, gyrovagus, battologus et circumcillo est." We find there also the various arts which Faust claimed to practise. "Magister Georgius Sabellicus, Faustus junior, fons necromanticorum, astrologus, magus secundus, chiromanticus, agromanticus, pyromanticus, in hydra arte secundus." He is also mentioned by Conradus Mutianus Rufus in a letter dated October 3, 1513.

Another contemporary of Faust, Begardus, in his Zeyger der Gesundheit, printed at Worms in 1539, speaks of him thus: "There was another renowned, valiant man, I will not mention his name, though he does not wish to remain obscure or unknown. He travelled a few years since through all countries, principalities, and kingdoms, making his name public and his great art, not only of medicine, but also of chiromancy, necromancy, physiognomy, visions in crystals, and many more like arts. He has also acknowledged and not denied that his name is Faustus, and that he is doctoris philosophum philosophorum. But many have complained to me that they were defrauded, and of these there are a great many. His pretensions were very great, like those of Theall (in Galen's time); also his fame, like that of Theophrastus; but his deeds were very insignificant and full of fraud, though he was not slow in taking money and then running away. But what can I do,—lost is lost. I am going to leave it as it is; you try whether you can do better."

We have also another witness of the existence of Faust, that of John Gast in his Sermones Conviviales. Gast was a Protestant clergyman at Basle. His book of three volumes is a compilation of anecdotes, personal reminiscences, and maxims and sentences of ancient and contemporary scholars. It is published at Basle in 1554, and pages 75 and 274 of the second volume are devoted to an account of the adventures of Faust.

He speaks of Faust's compact with the devil, who accompanies him, sometimes in the guise of a dog and sometimes in that of a servant, the subsequent historical figure of the famulus Wagner. Mention is also made of the legend that when Faust's body was found the face was turned to the ground, and all efforts to lay the body on its back on the bier proved unavailing, the corpse always turning over. John Manlius also mentions this incident. In his Locorum communium collectanea ex lectionibus D. Philippi Melancthonis, published at Basle in 1562, he says that Faust's body was lying inversa facie. Manlius puts this account of Faust into the mouth of Melancthon; the story of Faust must evidently have been well circulated by that time. "I have known a man," says Melancthon, "by the name of Faust, a native of Kündling, a small town near the place where I come from. He studied at Cracow, where he became an adept in the magic art, which was much studied there, and where public lectures on that art were delivered. Later he roamed about in many places, and talked of secret things. At Venice he wanted to make sensation, and announced that he would fly into heaven. The devil carried him up very high, and then let him drop to the ground, so that he came near giving up the ghost." Several adventures are told of his narrow escape from being captured by the officers of the duke and the bailiffs of the city of Nuremberg, and of his final tragic end.

Historical accuracy requires that I should state that John Wier, a pupil of Agrippa, tells in his book De Præstigiis Demoniis et Incantationibus ac Veneficiis libri sex, published in 1503, of the sensation which Faust had created. The historical existence of Faust is therefore established beyond a doubt; he seems to have been a man of considerable accomplishments, taking delight in playing upon the ignorance and credulity of the people, and to make himself talked of in all circles, at the courts, among the learned, the burghers, and the common people. This disposes also of the theory advanced by some, that Faust was identical with Fust, intimately connected with Gutenberg in the invention of printing with movable types. The art of printing, as is well known, was ascribed by the common people to the machinations of the devil, and this belief was no doubt encouraged by those who looked upon the spread of knowledge and information as the promotion of sin and corruption.

Faust and his doings, however, would have been soon forgotten, if the stories current in the people's mouth had not found a genius who, with a perception of the poetical and romantic legends which the people had woven around the life of a mere adventurer, collected the tales and published them in book form at Frankfurt-on-the-Main in 1587. The title of this first relation of Faust's doings is as follows: Historia von D. Johann Fausten, dem weltbeschreyten Zauberer und Schwarzkünstler, Wie er sich gegen dem Teuffel auf eine benandte zeit verschrieben, Was er hinfürwirts fur seltsame Abentheuer gesehen, selbst anrichtet und getrieben, biss er endlich seinen wol verdienten Lohn empfangen. Mehrertheils aus seinen eygenen hinterlassenen Schrifften, allen hochtragenden fürwitzigen und Gottlosen Menschen zum schrecklichen Beyeispiel, abschewigen Exempel und treuerhertigen Warnung zusammengezogen und in Druck verfertigt Jacobo IV. Beydt Gott unterthänig, widerstehet dem Teuffel so fleuheit er von euch.

The book is divided into seventy-seven chapters, each with a superscription of its contents. This book, written in prose, was followed in 1588 by a history of Faust written in rhymes. At the same time appeared an edition of the Faust book in Nether German, or Low Dutch, as it is commonly but erroneously called. It is further evidence of the wide extent and the great popularity which the story had found. Already in 1589 we meet with a French translation of the book, Histoire prodigieuse et lamentable de Jean Faust traduit de l'Allemand. The translation is by Palma Cayet, whom tradition consigned equally with Faust to the power of Satan. The demand for the book must have been immense, as already in 1591 a second and enlarged edition was issued, and a year later, in 1592, a reprint was published at Frankfurt-on-the-Main. The legend of Faust must have been known in England almost as early as in Germany. In the same year in which the first Faust book appeared in Germany, Bishop Aymer granted permission to print in the coming year A Ballad of the Life and Death of Doctor Faustus the great Congerer; and soon thereafter was published the first English account, which bears the following title, "The History of the Damnable Life and Deserved Death of Dr. John Faustus. Newly printed, and, in convenient places, impertinent matter amended according to the true copy printed at Frankfurt; and translated into English by P. R. Gent." The book is without date. A continuation of the first account was published in 1594 under the title, "The Second Report of Doctor John Faustus, containing his appearances and the deeds of Wagner. Written by an English gentleman, student in Wittenberg, an university of Germany in Saxony." Contemporary with this appeared a Hol-landish edition.

The first account was written in the style of a popular romance, and continued to be the text, with slight variations, of the Volksbuch. Soon, however, German scientific thoroughness took hold of the subject and enriched the story with learned additions and commentaries, so that the Faust book filled three large volumes. All treatises, dissertations, disquisitions, monographs on the history of Faust, and there are many of them, written and published ever since, are based upon this book as their text and authority. It was composed by George Rudolph Widman, and was first published at Hamburg in 1599.

The honor of the oldest dramatic treatment of the Faust legend belongs to an English author, one who enjoyed great repute as a poet and dramatic playwright, Christopher Marlowe. He was a prolific writer. Of the plays of which he is known to be the author, we possess the following: "Tamburlaine the Great," "Edward the Second," "The Massacre of Paris," "The Rich Jew of Malta," "Lust's Dominion, or, The Lascivious Queen," "Dido, Queen of Carthage," all tragedies; "The Maidens Holiday," a comedy, and finally "The Tragical History of Doctor Faustus." He also translated the elegies of Ovid, which were, however, ordered to be burned by the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London as immoral and unchristian. The drama of Faust was first published in 1604, though it must have been written very shortly after the first publication of the German story of Faust, as Marlowe died before the year 1593. His end was not unlike that of Faust in its tragic character, and his reputation of an infidel and scoffer at religion was also in keeping with it. Marlowe was in love with a girl of low parentage, and he became suspicious of her fidelity, believing that she preferred a footman to him. Meeting the man at the rooms of his paramour, he became enraged and attacked his rival with a dagger. The fellow, however, parried the thrust, and, seizing Marlowe by the wrist, managed to wound him with his own weapon, and despite all surgical aid he died from the effects of the wound.

Goethe in his treatment of the Faust legend kept closer to the original Faust book than to any of the other versions, and I will endeavor to give a brief sketch of the Faust legend as we find it in the first edition.

According to it Faust was a peasant's son, a native of Rod near Weimar. He was very forward in learning, but soon "he joined bad company, laid the Sacred Scriptures high on the shelf or under the bench, led a dissipated and godless life. . . Besides that, Dr. Faustus readily found boon companions; they used Chaldean, Persian, Arabic, and Greek words, figures characteribus, conjunctionibus, incantationibus, and such names as are used in conjuration and the magic art."

"That pleased Faust well; he speculated and studied night and day, did not care to be called theologum any longer, became a man of the world, assumed the title of doctoris medicus, became an astronomer and mathematician, and out of spite practised as a physician, cured many people with herbs, roots, mineral waters, potions, prescriptions, and purgatives. He was talkative and well versed in Scripture."

Goethe says:—

"I've studied now philosophy
And jurisprudence, medicine,
And even, alas! theology,—
From end to end with labor keen."

"But Faust," continues the book, "loved what should not be loved; thus he pored day and night, took unto himself eagle's wings, wanted to uncover the cause of all that is, on the heavens and the earth; therefore he wanted to conjure the devil. He went into a forest at night, described certain lines, and thus summoned the devil between nine and ten o'clock. The devil pretended to respond rather unwillingly; finally an appointment was made for an interview the following night at twelve o'clock, when negotiations were commenced in earnest, Faust proposing his own conditions first and Satan following next. The compact was not closed that night. The day following, the devil came back disguised as a Franciscan monk. Faust asked him what his name was; he answered "Mephistopheles." Faust's apostasy was caused by his arrogance, despair, foolhardiness, and impudence, like the giants, of whom the poets sing that they pile mountain upon mountain in order to make war upon God."

We are here again reminded of Faust's words in Goethe:—

"My bosom, of its thirst for knowledge sated,
Shall not henceforth from any pang be wrested,
And all of life for all mankind created
Shall be within mine inmost being tested;
The highest, lowest forms my soul shall borrow,
Shall heep up in itself their bliss and sorrow,
And thus my own sole self to all their selves expanded,
I too, at last, shall with them all be stranded."

Faust then wrote out an "obligation, instrument, recognition, written document, and confession," which was found after his death among his effects; with a pointed knife he opened a vein in his left hand, and on that hand could be distinctly read the bloody letters, O homo fuge. He let his blood flow into a pot, which he set upon ignited charcoal, and then wrote with the liquified blood:—

"I, Johannes Faust, Doctor, acknowledge with my own hand publicly, in confirmation and by the power of these present: After having taken a resolve to speculate the elements, but among the gifts graciously bestowed upon me from above not being found such ability in my brains and men not being able to teach me, I have surrendered myself to the spirit sent to me at present, who calls himself Mephistopheles, a servant of the hellish prince of the Orient; and I have chosen him to inform and teach me, all of which he has promised to do, and to hold himself subject to me and to obey me. In return, I promise and vow that after twenty-four years from the date of this writing shall have passed, he shall have power to do with, dispose of, and command me as it may best please him, with all, be it body, soul, flesh, blood, and possessions, and that for all eternity. I then renounce all those that live, all heavenly beings and all human beings; and so must it be. In testimony whereof I have signed this document with my sign manual and with my own blood drawn for this purpose, with full intent, intelligence, and determination, and have sealed it. Testify,

"Johann Faustus, learned in the elements, and doctor of theology."

In connection with this document I must remind you again of Goethe's verses:—

"And see that nothing can be known,
That knowledge cuts me to the bone.

For this all pleasure am I foregoing;
I do not pretend to aught worth knowing,
I do not pretend I could be a teacher,
To help or convert a fellow creature."

Satan endeavored, then, above all, to amuse Faust. He enacted comedies at his house, in which various animals, dogs, antlers, lions, dragons, peacocks, bulls, took part. The description in the Faust book is very amusing, and shows a close connection between it and the characters in Goethe's phantasmagoria.

Faust's pupil, Christopher Wagner, the famulus, is "a bold gourmand," and either he or Mephistopheles is always alone with Faust in his study, just as in Goethe's poem. Faust is anxious to get married, but Mephistopheles will hear nothing of it, because lawful wedlock is godly; in the Faust book Faust and Mephistopheles indulge a great deal in theological controversies, and, among other interesting topics, we find there an account of the condition of hell, which some of our modern theological sensation-mongers might read with profit. Faust also desires to see face to face the various purgatorial officials under Satan's command, and Mephistopheles indulges this whim. The description of the various demons in their various animal and other shapes is quite interesting, a true witch-Sabbath. In the eighth year after the conclusion of the compact, Faust makes a journey through hell, and in his sixteenth he begins his terrestrial travels, Mephistopheles assuming the shape of a horse, and carrying his master on his back. One interesting description is that of Faust's visit to the Papal Court. The sport which he makes of the corruption and demoralization existing there gives the legend its decided character of a product of the Reformation, in contradistinction to previous legends of a similar stamp. Faust, himself invisible, arrived at the palace of the Pope, where he saw many servants and courtiers, all engaged in waiting upon His Holiness.

Faust said to his spiritus familiaris: "Fie, why has not the devil made a pope of me?" Doctor Faustus also saw there (in the papal palace) all the like of him, extravagance, pride, conceit, arrogance, gluttony, drunkenness, harlotry, adultery, and the whole goddess department of the Pope and his followers, so that Faust said further: "I thought I were a swine, or a hog of the devil; but he must feed me longer. These hogs here are fattened and ripe for roasting and cooking." Faust remains in Rome three days and plays his pranks, which however are but a satire upon the life led by the clergy and upon the dogmas of the Church of Rome. While in Cologne the opportunity is seized to make fun of the eleven thousand virgins. He also visits Constantinople, and his description of life in the serail is very enjoyable. He visits all the notable cities, and passes through England, Spain, France, Sweden, Poland, Denmark, India, Africa, and Persia. America is left out, while the Wagner book contains a description of it. Time will not permit me to dwell upon that important pendant to the Faust book; I must, however, not omit to quote the curious passage it contains regarding America. The Wagner book, which bears the title of volume two of the history of Johann Faust, was published in 1593, composed by Frederic Schobum Tolet. Among the adventures of Wagner is related that, having heard of the New World, he was anxious to see it with his own eyes. He summoned the wood-grouse, a bird well known for his connection with the nether world by the legend of King Solomon, to whom the wood-grouse disclosed the whereabouts of the wonderful worm Shamir, which alone enabled the wise king of the East to build his temple without the use of iron chisels. On the back of this demon-bird Wagner sails through the air and arrives in the country called India Occidentalis. It was, he tells us, "very populous at a time; but now the blood-thirsty Spaniards had despoiled it; they did not leave more than four hundred souls in the island called Dominico, where formerly lived more than fifteen times one hundred thousand." "In this country there are wild people; they have no beard, but scrape it off with sharp shells as soon as it commences to grow. They shoot with poisoned arrows." "When the Indians go down to the sea-shore, the Spaniards watch them and catch them, as the wolf catches the sheep." "An herb called tabacum grows there, a small bush like reed-grass: it has leaves like an apple-tree, but a little larger. They are of a light green, but are a little coarse. These leaves are dried; and if any one wants to transport himself into a state of voluptuousness and see wonderful dreams, or wishes to prophesy of his condition, also when the priests want to get information of impending war of their idols and other things, then they take the leaves of this herb and place it upon burning coals, inhale the vapor of smoke, through a funnel or pipe made for that purpose, into their nostrils, and when they have their fill they fall upon the ground as if dead."

This may serve as a slight specimen of the description afforded in the Wagner book of the customs and manners of the Indians. We return to the Faust book again.

At Innsbruck he presents himself at the court of Emperor Charles V., who invites him to dine with him. After rising from the table, the emperor requests him to follow him to his apartment and there cite and exhibit the Emperor Alexander Magnus and also the Empress, in the form, figure, and manner in which they deputed themselves while living on earth. Faust consents. He leaves the room, and when he enters again he is followed by Alexander, a figure low-set, stout, red, and thick beard, full red cheeks, and a stern countenance, as if he had basilisk eyes. The figure was clad in full mail, and stepping up to the Emperor bowed before him; the figure of Alexander then retired and his wife came in. She was dressed in blue velvet, with ornaments of gold and pearls. She was beautiful, cheeks as of milk and blood. Faust also played many tricks before the courtiers. Wherever he came he played his pranks upon the people, so that his name was in everybody's mouth.

At Gotha he took a promenade on some fine night in June; full with liquor, wohlbezechet as the book says, he met a wagon laden with hay. It was in a narrow alley. The peasant who guided the horses requested him to step aside. "Well, I will see whether I have to get out of your way, or you of mine. Do you hear, fellow, or don't you know that a hay-wagon has to get out of the way of a drunken man?" The farmer grew angry and replied in his own rough manner. "If you don't do as I say," replies Faust, "I'll eat up wagon, hay, and horses"; and no sooner said than done. His mouth began to expand, and horses, hay, and wagon seemed to disappear in it. The farmer ran to the Burgomaster, and when they came there in the morning everything was in its old place again. At another time he took three young counts to a wedding which took place at the Bavarian court, by letting them step upon his cloak, and upon which they sailed with lightning rapidity from Wittenberg to Munich. His tricks are always amusing and never vicious. At Wittenberg he invited a number of students to his room; one of them expressed his desire to see Helena, the wife of Menelaus, the daughter of Tyndarus and Leda, the sister of Castor and Pollux, and forthwith he produced her before them. The trick of causing a flow of various sorts of wine from a table by boring a hole into the plank is not found in the old account, but is mentioned by Widmann as follows, as having occurred at Erfurt. Once stopping with a young nobleman, at a banquet "Faust carried on his pranks and asked the guests whether they would not like to taste some foreign wines, no matter whether Rhine wine, Malvasier, French, or Spanish wine. They replied with laughing mouths: 'Yes, they are all good.' Faust then asked for a gimlet and commenced to bore four holes into the sides of the table; he then put wax stoppers into the holes, and told them to rinse out a few glasses and bring them to him. He then drew out the stoppers, and whatever wine was demanded flowed from the holes." Goethe transfers this scene to the well-known Auerbach's Keller, and adds to the story as related by Widman the sequel of a story related in the first edition of Faust's adventures. The story as it is told there is: At a banquet given at a renowned capital the guests declared, after having eaten all they wanted, that they had come for the purpose of seeing a piece of his art. He then caused grape-vines to grow upon the table, with large bunches of luscious fine grapes upon them, a bunch for each guest. He then told them each to take hold of his bunch with one hand and with the other hand take his knife, ready to cut off his bunch, but beware and not cut. He then left the room, stayed away a little while, and when he returned, there they sat, each holding his neighbor's nose, the knife ready to cut away.

At the cellar under the Auerbach's Hof in Leipzig are two paintings from the sixteenth century, representing two scenes from the life of Faust. On one painting Faust is seen in the company of a number of students, seated around a table richly set with edibles and canteens, drinking and carousing; at one corner musicians play jovial airs and a waiter is pouring out the wine from a large barrel; the other picture shows Faust astraddle on the barrel, riding out of the cellar; the guests stand aghast, and one of them points to heaven as if praying for his soul. Though the paintings bear the date 1525, it is doubtful whether they are as old. The painting representing Faust riding on a barrel has the following lines printed underneath:—

"1525. Doctor Faust zu dieser Frist
Aus Auerbach's Keller geritten ist
Auf einem Fass mit Wein geschwint
Welches gesehen viel Mutterkind.
Solches durch seine subtile kunst hat gethan.
Und des Teufels Lohn empfangen davon."

Of Faust's end I will briefly mention that the first edition recounts circumstantially how, when the time neared to redeem his pledge, he endeavored to elude his word given, but of course the devil exacted promptly to the minute the fulfilment of the engagement so solemnly entered into by Faust. While Goethe follows in the main the original draft of the Faust legend, yet there are many scenes taken from Widman; as, for instance, the conjuration of the devil and his appearance behind the stove in a frightful caricature, and the appearance of the devil as a black dog, and other minor details.

Faust has always been a popular figure upon the Punch and Judy stage, for which special dramas were written, all based, of course, upon the original story published, and upon the dramatic production of Marlowe. The commentaries and learned dissertations upon Faust are extensive; and not the least curious and interesting part of the Faust literature are the many books giving instructions in the magic and cabalistic art, with queer drawings and instructions how to cite the various demons and spirits.

There is Doctor Faustus dreifacher Hollenzwang, a threefold compulsion of hell, which bears as date of publication the year of 1407. Another one by Father Eberhard, of the Society of Jesus, no doubt a fictitious name. Then the fourfold hell compulsion printed at Rome 1680, another one which bears the imprint Wittenberg 1540, and many more down to the present century.

The Faust legend overshadowed all the legends that were in circulation among the people, of magicians and necromancers; it became the focus of all the beliefs current regarding the ability of men to form alliances with the spirit world; people did believe in such powers, and not only the ignorant and uneducated, but the higher, classes were infected with the like superstition. Witness the imposition which a Cagliostro, a St. Germain, Prince Hohenlohe, and other charlatans practised successfully upon the world towards the end of the last and beginning of this century. Goethe was no doubt powerfully attracted by the subject of the Faust legend. He took it up in the beginning of his wonderful career, laid it aside, took it up again, and only finished it when his life's sands began to ebb.

He beheld in Faust a mirror of his own soul, the finite seeking the infinite, his giant intellect stretching into regions where it too must have become lost in tantalizing uncertainty, where mysterious powers bar all further progress, and the Cosmos has no other revelation to make than the inexorable bidding to keep on toiling, toiling, toiling, without vouchsafing a satisfactory answer to the momentous question, Wherefore, whatfore? To comprehend the Universe, its why and wherefore, is, and has been, the object of all great master minds, the Platos, the Aristoteleses, the Spinozas, the Spencers, of all the sages and prophets, the wise men of all ages and climes; and as long as human intellect will be capable of exercising its functions it will attempt to solve the great mystery: but alas, it will always remain an attempt and no more,—the intellect will never solve the problem. May we not say that we hear Goethe speak for himself, when he puts into the mouth of Faust the words:—

"Have I not known all earthly vanities?
Learned the insane and taught inanities?
When as I felt I spake, with sense as guide,
The contradiction doubly shrill replied;
Enforced by odious tricks, have I not fled
To solitudes and wildernesses dread,
And that I might not live alone, unheeded,
Myself at last unto the devil deeded?"

Faust seeking an alliance with the devil did not wish for the gratification of unsatisfied demands of the flesh; it was the unsatisfied demands of his soul, which all his studies, all his science, all his poring, all his midnight wakes, could not fill,—it was these which delivered him bound hand and foot into the power of the enemy of man. The personal devil no longer exists; the power which holds sway over man and becomes his master if he once falls away from the control of moral superiority still exists; the Faustus of modern times have nothing to ask any more from Mephistopheles or Beelzebub, but the hunger of human souls after knowledge which the intellect will never reveal is as unsatisfied as ever. Modern Faustus no longer simply seek to lift the veil of Nature's secret; they resign themselves in despair to the inevitable fate of having no longer anything to hope for; descending into the grave, they step into a hell, at the portals of which are verily written the words: "Voi ch'entrate lasciate ogni speranza," it is all darkness; it is more: it is annihilation. Compacts with the devil can no longer be concluded; the world has cut them by refusing to believe any longer in that personage; but something else has taken their place which the world countenances, and which modern society and modern science seem to recommend as a panacea for all pains which the soul may endure. That something is the repudiation of an intelligent cause, of a self-conscious creator; must we not fear that the reaction that must follow such an absurdity, such a theory of self-destruction, utter annihilation, a Nirvana without the redeeming feature of an ideal, will produce a confusion in man's mind worse even than in the centuries when the people could believe in a personal devil?

The Faust tragedy has not ended yet, and, what is more, it will never end.—Jewish Reformer, April 26, 1878.

ANTHONY COMSTOCK'S WORK.

The reading of the report of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice impels us to say a few words on the character and justice of the opposition to its methods, and particularly to those of Anthony Comstock, its secretary, in his prosecution of its purposes. The society has been in operation five years. It is composed of men of character and prominence in business, social rank, and religious work, and such people, besides many of no fame at all, are its pecuniary supporters. Its funds are not large, the entire receipts of the past year amounting to only $6831; but the expenditure counts. It is entirely devoted to suppressing one particular form of vice,—the culture of obscene knowledge. In the pursuance of this purpose during five years, one hundred and eighty-four persons have been convicted, or have pleaded guilty; sentences amounting in the aggregate to over one hundred and forty-two years of imprisonment and $47,585 in fines have been imposed; and an enormous quantity of obscene books, pictures, photographs, songs, images, letters, circulars, lithographic stones, stereotype plates, engraved plates, abortionist pills and powders, newspapers with unlawful advertisements, etc., etc., have been seized and destroyed. There can be no question that all this work has been done with the most conscientious intent, as may be better seen after consideration of its details.

Most of the detection is done, as most of the business is done, through the mails. Parties in New York, or some other considerable city, or now and then in wholly obscure places, get up a nasty book, unweaving in libidinous fashion the sexual relations, sometimes in the guise of a physiological book with colored pictures, sometimes as a narrative of the career of a man of "pleasure" or a prostitute,—we could mention titles if it were necessary. Besides books, these parties produce photographs or other kinds of pictures of such low sort that they cannot be decently described. They ornament playing cards with vile devices,—in fine, they prepare moral and physical poison—for their work results in both—as millers do flour, or drapers clothing. These manufacturers of obscenity then seek their public in two ways chiefly. They advertise, for the most part in the very numerous class of vulgar papers, which have a very large circulation even through respectable newsdealers, and which contain stories, verses, and jokes calculated to prime the appetites of the young for such wares as these advertisements offer. It too frequently happens that even newspapers that mean to be clean are deluded into inserting advertisements of this sort, guardedly phrased and offered by apparently honorable parties. But, besides this way of reaching youth, they have another. They print circulars by the thousands and millions, and send them not only to those who respond to the announcements before referred to, but to others who never see them. To do this they obtain lists of names. It has been repeatedly proved that the catalogues of schools are used for this purpose, and there are distinguished schools for young women which on this account alone print no catalogues of their classes. Another way in which they get names is to send a number of circulars to a post-office to be distributed, offering "a dozen fine portraits of famous persons" to any recipient who will send them twenty names of "enterprising young people" of the neighborhood. One or two of these will hardly fall to fall into the hands of some one bad enough or "green" enough to comply. Every address thus obtained receives another sort of circular full of vicious suggestion and account of their private wares—"information which no young person of either sex should be without"; "rich and racy love passages," etc. These are but samples of the devices of the filthy publishers; they are well enough known, and we have been amazed at the tone of even reputable people in accusing Comstock of exaggerating the prevalence of these practices. If they are less frequent and mischievous now, it is due to Comstock and his much-abused methods of detection that such is the fact.

What is Comstock's procedure, then? It is simply this: Discovering such an advertisement or such a circular, he answers it under an assumed name, encloses the named price, receives the goods, and prosecutes the sender with the evidence thus obtained. This the merchants and friends of obscenity call "alluring unwary souls into crime," and are supported in their cry by some ostensibly decent people, by a few who unquestionably are as worthy as they are simple. The plea is nonsense. Crime is the regular occupation of these parties,—they are not betrayed into it. The small deception of the assumed name does not alter the case in the least,—the letter is answered just as it would be if a fifteen-year-old lad had sent it; only in the latter case the lad and probably many others would have been hurt, whereas as it is a rascal gets a very small part of the punishment he deserves. Pleas in behalf of the dealers in abortions, who are murderers, and the dealers in obscene books and pictures, who are no better than murderers, are too much to bear with patience.

Undoubtedly Mr. Comstock and his fellows make mistakes. The society does not have any clear sense of the difference between circulating obscene literature and the advocacy of mischievous opinions concerning society, and showed this when it had Heywood arrested in this State and Bennett in New York. These cases seem to us invasions of the right of free speech and a free press. It may be very desirable to silence all persons holding and expressing demoralizing theories but unfortunately such a power can be safely wielded only in a theocracy. The society refer with just gratulation to the end of the fashionable Fifth Avenue abortionist, Restell, which Mr. Comstock brought about. They also mention a new issue,—that is, whether it is not their duty to stop the popular sale of certain "classics" which are now being advertised as obscene. This is an interesting point; test cases in England have failed.

The constitutionality of the laws against the carriage of certain matters in the mails, under which the society do their work, is much disputed, and was the especial object of attack in the last Congress, session of 1877-78. The House committee on revision of laws, to which the petition for the repeal of these statutes was referred, reported against it, affirming their belief that the statutes do not violate the Constitution and ought not to be changed. Further than that, the Supreme Court has decided in an appealed case that the laws in question are constitutional.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican, April 25.

HOLYOAKE'S "CO-OPERATION."

THE HISTORY OF CO-OPERATION IN ENGLAND. By George Jacob Holyoake. Vol. II. 12mo. pp. 401. J. B. Lippincott & Co.

The history of the cooperative movement in England, of which Mr. Holyoake has been a leader of conspicuous intelligence and zeal, embraces in this volume the constructive period, extending from the year 1845 to 1878. According to the definition given by the author, the phrase industrial cooperation signifies an organized union for the purpose of obtaining the profit of the transaction and having it equitably distributed among those by whom the work is performed. As a social scheme, cooperation began with the late Mr. Robert Owen, who founded at New-Lanark the first store which devoted its profits to educational purposes, and in whose mind cooperation was a paternal arrangement of industry that could be made more profitable than the plan in which the employer considered only himself. Mr. Owen did not foresee the self-managing scheme under which the workmen create profits and retain them among themselves. His idea was to organize the world, while cooperation attempts the humbler work of organizing the workshop and the provision-store. This is the vital distinction between Communism and Cooperation, which some public men prone to inexact thinking and hasty conclusions have often confounded with each other. The Communists proper have been described by Von Sybel as those who desire to transfer every kind of property to the State. This is the theory of many speculative minds on the continent of Europe, but it has never gained a foothold in England. In 1844 the principle of cooperation had taken the form of a system of shopkeeping for the working-people where no credit is given or received, where pure articles of just measure are sold at market prices, and the profits accumulated for the purchasers. It was not till about twenty-four years later, in 1868, that the Rochdale cooperative societies attempted to extend the principle to manufactures. Copartnership in business does not involve the elements of cooperation. The former proceeds by hiring money and labor, but excluding the laborer from participation in the profits. In the latter, the workmen share the profits according to their work. Even the maxim of Louis Blanc, of giving to each according to his wants, and of exacting from each according to his capacity, has never been accepted in England. It is too formal and scientific for the English mind. English cooperation gives nothing to a man because he wants it, but because he earns it. Mr. Holyoake presents an instructive exposition of the cooperative movement in its relation to what he calls industrial conspiracies. A conspiracy, as he defines it, is a secret scheme for attaining certain advantages by coercion. The modern trades-unions have been mostly of this kind, the advantage in this case being increase of wages. Cooperation is not a conspiracy, but a concerted industrial arrangement with a view to placing a moderate competence within the reach of workmen. Especially is cooperation not a plan to deprive the rich of their property for the benefit of the poor, but to enable the poor to create new wealth for themselves. The instinct of cooperation is self-help. Only men of independent spirit are attracted by it. The intention of the coöperator has always been never to depend on governmental aid, nor upon the sympathy of the rich for charity. When the working-classes shall have learned the lesson of self-support, self-dependence, and self-protection, there will be piety and devotion and the love of God among them, but they will owe the spirit of worship, as they will owe their fortunes, to themselves. Cooperation, it is urged by the author, in imparting the power of self-help, abates that distrust which has kept down the people. Above all the projects of the day, cooperative industry has eradicated the wholesale suspicion of riches and of capitalists. This means good understanding in the future between those who have saved money and those who need to save it and mean to save it. The old imbecility of poverty has nearly disappeared. The foolish objection to paying interest for money is scarcely visible. Jealousy of another's success is only justifiable when he bars the way to those below him. War upon the rich is only lawful when, not content with their own good fortune, they close every door upon the poor below them. But the means of a peaceful distribution of wealth is afforded by the sagacity of cooperation. "It asks no aid from the State; it petitions for no gift from individuals; it disturbs no interests; it attacks nobody's fortune; it attempts no confiscation of existing gains; but stands apart, works apart, clears its own ground, gathers its own harvest, distributes the golden grain equally among all the husbandmen, and, without needing favors or incurring obligations, it establishes the industrial classes among the possessors of the fruits of the earth." Mr. Holyoake has treated the subject in a lucid and exhaustive manner, in no spirit of partisanship, with no class prejudices, with no foregone theoretical conclusions, but with great sincerity of conviction and a broad and catholic human sympathy. If he is sometimes tempted to inopportune reflections and an excessive diffuseness of illustration, his fullness of knowledge and fairness of statement will inspire reliance upon his narrative, while his calm and dispassionate tone will win attention to his reasonings.—N. Y. Tribune.

NEW METHODS OF CONVERSION.

It is related of General Taylor that on the eve of a battle during the Mexican war, the troops being short of ammunition, he ordered several cases of Bibles, which had been sent out to the soldiers by the Bible Society, to be used for the purpose of making cartridges. When the troops were drawn up in the order of battle, he harangued them on the importance of duty and bravery, and concluded by exclaiming, "Now, boys, spread the gospel among the Mexicans!" This method of conversion is not regarded with favor by humanely-disposed persons. But that gunpowder has played an important part in Protestant missionary schemes cannot be successfully denied. The Protestant missionary to savage tribes, if he succeeds in nothing else, is pretty certain not to fail in making himself obnoxious, and therefore he is either eaten up or driven off, either event furnishing an excuse for the government to which the missionary belongs to establish a garrison in the territory of the heathen, for the purpose of enforcing the spread of the gospel by a liberal expenditure of gunpowder. This has been the usual course of proceeding, and recent reports from Australia show that this utilitarian method has been resorted to by the Wesleyan Church. It appears that this sect is in missionary operations in the Friendly Islands, Fiji, Samoa, Rotumah, and the group of islands of which New Britain and New Ireland are the largest. "The Rev. George Brown," who is the commander-in-chief of this evangelical crusade, has his headquarters located on one of the Duke of York group of islands. The operations of his army of conversion are carried on mainly by native teachers. The account says:—

Eight of these teachers had expressed their wish and determination to visit the interior tribes of New Britain. They divided into two bands, in order to cross the island at different parts. Four of them started from Blanche Bay, and the other four made the northern side of the island their point of departure. Blanche Bay party ascended the range, gained the plateau, visited the people, lodged one night in a town; and, without attempting to pursue their journey to the opposite coast of the island, returned next day to their point of departure. The other four teachers also reached the plateau in safety, interviewed the natives, and were entertained for the night in one of the towns. A chief named Talili, who lived on the low land, but who had influence in the interior, sent a message to the town in which the unfortunate teachers were lodged for the night, beseeching the tribe to kill them. When the doomed men left the village the next morning, the people followed, and, calling upon all whom they met working in the plantations by the way to join them in the deed of blood, at length fell upon the unarmed, unsuspecting teachers, and slew them in a savage fashion. The bodies were cut up, and the pieces sent here and there to the different towns, where they were cooked and eaten with cannibal ceremony and delight.

When the news of the massacre reached Mr. Brown he organized an expedition, unsheathed the sword of Gideon, "and the result was that at least fifty—some estimated the number at one hundred and fifty—of the cannibals were killed, and many of the towns and plantations were destroyed." What have our esteemed Methodist contemporaries to say about this method of propagating the gospel?—Catholic Review.

In a recent lecture to an English audience, Mr. R. A. Proctor developed the idea that the earth is, has always been, and so long as it shall exist as a part of our cosmo-system must ever continue to be, growing in size. It is computed, said the lecturer, that hundreds of thousands of extra-terrestrial bodies become incorporated with our globe every twenty-four hours, and four hundred million in the course of each year. They may vary in weight between a few grains and a ton. Millions of years, however, would be required to add a single foot to the earth's diameter by these small accretions.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 3.

S. Hunt, 50 cents; Guido Marx, $2.50; Mrs. C. E. Serrill, 50 cents; Horace Hunt, $3.20; Mrs. G. R. Russell, $3.20; Cash, 90 cents; John Stimson, $3.20; R. P. Halliwell, $3.20; Fred'k Douglas, $5; H. C. Lockwood, $6.40; Jas. McArthur, $5; Wm. H. Gross, $1.25; Kilian Bros., $3.20; Joshua Hill, $3.20; J. T. Brookway, $2; H. B. Thomas, $1; R. F. Briggs, $3.20; Dan'l Johnson, $3.20; John Adams, $3.20; E. Marston, $3.20; Wm. H. Bisbee, $5; Wm. Boynton, $1.60; Z. Hackett, M.D., $6.50; W. H. Williams, $1.75; Henry Bolton, 80 cents; Jas. Eddy, $3; Geo. M. Olcott, $3.20; N. Littlefield, $3.20.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 8, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 331 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street; J. T. FAW, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIABUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KILPATRICK, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SUCH WORK as is described below, started by a young Unitarian minister, deserves the hearty sympathy and encouragement of every true liberal:—

Two years ago, the Rev. J. G. Brooks, the successor of Dr. Putnam as pastor of the old First Church in Roxbury, had his attention arrested by the large number of idle and apparently aimless boys and young men congregated on the streets and in the saloons near the Roxbury station, at the Tremont Street crossing. He ascertained that there were over seventy-five grog shops within a few minutes' walk of this point, and the police reported some of the streets centering there as among the worst localities in the city. There was not a reading-room, nor any other decent resort, to compete with all these schools of vice. He proposed to open one. Men who knew the locality laughed at him. He was warned that himself and his books would be thrown out of the window before the foolhardy experiment had progressed a week. But he believed that he knew a stronger influence than force, and he was not afraid. Appealing to some of the members of his congregation, he rented a single room at the foot of Pynchon Street; lighted, warmed, and seated it; provided books and papers; and started with twelve boys who were willing to accept free tickets of membership. It was called the "Young Men's Free Union." Its aim was to aid its members in every way possible, and to furnish them a pleasant place in which to spend their evenings. No technical "religious work" was attempted, and no book or other publication of a sectarian nature was kept in the room. Music and readings were given every Sunday evening, and a "Plain Talk," lecture, or entertainment twice a month. The membership was free, and limited to boys over fourteen years of age not in the public schools. They were required to attend with fair regularity, and were admitted by ticket. Mr. Edmund T. Dooley was engaged as superintendent. He had received a preparation for the work in the Christian Union under Mr. Baldwin, and has a genius for and enthusiasm in it that peculiarly qualify him for the place. Of course there were difficulties and discouragements at first. It was a crowd that would have dismayed any kid-glove "reformer"; turbulent, easily excited, given to rough fun, keen-witted, but still susceptible to kindly influences, if meant honestly for their good, and free from "non-sense." The membership increased so rapidly that additional rooms were required, and good order was soon established. The union now numbers two hundred and seventy-five members, of an average age of about eighteen. There is a large and well-lighted reading-room, containing thirteen hundred volumes and a full file of papers and periodicals. The evening attendance will average one hundred, and a more quiet and orderly reading-room is seldom seen. A class-room is maintained for teaching penmanship, arithmetic, history, expressive reading, spelling, and German. Ninety members are under regular instruction, given by eleven volunteer teachers, most thoroughly qualified. Employment is sought for members who are out of work, and one lady devotes her leisure time to finding places for the boys. She has already placed twelve in regular situations this winter. The ladies of the First Church also furnish two of their number to be present nearly every evening, and assist in handling the books. Adjoining the reading-room is an apartment for games, supplied with a cue alley, dominoes, checkers, etc. The cost of maintaining the Union is about $2000 a year, which is wholly paid by Mr. Brooks' church. It has already done an immense amount of good in that neighborhood. But better yet, it has furnished an illustration of practical philanthropy which Boston, with all its noble charities, would do well to duplicate in a score of other localities that might be named. It is cheaper to save boys than to punish or try to reclaim men. It is more Christ-like to apply Christianity than merely to talk about it.

F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The twelfth annual meeting of the Free Religious Association will be held in Boston on the 29th and 30th of May.

The Association will hold its opening session for business (election of officers, hearing of reports, etc.) at Union Hall, in the Young Men's Christian Union Building, on Boylston Street, at 7.45 o'clock, Thursday evening, the 29th.

The Convention on Friday, the 30th, will be held in Parker Memorial Hall, corner of Berkeley and Appleton Streets, with sessions at 10.30 A.M. and 3 P.M.

The new President, Prof. Adler, is to preside, and at one of the sessions will make a special address giving his views of the "Practical Needs of Free Religion." Other speakers and topics will be announced hereafter.

On Friday evening, the Association will have its Social Festival in Union Hall.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

"THE DOOM OF INDIVIDUALISM."

Under the above caption, the New York Times of April 28 reports Mr. Frothingham's farewell address to his society on the preceding day, and says of it: "Mr. Frothingham's address (for it was without text and not in the nature of a sermon) contained in its general tenor, as well as in many of its isolated passages, a full and frank confession of the failure of the intellectual movement of which Mr. Frothingham has been one of the exponents."

The Christian Union of April 30 makes a similar comment: "Mr. Frothingham's abandonment of his church enterprise has not unnaturally been taken as a virtual admission that 'Free Religion' in New York is a failure. This inference receives confirmation from Mr. Frothingham's own expressions in his farewell sermon of last Sunday, in which, after announcing that his church had stood on the ground of Transcendentalism, believing with Emerson and Parker 'that truth comes to the individual heart,' he conceded that 'the era of Individualism is near its close, and an era of organization, of construction upon a new basis, is at hand.' What the new basis is to be, Mr. Frothingham confessed himself unable to say. We commend him to I. Corinthians iii., 11."

In order to discover how much truth there may be in these alleged confessions of failure, the reader will naturally enough desire to know what Mr. Frothingham actually said. We are sorry that we cannot present the address verbatim or in full; but the copious extracts given below from the Times' report probably furnish an approximate index to his thought. We quote all of the report that is germane to the question suggested by the title of the address:—

"He said that at the close of a ministry covering the best years of his life, it was proper that he should give some explanation of the principles which had actuated him in his work, of the purposes which had controlled him, of the purposes that had underlain his expositions of the religious life, and of the ends that had been sought. Twenty years ago this very month a society was established in this city, known and understood to be a Unitarian society, and a young minister entered upon his labors with hope and faith in his mission. The minister belonged to the liberal wing of Unitarianism as it was then understood and expounded. He was a believer in the spiritual philosophy, and, of the school of Transcendentalism as represented by Theodore Parker and Ralph Waldo Emerson. He believed in its best ideas, nourished its most enthusiastic hopes, and held that the germ of a high future for man lay in the shadows and imperfect symbols of the present. He had always dissented from the theology of Unitarianism as fluctuating, as vague, as uncertain, as deficient in intellectual basis. He had never supposed that that theology was intended to be final. It seemed to him speculative, with fatal defects at almost every point. He had become known as one of those who rejected sectarianism and built upon ideas whose hope for the future consisted in largeness and breadth of outlook, in loftiness of purpose and aim, in depth and expansiveness of view, and who believed that the future rested more upon these than upon dogmatic theories. The vagueness of Unitarianism was visible, as he believed, in many things."

After criticizing at some length the Unitarian doctrine respecting God, Jesus Christ, and human nature, Mr. Frothingham continued thus:—

"It was the idea of the minister that all that was best and noblest and most beautiful in all this would gradually clear itself of the ferment, and become lucid and hopeful,—cease its whining about depravity, caught from the old dogmas, and come out into a hopeful and sincere spiritual philosophy. And so, without compunction and with a justified conscience, he stood as a Unitarian, hopeful, believing in the best aspirations of man, and looking with confidence to the future.

"But at an evil time, as it appeared to him, when Unitarianism wished for organization, when its leaders thought it best to present a solid phalanx to the enemy instead of each one skirmishing on his own individual responsibility, it became necessary that there should be an intellectual basis, and then all these fatal objections stood revealed. Under the circumstances, the speaker's duty seemed to be clear; it was to separate from a creed that could not command the assent of his judgment, and to stand alone; and so, for the last few years, his ministry had been an independent one, having no organic relation to Unitarianism, but simply conditioned upon free thought in religion and free discussion of all the problems that agitate mankind.

"The individualism of this position came easy to one who had stood on the basis of reason and individual conscience for so long, who was a Transcendentalist, an advocate of the spiritual philosophy, and believed that all good comes to the individual soul through the individual's effort and aspiration, his heroism and openness of spirit to all harmonizing and elevating influences. This doctrine was very like the Quaker doctrine of inner light, but it rested upon a very different basis—faith in the aspiration of the individual soul, faith in reason. Institutions it discouraged; special systems were set aside; dogmas met with determined protest. This position was a noble and ennobling one so long as it could be held with sincerity, with earnestness, with loftiness of purpose, with a turning of the soul toward the light, from whatever direction coming. Did anything but nobleness ever come from Ralph Waldo Emerson, from Theodore Parker?

"But times have come," continued Mr. Frothingham, "when this noble position is held by fewer and fewer persons,—when the men professing it call themselves inspired, and a coarse sort of self-assertion has taken possession of the proper place of reason and conscience, and of the individual aspiration. Therefore, my friends, it is given me to say to-day that the era of Individualism is drawing to its close. The time is coming when men and women will no longer look to special persons for counsel and guidance, when affiliation with each other and communion together will establish new modes of filling the wants and aspirations of the soul. It seems to me that the world is on the verge of an era when organization will be invoked to work out our problems; that the era of destruction has passed by, and the era of reconstruction is dawning; that the pulling down has been done, and that the current of human progress is setting in the direction of building up, helping each other, producing new institutions. Where, then, taking this for granted, are the moral forces by which this reorganization is to be effected?"

Mr. Frothingham then enumerated Catholicism and Protestantism as two of the "moral forces" referred to, making criticisms which in substance are quite familiar to readers of THE INDEX, and proceeded as follows:—

"But what of the new piety—the modern spirit that looked forward to a future for man, that cared as little for Luther and Calvin as for Rome? A grand exodus of people from the churches might be looked for by and by from the mere force of dissent, not from any intellectual reason, nor because their separation had any philosophical basis, but because they were 'come-outers' by nature and organization. Such people were spiritual tramps. And, though the tramp might set out with the intention of taking work whenever he could get it, it would not be long before he became a beggar, his shoes worn out, his garments in rags, all nobleness gone out of his soul. What was now wanted, then, was an organization capable of utilizing such elements. He would not say that this organization should have a creed, but it should be something with pretty well-understood articles.

"In conclusion, Mr. Frothingham referred to the spirit of organization manifest everywhere. He had lately sat in a parlor with a rector of Grace Church on one side of him, and the minister of the Society for Ethical Culture on the other, and they had all put the little wisdom of their heads together to devise ways to ameliorate the condition of the poor in this city, scarcely recollecting that they were all sworn enemies on Sunday. He saw in these things one of the many signs of the times. He was not prepared to say what the creed of this new organization would be, but he had read enough and pondered enough to know that social science was busy harmonizing, and to believe that the time was near when all these elements would come together upon an unassailable intellectual basis. To-day, as it seemed to him, the last word of Individualism had been spoken from that desk; every year, as he grew older, he became more impressed with the value of deed above creed, of doing instead of talking, and of the regenerating power of action. Something like this would be a part of the new dispensation. It would not be a protest, but an affirmative and humanizing religion, taking hold on the highest enthusiasm and ideal of man, and linking it to the eternal."

Such was the substance of this remarkable confession, as reported. It is a confession of the failure of Individualism, but by no means of Free Religion. That is altogether another matter, and the Christian Union runs faster than it is sent when it confounds the two. The conclusion of Mr. Frothingham's address sufficiently expresses his unquenched faith in that "affirmative and humanizing religion" which is to be neither Catholic nor Protestant, but free. While he does not profess to know what the "unassailable intellectual basis" of it is to be, he hints his undimmed faith in the possibility of attaining such a basis, through the "harmonizing" activity of "social science." If he had only seen far enough to say simply—science and the scientific method!

But the impressiveness of this address lies in its extraordinary frankness and moral honesty. Here is one of the most eloquent and prominent exponents of Transcendental Individualism publicly avowing, with a courage and sincerity worthy of the profoundest respect, that "the era of Individualism is drawing to its close." Note well the central reason of his avowal. What has opened the eyes of this brave and loyal spirit? Individualism has proved a failure because "the times have come" when the "noble and ennobling position" of Ralph Waldo Emerson and Theodore Parker is "held by fewer and fewer persons,—when the men professing it call themselves inspired, and a coarse sort of self-assertion has taken possession of the proper place of reason and conscience and of the individual aspiration." It has proved a failure because of the multitude of these "spiritual tramps" that have succeeded to the great souls of the early Transcendental movement,—their "shoes worn out," their "garments in rags," and "all nobleness gone out of their souls."

Mr. Frothingham has seen too clearly what is going on about him not to recognise the seed in the fruit. The growing horde of "irresponsibles," clamoring about "free love," "private judgment in morals," "individual sovereignty," "natural right to commit adultery," etc., with unanswerable logic deduce their new philosophy of moral irresponsibility from the old doctrine of the "right of private judgment," which Protestantism originally supplemented with faith in the Bible,—which Science supplements with the principle of universal reason,—but which Individualism refuses to supplement with anything. Mr. Frothingham evidently sees the utter hopelessness of the attempt to deny that these "irresponsibles" are the legitimate offspring of Individualism. But he also sees, evidently with equal clearness, that they are rapidly and inevitably reducing Individualism itself to absurdity, contempt, and execration; and he now gives them pretty intelligible notice to quote his name no longer. We do not believe he would to-day lend his indorsement to T. B. Wakeman's plausible but shallow argument for repeal of the postal law of 1873, bottomed as it is on no ultimate premises but those of Individualism. So, at least, we cannot help inferring from his very significant statement that "to-day, as it seemed to him, the last word of Individualism had been spoken from that desk." This is a reasonably clear intimation that, if he resumes his ministry on his return from Europe, it will be grounded on some other foundation than Individualism. This, it is safe to conjecture, would be the impregnable foundation of the Scientific Method.

It needs to be emphasized that the fortunes of Free Religion are in nowise bound up with those of Individualism or of Transcendentalism, of which it is not the child. As we showed two years ago in our lecture on "The Scientific Method in Religion," and as no one has ever disproved, the Free Religious Association (which gave its name to Free Religion) was originally founded in the most unequivocal manner on the Scientific Method. Its Constitution is the irrefutable proof of this fact. If not all the members have understood this fact, that is no disproof of it; the thought which created the Association is intelligibly recorded in the Constitution itself, and that thought, not the thought of any individual member, is the fair exponent of Free Religion so far as its intellectual basis is concerned. As one of the original founders, it is proper to state that we never have been an Individualist, and never have advocated Individualism; the events of the last year have merely strengthened and intensified a long-held conviction, first publicly expressed thirteen years ago, that the Scientific Method is the only possible way of establishing truth in any department of human thought. The Christian Union's wish is father to its thought, when it includes "Free Religion" in the "Individualism" which Mr. Frothingham concedes to be passing away; his language is susceptible of no such construction, and evinces undiminished confidence in the future of Free Religion and "social science." His work in New York has been no "failure" at all, nor could he have intended to represent it as such. Not so resultless (thanks to the constitution of the moral universe!) are the patient, arduous, devoted labors of any soul like his, inspired by love of humanity and of truth. The seeds which start up the quickest are not those which grow the longest; and no man is wise enough to foresee the fruitage of the seeds noiselessly sown in many hearts by this pure, upright, and nobly influential preacher during the twenty years of his apostolate in the great metropolis. He is one of the shining spirits that have lent to Individualism all its lustre and glory in the past; and the fact speaks volumes, when such a one as he finds himself compelled to bear witness against it now. The integrity of soul and intellect which prompted the brave confession commands involuntary reverence, and will make his words sink deep in many minds that shut themselves against our own. Not the least of his services to truth is this, his latest one. Surely his work is not yet ended. His voice will still be needed, and we trust will still be heard, in the years that are to come.

RUSSIAN SOCIALISM.

A letter from St. Petersburg, under date of the 11th of March, depicts in the following sombre colors the internal situation of the Russian Empire:—

"The fear of the Asiatic pest has vanished, but there remains the fear of the European pest,—that is to say, of Socialism. It goes without saying that the manifestations of this latter danger, which in these recent times have taken place in Russia, are the object of the utmost possible attention of the government and of society. The audacity of these secret organizations goes way beyond any imaginable limit. One sees in circulation manifestoes and incendiary publications that bear as their authority this printed title, 'Russian Socialistic and Revolutionary Committee.' Several ambassadors of foreign powers and high government officials have received these manifestoes. The secret committee declare in them that it has cited before its bar Prince Krapotkin, the Governor of Kharkof, and that it has condemned him to death,—the same it has already meted out to the Generals Mesentzof and Trepof,—and that it has the same in store for several others.

"Since then, the secret committee has displayed a redoubled activity, and launched other anonymous menaces of death, that have been sent successively to M. Vakof, recently named as Minister of the Interior, to the Governor-General of Kiev, General Tcharthof, and to Baron Drenteln, Acting Chief of the third division of the Chancellerie Imperiale. The letter addressed to Baron Drenteln by the secret committee is thoroughly characteristic. It states that they do not ignore the fact that personally Baron Drenteln has no fear of death, and that he has but one tie or affection upon earth, the object of that affection being his daughter. The committee resolve, therefore, to strike the general through the person of his daughter!"

A. W. E.

THE IDEAS OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

The following translation embraces the chief articles of the celebrated "Declaration of the Rights of Man," which was framed by the French Constituent Assembly and ratified by King Louis XVI., in September, 1791, as a part of the new Constitution:—

"ART. 1. Men are born and remain free and equal. Social distinctions can be founded only upon common utility.

"ART. 2. The end of all political association is the preservation of the natural and inalienable rights of man. These rights are: liberty, property, security, and resistance to oppression.

"ART. 3. The principle of all sovereignty resides expressly in the nation. No body, no individual, can exercise authority which does not emanate expressly from it.

"ART. 4. Liberty consists in the power of doing everything which does no injury to another: thus the exercise of the natural rights of each man has no limits but those which assure to other members of society the enjoyment of the same rights. These limits can be determined only by law.

"ART. 5. Law has the right of forbidding only actions injurious to society. Whatever is not forbidden by law cannot be prevented, and no one can be constrained to do that which it has not ordained.

"ART. 6. Law is the expression of the general will. All citizens have a right to concur personally or by their representatives in its formation. It ought to be the same for all, whether it protects or whether it punishes. All citizens are equal in its eyes, are equally admissible to all dignities, places, and public employments, according to their capacities, and with no other distinction than that of their virtues or their talents.

"ART. 10. No one should be disturbed for his opinions, even religious ones, provided that their manifestation does not trouble the order established by law.

"ART. 11. The free communication of thoughts and opinions is one of the most precious rights of men; every citizen, therefore, can freely speak, write, print, with the exception of answering for the abuse of this liberty in the cases determined by law."

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Masonry originated in Boston in 1733.

Lorimer has gone and Duryea has come.

Lassalle was the father of German Socialism.

The people of Iceland are mainly Lutherans.

Five hundred newspapers are printed in Russia.

Gen. Dix wished no pomp or parade at his funeral.

The Americans smoked nearly two billion cigars last year.

It looks as though David was to have a successor in Rothschild.

New York and Philadelphia are to have children's synagogues.

Some people seem to live with charity toward none, with malice for all.

One-half of the youth of France are educated by the religious orders.

Julian Hawthorne goes to a New Jerusalem Church in the north of London.

The Japanese are imitating Western nations in the style of furnishing their houses.

The Dead Sea is being made into a means for the manufacture of chloride of potash.

The French government has excluded the religious orders from teaching in the schools.

The Italians have formed a democratic league for the attainment of universal suffrage.

The principal attendants at the church of Father Hyacinthe are Americans and English.

Tennyson was paid for his last poem, containing one hundred and twenty-seven lines, $1500.

A daughter of Joaquin Miller was a dancer at Baldwin's theatre, San Francisco, last winter.

The fire drill, used to produce fire by friction, is considered the oldest implement in the world.

Bismarck prohibits German papers printed in the United States from being brought into Germany.

George Eliot says: "To have once acted greatly seems a reason why we should always be noble."

B. F. Underwood will lecture at Pittsburgh, Pa., Sunday evening, May 11; at Beloit, Ohio, May 13.

An autograph letter written by Benedict Arnold was sold at a recent auction in this city for thirty dollars.

Hamburg, Germany, has authorized the practice of cremation where the friends of deceased persons wish it.

Mr. O. B. Frothingham's society does not care to hear any preacher in the place of their minister while he is absent.

It is rumored that the lost art of hardening copper so as to bear a cutting edge has been rediscovered by Dr. J. S. Meyer.

Great Britain has three thousand two hundred and sixteen steamers,—more than six times as many as the United States.

American street-cars are used in most of the cities of Europe, and in India, New Zealand, Australia, and South America.

Some of the early editions of Tennyson's poems have just been sold at auction in London, one volume bringing as high as $305.

The Wesleyans have fourteen churches in Northern Italy, eleven in Southern Italy, with six hundred and sixty Sabbath-school scholars.

The clergy of Marseilles are in the habit of sounding the death knell every Friday in commemoration of the publication of Renan's Life of Jesus.

In the Russian Church there are no less than one hundred thousand persons in holy orders, and very many of them are in a condition of beggary.

The Chicago clergymen are moving to secure a suspension of secular business in that city on Sundays. Better shut up some of the churches.

The scientific work that was to astonish the world, which M. Thiers left, proves to be only a mass of exploded heresies, and therefore will not be printed.

Lord Beaconsfield is to be presented with a laurel crown which is to cost two hundred and twenty pounds sterling, and is to be paid for by penny contributions.

The liberty recently enjoyed by American Protestants, of holding religious meetings in a public hall, in Prague, has been taken away by the Austrian authorities.

During each year of President Buchanan's term of office as Chief Executive of this nation, he paid out every dollar of his salary for household expenses and benevolent purposes.

In Italy the suffrage is limited to citizens who are twenty-five years old, and who pay taxes to the amount of a few dollars. Only about six hundred thousand persons are allowed to vote.

The Pope is shortly to publish a document inviting all the European governments to unite in purging society of the evils which at present beset it, and join in an endeavor to stamp out Socialism.

The oldest and coldest town in the world is Jakutsk, in Eastern Siberia. The ground remains frozen to the depth of three hundred feet except in midsummer, when it thaws three feet at the surface.

China has ten million opium-eaters; and the government has issued an edict, which goes into effect next year, making the use or sale of opium punishable by death. Some of "the Chinese must go" from China, or give up opium.

Newark people are making fools of themselves over the Sunday law. The churches tried to close the saloons on the Sabbath, and now the saloons are trying to stop milkmen, newsboys, druggists, and others in their legitimate business.

Mr. B. F. Underwood, writing from the West, where he is lecturing, says: "The highest work of the liberal teachers to-day is, in my opinion, to acquaint the people with the best thought of the day on scientific, philosophical, and moral questions."

A nephew of Dean Stanley has joined the Catholic Church recently, but it is denied that the Dean himself is taking steps towards Rome. It does not seem to me that he would have to take a great many to get there. An Episcopalian is nothing more than a washed-out Catholic.

Capital punishment was abolished in Switzerland four years ago, and since its abolition there has been such an increase in crimes of violence, especially of murders, that petitions, signed by thirty thousand persons, for restoration of the death penalty, have been presented to the Federal Council.

Mr. Alcott eulogizes Christianity: "Christianity is the best religion; it fits man. Christ is the supreme, final, and eternal revelation from God. Christ was the transcendent, sinless man. The Trinity is less a mystery than it was, and may yet satisfy the intellect. Christ took upon himself the sins of others."

Captain Ericsson thinks the sun itself has no heat, but it is our atmosphere which gives heat by the passage of the solar ray through it. He concludes from this that the whole solar system is inhabited by a race something like man. That is, all the planets which have atmospheres probably have heat, and therefore inhabitants.

It is said that the Harvard students break up, or at least shorten, morning prayers at chapel by hiring organ-grinders to play outside. Why not act like men rather than boys, and refuse to attend such performances? It is time that praying in town meetings, in legislatures, in public schools, in colleges, and in all public institutions was stopped.

Rev. Mr. Cudworth preached recently on Enoch and Elijah, and said: "Elijah went up in a chariot of fire. Enoch walked with God and was not, because God had taken him; but how is not recorded. It is enough, however, to know that he walked with God." But is it "enough" to preach such stuff as this to people in the nineteenth century?

Wong Ah Lock, one of the Chinese speakers at Horticultural Hall, Wednesday evening, April 23, said to the audience, "Don't go out of the United States to civilize people, when right here children that can hardly speak say to their father, 'If you don't shut up, I punch your nose.'" Civilization begins at home, according to heathen notions.

Protestant schools have been established in Rome, and Leo XIII. is in a troubled state of mind about it. He has devoted some of the money sent to him for the maintenance of his princely state toward having better Roman Catholic schools in the Eternal City, and has issued an appeal to votaries of his church everywhere to contribute towards their support.

The doctrines of the Gallican Catholic Church, which Father Hyacinthe is endeavoring to form in Paris, are as follows: "rejection of Papal Infallibility; election of bishops by the clergy and their congregations; celebration of liturgical offices and reading of the Bible in the national tongue; marriage allowed to priests, and liberty and morality of confession."

The first regular series of newspapers preserved in the British Museum is dated May 23, 1623. The first advertisement appeared in the columns of the Impartial Intelligencer, printed in 1648. The first illustrated paper was London's Intelligencer, which came out in 1648. The first daily paper was the Daily Courant, published March 11, 1702. In 1778 appeared the first Sunday newspaper, called Johnson's Sunday Monitor.

Prof. Swing speaks well of Col. Ingersoll; says a good word for theatres and actors; preaches a broad, humane religion; wants the Sabbath for man, and even wishes H. M. S. Pinafore to "sail on." He praises this popular craft, probably because every other Christian minister in the country wishes it at the bottom of the sea. If the theatre ever has a chaplain, it will be of no use for any one to run against Prof. David Swing.

Every little while we hear of the conversion to the Roman Catholic faith of some prominent Protestant clergyman or layman, and it is generally supposed that there are few or no converts the other way. But a recent correspondent says that there is a current setting toward the Church of England of persons who have been bred in the Papal communion. He gives the following list of converts, all but one of whom were known personally by him: one a chaplain to his bishop, and served afterwards two or three years as curate. Another was a college professor, and now incumbent of a small benefice. A third was a curate of a well-known church. A fourth was dean of a Roman Irish Cathedral, and was received by the Bishop of Peterborough. A fifth was a Roman Catholic army chaplain. And still another was a Jesuit, and is now, or recently was, a London curate. A late number of the Dominion Churchman states that within a few months eighty-three clergymen of different denominations have been received into the Church of England, thirteen of whom were Roman Catholic priests.

I highly enjoyed a visit to the Free Congregational Society of Florence, Massachusetts, on Sunday, April 27; on which occasion I spoke twice in the society's beautiful edifice called Cosman Hall, to large and intelligent audiences. Liberals everywhere ought to have the example of this society before them, to let them see what can be done by faith in free religious principles, and by an organization that does not bind the spirit, but unites the energies and purposes of men and women in the work of elevating the world socially, morally, and spiritually. In this village of less than three thousand inhabitants, the liberals have a building costing forty thousand dollars, and by far the finest structure in the place, in which to hold their meetings and enjoy the advantages of social intercourse. Regular Sunday speaking is sustained by the society, and a Sunday-school is carried on in a manner and with a success that is highly flattering to the superintendent, the teachers and pupils alike. I have seen nothing more encouraging to our cause than the Free Congregational Society of Florence. To those who have lost faith in the practical power of Free Religion, I would say, Go to Florence and see what earnest, determined, live men and women can do, and then "go and do likewise."

A STORY is told of a Kentucky girl who had agreed to elope with a lover whom her parents refused to admit to the house. She descended the ladder in the night and started with him on horseback. "Now you see how much I love you," she said; "you will be always a true and kind husband, won't you?" He answered gruffly, "Perhaps I may, and perhaps not." She rode in silence a few minutes, when she suddenly exclaimed: "Oh, what shall we do? I have left my money behind me in my room!" "Then," said he, "we must go back and fetch it." They were soon again at the house, the ladder was again placed, the lady remounted, while the ill-natured lover remained below. But she delayed to come, and so he gently called, "Are you coming?" when she looked out of the window and said, "Perhaps I may, and perhaps not"; and then shut down the window.

Communications.

WOMAN AND CHRISTIANITY.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Will L. B. Farrar, M.D., please accept thus publicly the thanks of one woman for his fearless and truthful statement of the position of all women relatively to Christianity, in the very refreshing paper written for your columns entitled "Creation and Creator"?

It certainly will be a satisfaction to me thus to express my pleasure in the perusal of the article, and to substantiate the statements to which I refer; namely, "Intelligence and not the saliva of a god has opened their eyes [speaking of the advanced atheistic women], and they see the wrong and debasement which superstition, i.e., every form of a pretended revealed religion, has brought upon the race and especially upon woman. She has little reason to thank Christianity for her present elevation. It has come to her through scientific and moral enlightenment in denial and subversion of many principles and practices taught in the Christian's sacred books. Has any advocate of woman's rights to an equality before the law, her right to use her abilities of mind and body in any useful employment, demanded it because the Jewish and Christian Scriptures teach it? On the contrary, woman's best friends and most efficient helpers are infidels and those who acknowledge but a slight allegiance to these divine oracles."

However shocking this sentiment may have appeared to those persons who are forever prating of the debt the human race owes to revealed religion for aids to progress, it will seem still more shocking for women to rise up and corroborate it. In justice to the liberalized thought of to-day, and to the heroines and heroes who have battled prejudice and superstition and promulgated a progress for women never advocated in any scripture, she must however speak out her testimony to the truth of Dr. Farrar's statements.

Looking back (I need go no further than my own life), I see women fettered by chains woven out of the stuff found in the Bible of the Christian religion. There was a "thus far" limiting her every action; yes, her every thought. Duty was not presented to her as the broad principle by which her relations with human beings were to be equitably sustained, but in the narrowing and humiliating sense that so-and-so must be done or left undone by her because she was a woman. She feels yet ingrafted into her very being the curse of a long-continued rejoicing that a "man child" has been born, and a long-continued regret that "only a girl" has come into the world, "born to trouble as the sparks fly upward," to be only a beggar upon man's bounty, a slave of his appetites, a pitiful, cringing, or cunning creature, who must be content with what few crumbs of affection or gifts of material goods her special man-lord and master would selfishly grant in return for her love and attention to his material wants, happy if she escaped the brutal cruelty many of her sisterhood suffered. Her impulses for action were restricted to the words or deeds compassed in regulating domestic affairs or acting on a committee of social church-work.

In my time I have seen and have felt all this. It was the usual life of woman. I can recall and recount the prominent persons who pointed out to woman a higher, truer, broader, freer life than this. These men and these women, the pioneers in the woman's movement, received little at first but the scorn of sectarian prejudice, and the denunciations of the Bible believers, who had been drilled into the doctrine of woman's debasement. Who were the defenders of these pioneers? They were few in number; they were the infidel men for the most part; that little unorganized band of a half-dozen individuals in a community, who had arrived at conclusions concerning creeds and dogmas which are now taught from the most liberal of our pulpits. A woman who was an avowed freethinker at that time (less than fifty years ago) was a rare being indeed, socially ostracized. So this little band of infidels alone would rally to the standard of woman's progress; would attend a meeting which was to be addressed by a reformer, even if it was a woman; would extend to her all the hospitality they dared to do without calling down upon themselves the righteous indignation of the religious element of their households, with their charity, which could cover any sin but that of upholding a strong-minded woman, and whose jealousy was ready to construe any attention paid by a man to one of these terrible women-creatures into something of a criminal nature.

This is no fiction of the imagination eager to paint a one-sided picture of the past. Experience painfully presents the picture in even more glaring colors than I care to use; for my dear old father was one of this noble-minded class to whom I am endeavoring to do a simple act of justice. I would that I had dared before he died to do this. I shall never cease to reproach, not only myself, but that Christianity which so poisoned me with prejudice, that during his life I condemned him and ignored the fine quality of liberal thought promulgated by him. The high principles which actuated him throughout a long, useful, honest life (honest to his own hurt) made his death-bed a holy scene, filling his dying moments with a supreme resignation to the rule of universal law, and held in it no hope of a hereafter where he should be known for what he was, to compensate him for going through one world under social ostracism, forever stigmatized with the name of infidel.

These same thoughts, these same principles, this very name "infidel," no longer receives the same meed of scorn and indignity of forty years ago; but there still attaches enough of it to the advocates of free-thought for its exponents to rally to its support. I rejoiced when I read this vindication of infidels in Dr. Farrar's article, and desired to add my simple word to supplement his candid position, and confirm the truth of his remarks touching the obligation woman owes to "infidels."

The infidel is no longer stoned with superstitious missiles. I heard Col. Robert Ingersoll, the high-priest of infidelity, lecture last Sunday evening. The old-time infidels were mild-mannered religionists compared to this one, with his humorous ridicule of old Bible-stories and myths that need just this sort of presentation to explode in many minds the inborn and inbred notions of the past of the so-called revelations. To this man, crowds listen night after night. Talk about progress! Forty years ago, yes thirty, there would not have been a woman seen at an infidel's lecture. Well, now it is fashionable, and the first ladies in society go and laugh and enjoy the truths that once sent men to the stake for the saying.

Col. Ingersoll is a fearless man; but it is easier to be fearless now than when he was young. While happily exploding the mistakes, frauds, and follies of Scripture, he is always a forcible champion of woman, and in no point does his telling joke carry deeper conviction than when showing up how woman has been shamed and humiliated through Scriptural teaching. No finer sentiments, none more full of clear and healthy truth, have ever been uttered in pulpit or on platform than are those to which he gives expression in reference to woman and her advancement. "When women reason," he says, "and dimpled babes are cherished in the lap of philosophy, superstition will receive its death-blow."

All honor then to the infidels and to all other liberal teachers who have striven to give woman the use of her reason, who have striven to lift her from the lower realm of feeling; and may every woman who now finds herself gaining a foothold upon that ladder which shall lift her, round by round, up into the breezy atmosphere of healthy freedom and endeavor, not only do honor to her helpers by words, but go and teach likewise, until it becomes a possibility that "dimpled babes shall be nursed in the lap of philosophy," and a new generation of women shall begin the moral regeneration of the world.

AMELIA W. BATE.

MILWAUKEE, April 17, 1879.

LEGALIZING THE SOCIAL EVIL.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I should find it a difficult task to express the interest I feel, and the sympathy also, in the moral views you advocate in THE INDEX, and the admirable manner in which you present them. I look upon your paper as the vanguard of truth-seekers. I may not, and indeed do not, sympathize with the ground you take as to the prevailing teachings of Christ, but your blows aimed at Christianity as interpreted by the Church from the inception of Christianity down to our own times, I fully endorse. I do not find that you undervalue the great founders of any religion of any nation, and to me it seems in better keeping to aim assaults at ecclesiastical abuse rather than at the wonderful Judean youth, whose teachings are so in unison with our own high moral ideas, and, to use your own phrase (which is apt and to the point), with the Consensus of the Competent through all the ages. That you reverence Zoroaster, Confucius, Buddha, etc., is natural; that you are severe upon Christ, is evidence that you exact from him a higher perception of truth and a more lucid exposition of it. This in passing.

My object in writing you is to give a view, such as women perceive, in the ominous question of licensing prostitution. It is a painful subject to broach, but the time has gone by for us to shrink from the discussion of any question involving the best interests of humanity. It seems strange that a class of scientific men should be found to give their sanction to a measure so repugnant to the very essence of womanhood, at a time when the whole country is alive to the evils of intemperance growing out of this same system of license, which involves a liberty far less destructive to public morals than that to which I refer, and the raising of a revenue from a less revolting source. It is first and foremost an outrage against women, which I will consider briefly under several heads.

1. The consent of human reason. The testimony of the wisest and best of mankind, both men and women, has been in favor of a pure, chaste life. The incalculations of religious as well as moral ideas have branded sexual license as not merely an indecorum, but as criminal; therefore, no legislation can annul the higher law of purity.

2. Law is the conscience of the masses. What the law sanctions the ignorant and unthinking conceive to be right. Hence, if prostitution be legalized the sense of its odium disappears.

3. Law imparts dignity to what it confirms. If an assemblage of grave and honorable legislators, in their combined wisdom, conceive that the interests of the country and the well-being of society demand that a certain number of women be set aside to promote these interests and this well-being, there should no stigma adhere to the class. They become saviors or martyrs. They must at least be regarded as professionals, in the same way as doctors, lawyers, and ministers are so considered, as conservators of public good.

4. A legal sanction to what is in itself immoral, wicked, and destructive to all that is intuitively pure in the human mind will tend to unsettle and corrupt the moral sense of the people.

5. It implies that man is not morally responsible; that he is by nature brutal; that licentiousness is so much the law of his life that he cannot restrain his passions within the bounds of reason and common decency.

6. It will corrupt our boys and young men by releasing them from moral restraints; the religious and ethical training of discerning mothers will be neutralized by the fact that law, the wisdom of the Fathers of the Republic, has decided that a pure life is neither desirable nor possible to a man.

7. It will outrage common decency by releasing debauchery from its ordinary checks, such as secrecy and the fear of disease; consequently, it will become open and unrebuked.

8. It is an insult to womanhood. It ignores her moral responsibility. It implies that she is by nature a weak, degraded being, created solely as an appendage to man,—to minister to his uncurbed and debasing passions. It stains the sanctities of the marriage relation. It blurs the consecrations of wifehood. It degrades the office of maternity. It makes all the relations of sex akin to the most revolting vice.

9. It sets apart a class of outcasts, moral Pariahs; hopeless, degraded social lepers, whom all the multitudinous seas cannot wash clean, nor all the gums of Arabia restore to womanly sweetness.

10. It creates an acknowledged class of hopelessly irreclaimable women; a caste degraded publicly; tolerated as such in the interests of governmental revenue; a class made up of depraved outcasts, branded, shunned, and abhorred, while men, who made them such, not only escape the penalty of disease and loss of character, but may sit in our halls of legislation and courts of law and pronounce judgment upon their victims.

11. It strikes at the root of all that is dignified in society; all that is hopeful in moral growth and sacred in religion. It treats with contempt the laws that govern our material being, and the beautiful saying of St. Paul that the body is the "temple for the Holy Ghost to dwell in."

12. It will create an army of dissolute officials, whose habits of mind no less than official duty will lead them to suspect any and every woman whom poverty, toll, or the stress of emergency may compel to be in the street at an unreasonable hour to be a clandestine prostitute, and she may be dragged into one of the examining hospitals, and her modesty and character outraged by having a clean bill of health forced upon her.

13. It will put wives and daughters of stainless virtue at the mercy of sworn detectives, malicious informers, and unscrupulous libertines, who may with impunity put them under the ban of the law by any species of perjury and false testimony.

14. It violates the principle of self-ownership, respected in our courts of law as a protection to even the most fallen of the sex.

15. It violates the very principle of our Constitution, which declares "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures; nor shall any criminal be compelled to witness against himself," etc.

16. No chaste woman can encounter one of these unholy licensed prostitutes without the blush of shame covering her face, and without a glow of indignation at the unmanliness of men, who by their legislation have thus branded and publicly degraded them.

17. It will authorize locations in which all the appliances of art and luxury will combine to seduce our youth and lead them astray; where vice will be shameless, and virtue be scouted as a weakness.

18. Finally it is not in keeping with the growing intelligence of the age, the developments of science, and the better understood laws of life. It outrages the womanly sense of wives and mothers, and strikes at the foundations of the household by rendering licentiousness easy and respectable.

Such manifest evils arising from a measure that outrages all womanly sense, and ought to cover its supporters with shame, must be met with unqualified reprehension. Better, according to the old Jewish method, stone the woman who offends than by this monstrous acceptance of her install her profession as a public necessity, and still farther brand and degrade her, casting upon her the entire odium, while her partner in guilt escapes unblamed.

ELIZABETH OAKES SMITH.

LIFE TASKS.

Arnold, a lad residing in a small German town, had early given indications of remarkable musical talent, and his father one day making a journey to a neighboring city took the boy with him, and having heard of a distinguished musician who was organist at the cathedral, and who also taught a few scholars, he took occasion to call upon him and ask his advice as to whether the boy's abilities would justify him in giving him a thorough musical education. After examination, the decision was favorable, and the master agreed to take charge of the pupil, but only on one condition. This was, that he would bind himself by a solemn promise never to attempt to play anything that was not set before him as his appointed task. The condition seemed so easy that Arnold readily gave the promise and he soon entered upon his duties. His talent had already been somewhat cultivated, and he was inclined to be vexed when he found that the first lessons put before him were of the very simplest kind, and so trivial that it seemed as if a child might master them in a single day.

As time went on, and the daily tasks still consisted only of the old familiar exercises, he often found it hard to be patient or obedient; and when a year had gone by and he was still forbidden to play anything but the same wearisome repetitions, it was not easy to resist the temptation to break the promise he had so freely given, and by a bold display of his abilities to prove to his teacher the talent he felt sure he did not give him the credit for. In his little world he met companions who, with even less practice than himself, would play before admiring audiences, and bright eyes and rosy lips spoke that sweet applause so grateful to the heart, especially of youth; while he must perforce acknowledge that he was not yet sufficiently advanced in his studies to be permitted to exhibit his accomplishments; and he could read in those same bright eyes the word the lips forbore to utter, "Dunce!" Truly it was hard; but still through many heart-burnings, many strong temptations and ambitious longings, he kept bravely to his obligation.

Thus three years wore away, and his progress was so gradual that it was hardly apparent. What he knew he knew thoroughly, and he grew more and more to have confidence in his teacher, and more modest ideas of his own acquirements, though the inward consciousness of power all unused never forsook him. It was not often that the master seemed to notice the boy's restlessness. One day, however, as they stood together before the organ, he looked up and said quietly, "Did you ever reflect that this great instrument, with all its wonderful capacities, is much like a body without a soul? All its powers are as nothing, if there be no adequate force behind or within it to give them expression. Never allow yourself to believe that the time is lost which is used in the gathering of that force, but employ the time faithfully, and remember that from the wise concentration and repression of power come many of the strongest and sweetest, the most sublime as well as the most beneficent things of life."

There now began to be preparations made for a great musical festival to be held in the cathedral, and there was much excitement among the students when it became known that some of them were to be called upon to assist upon the occasion. It was hardly in the nature of a boy like Arnold to hear without a pang of disappointment and envy the glowing hopes and anticipations of his fellow-pupils, as he thought what might have been his fortune if opportunity had been allowed him in time. It was too late now; he must wait; surely the time would yet come.

The day arrived, and the vast cathedral was thronged with the rank, wealth, talent, and beauty of the city. There were many excellent selections to be performed, but one which was to be the masterpiece and crown of the whole was to be given on the organ, it was supposed by the master himself. Indeed, whose hand but his had the skill or the daring to attempt such a task? But as Arnold stood looking on when the time came, he felt a touch upon his shoulder, and the voice of his master bade him take the place at the instrument. The boy looked up in incredulous amazement. What! his unskilful hand to play this grand composition? His poor untutored powers to be put to this divine work? He drew back bewildered, but the strong hand forced him to the seat, and as he hurriedly glanced at the page before him he took courage as he saw that the piece began with one of the simple exercises which had become so familiar to him. Tremblingly he touched the notes, but as he went on, his touch grew firmer and bolder, and more and more he put his heart into his work as he found that of all that most difficult piece there was not a line which he had not practiced daily, and the sole difference was one of arrangement. His heart swelled within him as the truth flashed on his mind that his teacher had after all appreciated him at his true worth, and had guided and taught him as he had indeed taught no other; that of all the homely drudgery of the past, not one moment had been lost, and all his wearisome tasks were suddenly transformed into joy and beauty. Soon he grew inspired with the greatness of his theme. With ever fresh delight, as he swept the keys with ever bolder hand, while new powers seemed born within him, he forgot himself, and but one thought possessed him,—to interpret as divinely as he might this grand, sweet message to the human soul. As the last magnificent burst of harmony died away, peal after peal of applause broke from the assembly, and the boy arose to meet what was still more grateful to him, the approving eye of the master. No longer a dunce, but a genius—a hero! Was not this a triumph to toil for, to wait for? The long trial was over, and it was with the keenest pleasure that he reflected that no consciousness of a broken promise rose up to shame his secret soul. In the years of success that came to him, he never had reason to regret that wearisome time when all unconsciously he acquired not only the skill of the artist, but all those higher experiences of obedience, patience, labor, and sacrifice without which there is no true success, no true happiness.

Since what we call the ills of life are inevitable, and "man is born to trouble as the sparks fly upward," it is surely wisest and best to win from them as far as we may every possible fruit of blessing. If we could look upon every mean task, every petty duty, every trial and temptation, every trouble and sorrow only as the simple but necessary exercises set us by the hand of the Divine Master, to be endured and learned, and by persistent effort to be overcome; if we could assuredly believe that mighty deeds and heroic lives only result from humble, patient toil, and faithful obedience to duty, and that contempt, neglect, or avoidance of the trivial burdens of life meant failure and shame when the great and decisive moment of our destiny confronted us,—with what different eyes we should view our common daily and hourly drudgeries, and how patiently should we work and wait for that occasion which may sooner or later, here or hereafter, in God's good time, come to us all!

PROVIDENCE, R.I.

C. APLIN.

THE WISEST man we ever knew was a Jew who remarked: "I tell you vat it ish, young man,—I buys my egberience vresh ef'ry day."—Baltimore Every Saturday.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " " "
 " 52 " " 5 " " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.50 for one year, including postage, or 90 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Oelia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keahub Under Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Religion of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by O. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion": Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Leaker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. R. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna O. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKET (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRECTION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	3.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENÉ). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portraits.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.25
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in Reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANÇOIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 3 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. B.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G. A.) Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures. 1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.00
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Chapters on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Migrations of the Unseen.....	2.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. On the Skelligs.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.25
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.50
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Joseph F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Acromyology. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	6.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analyses and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versabilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	5.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	2.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	4.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	5.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MEYER'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—Both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLXV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hogged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc., with 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	21.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	3.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.35
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays; Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. A Selection of his best Papers.....	1.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 3 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	7.50
The Glass-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	.00
The Newcomes.....	.00
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	.00
The Virginians.....	.00
Remond, and Lovell the Widower.....	.00
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	.00
THAXTER'S (MRS. OELIA) Among the Isles of Shoshala.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Slugs and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
Gracie: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 1 vol.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

1878,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

M. J. SAVAGE'S NEW NOVEL,

Bluffton,

Describing in a very interesting way the processes of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical. 12mo. Price $1.50.

Also, by the same author,

The Religion of Evolution:

"An exposition of religion in the light of the most advanced science. A brave and reverent thinker."—London Inquirer. Price $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

UNITY.

A FORTNIGHTLY ORGAN OF

Freedom, Fellowship, and Character in Religion.

Editor.—H. M. SIMMONS. Publishing Committee.—ROBERT COLLYER, J. L. JONES, C. W. WENDT, J. C. LEARNED, W. C. GARNETT.

Vol. III., beginning March 1, 1879, will contain Robert Collyer's "Table Talk"; two series of articles on "The Liberal Preachers of America out of the Pulpit" (our Poets and Essayists), and "The Growth of Doctrine, or the Old-New Creed"; Unity Sunday-school Lessons, etc.

Price $1.50 a year. Clubs of 10 at $1.25.

Room 57, 75 MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher, 24 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

NORTHERN LITERATURE AND ART ROOMS

will immediately be opened in Boston by Miss Marie A. Brown, for the purpose of giving due prominence to the many beautiful productions of Sweden, Norway, Finland, and Denmark, comprising the literature, English translations and originals, illustrated works, views, photographs, portraits, and paintings and statuary of the most celebrated Northern artists. The "Rooms" will be elegant in all their appointments, an attractive resort for all art-loving people and purchasers.

That it may become an international affair, Miss Brown invites all Americans and Scandinavians who are interested in the enterprise, and wish it success, to aid her efforts by subscribing the requisite fund. One thousand persons are desired who will each subscribe $10.00, for which Nadeshda, a poem by Runeberg, and a full set of The Serpents' Stories, six historical novels by Topellius, as translated and published by her, will be sent them in return, as they are issued.

MARIE A. BROWN, P.O. Box 900, BOSTON, MASS.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on live issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin, Lionel A. Tallemache, Author of Supernatural Religion, M. B. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine, G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn, AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROBEY-FORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?

11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Maine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.

23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidence for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address B. F. UNDERWOOD, TROENDEK, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Sent to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF OUTRUM PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. E. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. E. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Cort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. L. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kneesen, Professor at Leiden. A popular exposition of the "Bible School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament (in preparation). Price $2.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "His purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 233 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 255 pages. Price $1.25.

THE GHOSTS: Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. B. G. Ingersoll (his latest lectures). 223 pages. Price $1.25. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 233 pages. Price $1.25.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Bathbone Greg, author of the Enigma of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-famous work. The complete index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half calf, $6.00. Will be ready March 30.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $12.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

"No book published in the world at any time or in any age has had the influence and effect on the thinking part of the community as this work. It has done more to open the eyes of the ignorant and credulous, and sweep away the cobwebs of dogma and superstition than any other book. It no doubt has a strong rival in Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom, but the books are of altogether a different class. Both are far ahead of anything else of the kind published. They are a library in themselves. A study of these two books will give the opponent of dogmatic Christianity a great advantage in discussion. Every point is carefully and minutely investigated, and stripped of any rotten accretions. The most devout and sincere Christian can find nothing but which is mainly and respectably argued and free from offensiveness, which is not often the case in books of this nature."—London Times.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried.
E. C. WALKER.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGES FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 30, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIFE OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—San Francisco Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $5.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE ORACLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1879.

WHOLE NO. 490.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SHOULDER REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.
4. N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

- SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.
- SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.
- SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.
- SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSERS.

"THAT WHICH is not good for the swarm is not good for the bee," said Marcus Aurelius; and he said much in little.

THE FIRST LIBERAL LEAGUE of Boston will hold its last monthly meeting for the present season next Sunday, May 18, at 3 P.M., at the Woman's Club Rooms, 4 Park Street. Col. T. W. Higginson will read a paper on "The Meeting of Extremes." All who are in sympathy with the objects of this League are invited to attend.

IT GIVES us real satisfaction to receive such a message as this from an old subscriber in New Jersey: "I take THE INDEX, not because I always agree with it or you, but because it has always been really and truly free, open to the discussion of all questions, even the 'free-love' question. If I thought you would be likely to retreat from this position, I should discontinue at once! Seeing, however, how strong your own convictions are on the aforesaid question, I honor more than ever the freedom of THE INDEX."

HENRY WARD BEECHER, in a lecture on the right of Chinamen to stay in this country, and be protected by its laws, said: "We are told that the Chinaman is an idolator, and that a man who can withstand the influences of Christianity, as he has done, must not be allowed to associate with Christians. We had stoned him, and clubbed him, and persecuted him, and tried religion upon him in almost every shape; and still he would not embrace it! Nevertheless, we were sending hundreds of thousands of dollars to support missionaries in China."

THE Unity says: "The editor of the Glencoe Register, Minn., is named Liberty Hall, and sounds like one. In a long editorial, he criticises a minister who has been preaching there that 'infidelity and immorality are inseparable,' and says, on the other hand, 'Superstition and immorality are the two vagrant tramps that have from the beginning been seen hand in hand stalking down through the ages.' He says ninety-five per cent. of the convicts in the State Prison at Stillwater are 'firm believers in the doctrines taught by the Church.' The weapon against 'infidelity' put into the hands of all such ministers by the National Liberal League, when it committed itself to the demand for immoral legislation at Syracuse, has done the liberal cause more harm than can be undone by any smart epigram or smart statistics.

RENAN, in his late inaugural address, paid this fine tribute to the ennobling ethical influence of science upon the minds of its sincere devotees: "And as to nobleness of character, how can one accuse science of striking at it when he sees the minds that science forms, the unselfishness, the absolute devotion to life work that she inspires and sustains? With the saints, the heroes, the great men of all ages we may fearlessly compare our men of scientific minds, given solely to the research of truth, indifferent to fortune, often proud of their poverty, smiling at the honors they are offered, as careless of flattery as of obloquy, sure of the worth of that they are doing, and happy because they possess truth. Great, I grant it, are the joys which a firm belief in things divine confers, but these the inward happiness of the wise equals, for he feels that he toils at an eternal work and belongs to the company of those of whom it is said, 'Their works do follow them.'"

THIS IS the estimate of Matthew Arnold formed by a writer in that very pleasant fortnightly, the Literary World: "Mr. Arnold belongs to a class of brilliant writers, common in France but very rare in England, and which, all things considered, it is to the credit of our racial character that it does not favor. Broadly stated, the distinguishing feature of these writers is that while there is more sound than sense in their remarks, their style, their way of putting things, is so very admirable, their intentions are so good, and their tone of thought is so flattering to the cultivated reader, that he allows his eyes to be blinded to the real truth of a question, and his good-sense so to be lulled to sleep that he is ready, for the time, to accept arguments quite without this quality. For Mr. Arnold is in his way a sentimentalist, and, excellent as his ideas generally are, one never can trust the judgment of a man whose views are founded less on reasoning than on a curious mixture of instinctive feeling and of prejudice. Considered as a writer upon serious subjects, the bottom difficulty with him is not that he wilfully shuts his eyes to the truth, or that he has an illogical mind, but that a certain defect of vision makes it impossible for him, to use his own favorite expression, 'to see things as they really are.' Mr. Arnold has another peculiarity which is rather French than English, namely, this: that he never doubts the worth of one of his own opinions because nobody else believes in them. The wind of argument may howl about him, and the hail of derision rattle; he heeds neither, but blandly goes his way."

THE Springfield Republican published these comments on the Pocomet murder in its Boston letter of May 8: "The Pocomet child-murder touches several of the deep chords in public opinion, and is as exciting, except for the lack of mystery in the case, as the Pomeroy affair was a few years since. It is a monstrosity, and yet it reveals a vein of the New England character that it is well for us to notice a little before we let it pass into the quick forgetfulness that awaits everything in this age, when the daily newspaper creates and terminates publicity by its swift-succeeding waves of news and gossip. The religious fanaticism which led the Freemans to murder their own child is a distinct trait of our people,—less noticeable now, and perhaps less active, than it was when our ancestors whipped Quakers and hung witches, but existing always in one guise or another among the descendants of the Puritans. In the old times it was an intolerant spirit of persecution among a powerful class of the people; in the wretched clan of fanatics at Sandwich, without power except over their own families, it shows itself in the cruel bigotry which delights in sacrifice, even to the extent of making the father kill the child with his own hand. At such a deed Nature has always shuddered, but the prevailing religion has more than once upheld it; upon the abominable theory that the Deity is an angry and blood-thirsty being, to whom the most exquisite cruelty of human sacrifice is a sweet offering. The story of Abraham falls just short of this; but the story of Iphigenia, slaughtered on the beach at Aulis, by the order of the priest and the consent of her father, stood out, among the ancients as the acme of religious crime, against which philosophers like Lucretius made the most indignant protest.

"So much to guilt Religion could persuade," said he in his stately Latin, after describing the scene of the maiden's death. And now we have close by our doors, amid the sand and pine woods of Cape Cod, a Massachusetts Iphigenia sacrificed in circumstances to make the blood run cold, and with the poor girl's mother even consenting to her death! It is a reduction to bloodiest absurdity of some propositions that are only too common in the traditional theology,—and many that abhor the crime may see the dark shadow of their own dogmas in its ominous light. It is hard to predict what the fate of the wretched parents will be, but the case itself will poison our annals for awhile, as the Pomeroy murders did, and probably the father and mother will find their way into our State Prisons, at Concord and Sherborn, if Warden Chamberlain does not succeed in burning up his whole concern in the next six months."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. B. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. HORACE SEEVER.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 W. J. R. HARGRAVE, Editor "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS.....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST.....Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.....Tenafly, N. J.
 MISS CALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....C. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN A. HENNESEY, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALE, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GORLT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FAIRBANKS, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....B. B. CLARK, Wilsonville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTELL, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMEMMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL GOLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....F. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. L. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....B. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. FORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARRIS P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
 SYRACUSE, N.Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
 ALBANY, N.Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 PASSAIC CITY, N.J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.
 ROCHESTER, N.Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y. MOSES HAYS, Rochester, N. Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-8, R. URBINO, West Newton, Ind., N. Y.
 Z. T. WATKINS, Syracuse, N. Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N. Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, SYRACUSE, N. Y. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, Mass.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mt. N. LADY, Albany, N. Y.
 HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N. J.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. ROSE WHITPLE, Boston, Mass.
 T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N. Y. D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
 B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, CHARLES ELLIS, Boston, Mass.
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, AL- case, N. Y.
 BANY, N. Y. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N. Y.
 EBEN TURE, Chelsea, Mass. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N. Y.
 JOHN NILL, Waterville, N. Y. N. Y.
 E. A. SAWTELL, Boston, Mass. W. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N. Y.
 THOMAS DUGAN, Albany, N. Y. JOHN FRET, Albany, N. Y.
 JAMES B. FISK, Rochester, N. Y. C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, S. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

About the Foundation of Morals.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

That there is in the nature of things a "moral law," irreversible, irrepensible, unalterable, I have no disposition to deny, any more than to deny that there are mathematical truths. How to discover the "moral law" is the question. Has it been discovered and demonstrated? Yes, says every church. Its foundation is the "will of God," and that has been revealed,—in the Bible, says the Protestant; in the Holy Catholic Church, says the Roman Catholic. This may do for those who can believe it; yet if it be true of either form of revelation, seeing that both sects of belief have been so wide-spread, the wonder is that the Christian world should not be more moral. The wonder is, that the faiths should decay. You and I know that such faith is fast becoming impossible. But the sincerest of the believers will hardly dare deny that good morals are possible without such faith. If they are possible, then there must be some other foundation. If an infinite will, outside of time and space, has not been revealed to the finite human mind, it seems quite certain that such a manifest impossibility will never take place. Hence, whether we postulate the "moral law" as the "will" of the unknowable God, or as a mathematical necessity from the nature of things, it can only reveal itself to the individual according to his individual capacity, just as arithmetic, geometry, chemistry do. Let us suppose, for the sake of argument, that an individual by natural capacity and the study of men and things has been able to fully understand and codify the perfect "moral law," how is he going to reveal it, as fully as he himself holds it, to another who lacks his capacity for perceiving and believing? Can a cup hold beyond its capacity?

I do not deny the existence of God any more than of life, nor the existence of a "moral law," in the abstract, any more than I deny the existence of a triangle in the abstract. But,—

Search thou at home, or search abroad,
 "Canst thou by searching find out God?"
 Canst thou, a molecule, grasp the globe?
 Wiser art thou than dear old Job?

And regarding the term "God" as standing for the incomprehensible essence of life, of which I am a conscious atom, and the term "will of God" as the order or nature of things, of which I am capable of seeing only an infinitesimal part, and regarding and judging, to the best of my ability, of what little I do see, I am disposed to say, if you will excuse the rhymes,—

The "fool," who says there's no God, is a curse,
 The bigot, who makes Him a fool, is still worse
 (And probably carries his God in his purse).
 'Tis wisdom to know how little we know,
 And how to discover a friend in a foe.
 Now let us rejoice in whatever may come,
 And overthrow evil, beginning at home.

Profoundly believing in what the French call the "solidarity of the human race," as well as in the doctrine of growth, both individual and social, I disclaim and deprecate judging any human being by a moral law above his capacity. If I am to resolve myself into an inexorable moral Rhadamanthus, this world becomes intolerable. Some seventeen or eighteen years ago when our country seemed about to sacrifice millions of lives to save the Union without abolishing slavery, I wrote a little "family sermon," with no thought of putting it in print, or doing more than to express at home a feeling which grew out of the terrible crisis. On looking it over after having entirely forgotten it, I see that it expresses some things which I wish to say in the present crisis, when old superstitions seem to be plotting as desperately to maintain the slavery of soul and conscience, as avarice then did to maintain the slavery of muscle, and so I offer it, if it meets your approbation, to the readers of THE INDEX.

Yours truly,
 BOSTON, May 6, 1879.

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

How bad ought we to feel when People do Wrong?

We read in a very old book of a prophet who felt so bad at what he thought the wickedness of everybody around him that he went into the wilderness, sat down under a juniper tree and wished he might die. The old book says that the Lord of Hosts, for whose cause he had been very jealous, did not grant his prayer for death, but, after a very sublime conversation upon the subject, sent him back about his business. Many people worship the old book, and, certainly so far as the good sense of this story is concerned, they have some reason.

The old prophet aforesaid, according to the story, had good cause enough to go into the wilderness, whatever he may have had for his despondent feelings under the juniper tree, for the king had killed his comrades, without exception, as he supposed, and threatened to kill him. But it was not that he grieved about so much, but that the king had thrown down the altars and the people had forsaken the covenant, by which he meant the service of these altars. That was the body of the crime and the killing of the prophets only the color of it, evidently, in his eyes. Nowadays we sympathize with his feelings about the slaughter of his fellow-prophets, but can't manage to see how he need have felt so very bad about what had happened to the cause of the Lord of Hosts by the overthrow of the altars.

Though all things are but one thing, and there is nothing we can think of which is not of a piece with all the rest, yet there are systems or sides of things throughout the universe that shadow forth, reflect back, or resemble each other. Of course, I am speaking of the universe of life and thought; for as to matter or the material universe, it is nothing but the dead arena—carpet, saw-dust,—on which the soul-living universe proceeds. Of its own self it is really nothing, and has no significance. Without life, thought, soul, matter is but a limitless desert, lying nowhere. The might-be desert, however, explore where we will, is absolutely full of life, that is, of God and his creations, independent and dependent life. I say things reflect and illustrate each other: north and south, east and west, height and depth, hot and cold, pleasure and pain, right and wrong, growth and decay, strength and weakness, are sets or pairs of ideas that have something in common. They are related. The relation is useful and let us use it. The feeling which every good man has when he sees anything done which he believes to be wrong belongs to the family of pain. It is related to the bodily aches, and of course has similar uses. Bodily pain is a conservative principle, necessary to resist destruction, to say nothing of its being the necessary reverse of physical pleasure,—as inseparable from it as uphill is from down. In the moral world, pain at seeing wrong and joy at seeing right is the great conservative principle. But, as in the physical world, the pain may be in excess, or it may exist without doing any good. And if the doctors do any good in their multiplied efforts to invent and apply pain-killers, it may not be altogether wrong to strive to limit or moderate the pain, sorrow, and indignation of good men at the wickedness around them. Why should such pain be endured after a man has done the best in his power to set the world right, any more than we should have the tooth-ache after the peccant stump has been extracted?

True enough, says a voice, there can't be any use in useless pain; but how can we help it? How can a good man be comfortable in a totally wicked world, any more than a fish on dry land or a cat in a mill-pond? Well, perhaps he can't. Or, if you please, certainly, he can't. I will confess that the old prophet might as well have died, as he proposed, if the Lord of Hosts had not succeeded in showing that the world from which he had fled was not quite so bad as he thought it, and thus counterbalanced his pain by the pleasure of sympathizing with the seven thousand heroic souls who had not bowed the knee to Baal. The Puritans were driven out of merry England quite as much by its dancing as by the persecution which endeavored to reduce them to ecclesiastical conformity. To them it was a sin to be too merry; and it was therefore intolerably painful for them to live in a country where the majority of the people were prone to be frolicsome, and the government was wicked enough to allow them to be so. This peopled New England with an earnest God-fearing race, who took solid pleasure in the most dismal sermons that could possibly be preached. The one good and true idea which, among heaps of false ones, they brought with them was, that God's will should be done without regard to consequences, or at any cost; not what a man might believe to be God's will, but his absolute revealed will, for they had not the slightest notion of religious liberty or the right of conscience. They denied the authority of the Pope or any Bishop, but set up instead the authority of an old book, and gave the individual very small latitude of private interpretation, none at all of rejection. That idea of the supremacy of the divine or higher law took root and grew in New England from the first; and the idea of religious liberty or rights of conscience has sprouted up and grown well recently. But the veritable grain of either kind does not yet probably bear a large proportion to the weeds.

Now there is undoubtedly, in the moral world as in the physical world, an absolute perfect law, plan, and will of God, towards which all degrees of goodness tend; and every moral being sees more or less of this law, and every one also may suppose that he sees more than he does, and he may suppose that to be law which is not. Now whatever a man really believes to be the law of God, or the morally right thing, that cannot be violated by himself or anybody else within his knowledge without giving him more or less pain. The power of mind by which the moral right is apprehended is called conscience, and in reality it cannot be supposed to be perfect or infallible in its judgments any more than the whole mind in all its action can be thought perfect or infallible; but one thing is certain: that by the individual it must be regarded as infallible, so far as it judges, for it is really the only judge he has,—the soul's highest court of appeal. The man who gets all the light he can, consults his conscience and then accepting its verdict as the will of God, as he honestly must, does it without regard to consequences, is a good man, the best man that can be in his circumstances, even though he accepts much second-hand morality that is not accordant with the real law of God. On the contrary, the man who, yielding to passions and appetites, disregards or drowns the voice of conscience, and don't care whether God's will is done or not, is a bad man, even though circumstances prevent him from doing any harm; a bad man, though circumstances should make him a useful machine. The good man, having done the best he knows how, ought to be happy under the juniper tree of Elisha, or the gallows tree of John Brown.

He should remember, I think, that bad as the world is, as far as it may be from what he believes or, if you please, knows to be the will of God, it is probably not so far from what it believes to be so, though no doubt it is far enough even from that. Again, as flowers sometimes grow in the most unlovely places, so there are some things done as they ought to be by the worst people. It is some comfort if a thief carrying off his plunder stops to give a starving child the price of a loaf of bread, or the tyrant who has sold the husband from the wife is kind to his own wife and children. Dickens has done some hurt by denying entirely the goodness of a class of people who perhaps think they enjoy a monopoly of that article; but he has certainly done vast good by showing the goodness which often grows among people whom everybody regards as depraved, and who don't make any pretence of saintship themselves. Now notwithstanding Dickens, I still believe in the saints; not in the Pecksniffs as such, nor in humbug as a principle, but in human nature in spite of humbug. First, I think a great deal which is taught as Christianity or religion is certainly different from God's verity, and has no claim to be received as a revelation of that part of the spiritual world which lies beyond the scope of our present faculties, not being a true statement even of what is within the scope of those faculties. Yet I have no doubt that multitudes conscientiously accept it as true, and while this obedience to conscience makes them good, the humbug which they swallow strongly tends to make them unlovely. Moreover, I believe it possible for men who are conscious that this theology is a humbug, to be nevertheless conscientiously convinced that it is useful to those who conscientiously believe it, and therefore they either refuse to avow their own want of faith, or they even actively propagate the humbug. And as charity is always more comfortable than the reverse, I cling to this belief as long as I can, both in regard to religion and politics. I see both in Church and State many men whose strength of mind cannot be denied, nor their generosity of temper, who have had all the opportunity in the world to see through certain traditional shams, and who still use them with great gravity and every appearance of sincerity. I can't well help believing that they do so conscientiously and because they expect good results, better than they could get otherwise. In other words, they convince themselves that it is the will of God that they should delude people or keep them deluded. Perhaps they think the world a little crazy, and not in a condition to take truth unmixed with falsehood. I have an entirely different opinion; still I don't and can't think these conscientious dealers in humbug as bad or as hateful as if they didn't mean well. This is some comfort to me. But even if I did not believe them conscientious, I should think I had a right to rejoice in any truth they uttered, or any good they did without meaning it. In the universe good is always coming out of evil as well as coming up in spite of it. Otherwise I guess it would not be.

In a wicked and perverse and stupid world, or what verily seems to us to be such, after having done the best we know how to make everything go right, it does not seem to me there can be much use of feeling bad if it don't. There will always be some little things that can be made to go nearly as they should. If we can't purify the Church we can keep our doorstep clean. If we can't free the slaves or shut up the rum-shops, we can be merry on Cochituate water and smilingly show a stranger the road to Cambridge Street or to Canada. I think it is fairly due to God, who is just as much wiser than we, as he is larger and older, after having done the best we can, to accept the result as the best that could be, and be as happy about it as possible.

THE DECLINE OF INDIVIDUALISM.

The friends and auditors (we dare not say parishioners) of Mr. Frothingham in New York recently showed of what earnest and cordial cooperation they were capable in the complimentary reception which they tendered to that gentleman on the eve of his departure for Europe. The occasion was graced by the presence of George William Curtis, Thomas W. Higginson, John W. Chadwick, Oliver Johnson, and many other personal friends and sympathizers. Mr. Curtis made one of his captivating speeches. Mr. Frothingham was equally happy in the characteristic modesty with which he shielded himself from compliment and converted the homage of his friends and admirers into a tribute to the cause he represented. While claiming little credit for himself in the results which he recognized, he felt that something had been gained in the twenty years of his ministry of a value so inestimable as never to be spoken of without reverence. There had been a gain in liberty, in the privilege of free speech and of free action; a gain in intellectual quietness, of better calm, of spiritual equilibrium.

If the gain in intellectual quietness be at all doubted, no one can fail to admit that the gain in the liberty of free speech is positive and real. Mr. Frothingham undoubtedly deserves more credit in effecting this result than he is willing to take. And perhaps few have more thoroughly tested the reality of this present privilege than he. This increased freedom of speech and action has been a gain for individualism. It has made individualism possible. But it has also displayed its limitations, its arrogance and insufficiency. And it is a hopeful sign that these defects have come to be recognized and deprecated by some of those who have commonly been regarded as its prominent exponents.

If Mr. Frothingham's address at this leave-taking should convey to any the idea that he was perfectly satisfied with the condition of things, and had attained all that he thought attainable or desirable, this misconception will be easily corrected by reading the abstract in another column of his farewell address to his people, delivered two Sundays ago and subsequent to the reception of which we speak. His discourse is characterized by the New York Times as "an address that forms (or will hereafter form) one of the most notable utterances of the religious literature of this country." It adds also: "It is essentially a frank and open confession of the failure of the movement itself, and of its lack of organizing power." This remark of the Times is based on Mr. Frothingham's admission that "the era of individualism is drawing to its close," and that "we are on the verge of an era when organization will be invoked to work out our problems; that the era of destruction has passed by, and that the era of reconstruction is dawning; that the pulling down has been done, and that the current of human progress is setting in the direction of building up, helping each other, producing new institutions."

We can imagine the glad sense of relief with which these words will be hailed in many quarters. For once, indeed, our New York friend furnishes his opponents with an opportunity of agreeing with him which we hope they will generously recognize. Justly or unjustly, Mr. Frothingham has been regarded as an axe-man, a breach-maker. To all persons of liberal constructive sympathies it can only be pleasant to see him substitute the trowel for the axe, and to install him as a free and accepted mason in the chapter of the world's builders. To us, his recent admissions seem not to be a confession of failure but a change of base, a ripening of conviction. Mr. Frothingham has not hitherto assumed the rôle of a prophet or organizer; he has been seemingly content with that of a critic. He has interpreted and exposed, and his interpretations and exposures have been uniformly negative and in the interest of individualism. As organization has never been his accepted object, it seems a pointless reproach to accuse him of falling in that which he never attempted. Few of his Orthodox opponents would charge him with inefficiency as a disorganizer. As a moral pathologist he has made free use of the microscope and the dissecting-knife. He has sought the causes of disease, but has argued for a distinctness of function and a dismemberment of parts which has seemed somewhat incompatible with the normal anatomy of society and religion. We wish him all curative success in his new and therapeutic interest.

But we introduced Mr. Frothingham's farewell words with less reference to his personal position, concerning which we court no controversy, than as an indication of a state of the atmosphere of liberalism which is confined to no local area. Mr. Frothingham's critical perception was never more barometrically sensitive than in its recognition of the fact that "the era of individualism is drawing to a close." It is felt in the air. The editor of THE INDEX was prompt to see it, and has lately given this conviction very emphatic expression. "Individualism," says Mr. Abbot, "is a blind guide to-day." "Liberalism is to-day in a pitiable condition because it is still so largely in the individualistic stage." "To-day, whether in social science, ethics, or religion, thoughtful men are confronted with the fact that individualism is nothing but Protestantism gone to seed, and that it is utterly incompetent to settle a single one of the great questions which shake the modern world." "Absolute moral irresponsibility,—that is the inevitable and logical outcome of individualism with its one idea of private judgment."

These clear and ringing words of Mr. Abbot's are cordially indorsed by two of Theodore Parker's pulpit successors, Mr. Wasson and Mr. Blake. In spite of the dissent they have drawn forth, we must regard them as notable and hopeful signs of the times. Individualism was a protest against the bond age of the private judgment. The private judgment has been emancipated and cannot be re-enthralled. This gain of individualism will remain, but the law of solidarity by which the individual is related to the general judgment and the general welfare of the universal man is to receive a warmer and a more perfect recognition. It is a time to build and plant for humanity. The individual must learn that "no man liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself."

Individualism in its degenerate forms is a recognition of rights, but not of duties. It has no power of cohesion. In society and religion it disintegrates, but does not unify. Its limitations were recognized some eighteen hundred years ago; for he who said, "Why is my liberty judged by another man's conscience?"—a plea for the right of private judgment—also said, "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers," and, "Let no man seek his own pleasure, but every man another's good."

We hail with joy an era in which the positive and curative aspects of science, religion, and social order applied to the problems of life and mind shall kindle anew the enthusiasm of men and bring them together in the unity of the spirit and the bond of peace. Let it be the watchword of liberalism to-day, not merely to weaken the things which are passing away, but to "strengthen the things which remain." "For if that which was done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious." It would have been interesting to discover the basis of organization on which Mr. Frothingham expects to work. He was not prepared to state it. Both Protestantism and Catholicism seemed incompetent for his purpose. But we are assured that it would not be "a protest, but an affirmative and humanizing religion, taking hold of the highest enthusiasm and ideal of humanity and linking it to the eternal." If Mr. Frothingham builds on this glorious foundation, he will build his church on the same rock on which the Man of Nazareth stood, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.—Boston Christian Register, May 10.

The Christian Register for to-day prints the larger portion of the Rev. Mr. Frothingham's farewell address to his congregation, and makes it the text of a very interesting article on "The Decline of Individualism." Mr. Frothingham has come to the belief in a new dispensation, when individuals, however richly endowed or inspired, will cease to be prophets, and when organization will be invoked to work out our problems. He finds that the era of destruction has passed by, and the era of reconstruction is dawning; that the pulling down has been done; and that the current of human progress is setting in the direction of building up, helping each other, producing new institutions. To be sure, he does not recognize either in Romanism or Protestantism the moral forces by which the reorganization is to be effected; but the Register thinks it is significant of the progress of liberal thought that he is no longer to be regarded as an axe-man or breach-maker, but as one of the world's builders.—Advertiser, May 10.

A LETTER FROM REV. DR. ELIOT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHRISTIAN REGISTER:—

May I ask your extreme indulgence and that, possibly, of your readers, for some suggestions upon the apparent tendencies of religious Unitarian thought, during the last few years and at the present time?

Not very long ago, an effort was made to form a religious society in St. Louis on what was intended to be the broadest ground of Free Religion. At the first meeting it was announced that no prayers would be used nor hymns sung, but a short meditation and spiritual songs instead; and the name of God nowhere appeared in the articles of organization, so that atheists and unbelievers of all shades could be drawn in and hold membership on equal terms. Perhaps some good might have resulted from such an association, if successful, and no special opposition was made to it. But a second or third meeting was the last. A religious society without the recognition of a God would have been somewhat anomalous, to say the least.

Last Easter Sunday I was present at a Sunday-school celebration with a printed special order of service, responses, prayers, anthems, and "carols," very beautifully arranged, although by far too purely intellectual for childlike needs. From beginning to end neither the name of Jesus nor of Christ appeared, nor any allusion to the Resurrection, nor any word which would not be equally in keeping with religious worship in a Jewish or Buddhist temple. There was a place where "Reading from Scripture, Saints, and Sages" could come in, but it was not used, the services being sufficiently long, perhaps, without it. The "responses" were from Isaiah, Jeremiah, and one very beautiful but mystical and (for a child) very obscure selection from "the Rabbins." The place left for "sermon or other exercises" also afforded opportunity, which was briefly but emphatically used, for naming the name of Christ, in commemoration of whose rising from the dead the festival of Easter is supposed to have been appointed and is presumably continued. It may be hardly fair to say that the order of service was arranged with the deliberate purpose of leaving out the name of Jesus Christ and his gospel; but it is a noteworthy fact that in an Easter service for children this result was so successfully attained, whether with or without design.

I have also before me "Part First" of "Services and Songs for Sunday Schools," of which the same remark can be made. The name of Jesus does not appear in it anywhere, nor any allusion to him. There are, however, some two or three short quotations from the Gospels, the Epistles, the Psalms, and Ecclesiastics; as also from Buddha, Confucius, the Rabbits, Tegner, Perslan, Barbauld, and Barrow. The Lord's Prayer, as a chant, also appears. Throughout the whole service a strong devotional spirit prevails, with lofty meditation and good counsel, although frequently beyond the range of average youthful thought,—which perhaps was not easy to avoid. The peculiar feature that impressed me was, that a Christian Sunday-school might use the "Service," or others like it, for a series of years, without ever having heard of Christ or knowing who he was or is. If the purpose were to establish a Christian Church without Christ, this would be the right way to accomplish it. The desirableness of such a result, or the wisdom of making it possible, may, not uncharitably, be open to question; but I do not seek to discuss it now.

The religious phenomena referred to have rested on my mind with greater weight because of other indications of the same drift of thought during the ten or twenty years past among so-called Liberal Christians. Perhaps we should say forty or fifty years, but tendencies do not show themselves plainly until after long and comparatively unobserved action. Of late the outcropping has been sufficiently marked to satisfy, if not to astonish, the most "advanced" thinker. Still more may it reasonably excite those who yet retain some belief in "historical Christianity," as important to a sustained Christian belief, to ask with seriousness in what direction are we going, and at what point of faith or unfaith shall we probably come out.

The question is one which might be much more easily answered if there were a recognized organ of Unitarian churches; but properly speaking they have and can have none. It is our best distinction that we hold a strictly congregational independence, and no church gives to any other, nor to all others combined, the right to speak or act for it, on questions of doctrinal or religious interest. Still further, as individual believers, we hold and strenuously maintain our right of private judgment. We admit no "articles of faith or creed" as a test of fellowship, and the adoption of such would virtually destroy all reason for our continued denominational existence. To myself this is by far the strongest bond that holds me to the Unitarian name; for in opinion I agree quite as nearly with many of the liberal Orthodox and Broad Church Episcopalians as with the average Unitarian believer; much more nearly than with many of those who, of late, claim the most frequent hearing. But the liberty wherewith, as I believe, Christ hath set us free, is our most precious heritage, and I am cordially ready to concede to others all the freedom I claim for myself. Nor do we dispute the right of any man to call himself a Christian, who sees fit to assert it, on account of whatever doctrinal or speculative difference of opinion. This liberty of faith and of "prophesying," so unspeakably precious, we do not see recognized as distinctly in any other communion as in our own; and in my judgment, it is our peculiar mission, our denominational work, to maintain it as untrammelled as Jesus Christ and his Apostles gave it to us.

Nevertheless, in calling ourselves "Unitarian Christians" we have been understood, and in the organization of our "National Conference" we declare that we understand ourselves, as owing spiritual allegiance to the "Lord Jesus Christ," by pledging ourselves "to the service of God and the building up of the kingdom of his Son." Article Nine is emphatic in declaring that "reaffirming our allegiance to the Gospel of Jesus Christ and desiring to secure the largest unity of the spirit and the widest practical co-operation, we invite to our fellowship all who wish to be followers of Christ." That declaration was made some ten years ago, after animated discussion, by a very large majority. I do not see how any body of Christian believers could, with even a show of consistency, come to a conclusion less pronounced than this. Certainly I should feel myself strangely out of place in any denomination by which such spiritual allegiance and discipleship is deliberately disavowed. I do not feel that my freedom is abated by calling the Lord Jesus Christ my Master. I cannot comprehend any higher service of God than that which consists in building up the kingdom of his Son.

And just here comes in the cause for present thoughtfulness, almost anxiety; for, unless I read the signs of the times aright, the drift of theological speculation and denial and doubts is bringing us full near to the point when a reconsideration of the question, in an equally large convention, might find the majority of votes on the other side. Perhaps it is a needless apprehension; for I have lived, during these last six years, not only at a distance from our Unitarian centre, but also out of the professional ranks, and things may not seem to me exactly as they are. A more free and general intercourse with the affairs of the working-day world has also greatly intensified my conviction of the absolute necessity of Christ to his Church and to every work of enlarged Christian philanthropy. Outside of spiritual allegiance to him, I find no effectual approach to men, no sufficient argument for self-denial and self-sacrifice. In the foreground and at the centre of every great work for the cause of suffering humanity or for the advancement of true civilization, we must plant the cross of Jesus Christ. "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me." With that attraction there is no limit to human endeavor and attainment. Without it, the majority of men and women fall back into the commonplaces of worldly ambition and self-service, in which no great work can be thought of or done. If by reason of restored health, I could return to the pulpit again,—the highest vocation, as I believe, to which any man can be called,—I feel that I should preach Jesus Christ and him crucified more earnestly than I ever did before. It may well be, therefore, that with such feelings I look with greater solicitude than is wise to tendencies which seem to lead the other way; but there is, most certainly, room for serious thought.

A Western paper has this moment been received containing the articles of agreement adopted at the reorganization of a Unitarian church, in which no mention is made of God, or Christ, or the Bible, nor of any distinctively Christian doctrine, ordinance, or institution whatever. The society may be, and undoubtedly is, composed of Christian men and women, with families which they wish to educate in the fear of God and the love of Christ; but there is an evident careful avoidance of "historical Christianity," of expressed Christian allegiance, of an acknowledged divine revelation, as though all of these are either of no spiritual importance, or, perhaps, stumbling-blocks in the way of the highest religious growth.

Is it a determined tendency of religious thought? Is it the chosen direction in which Unitarian Christians are gradually making up their minds to move? Or is it a drift, an unobserved current, into which they are falling unaware? There is much in all such movements to command sympathy and respect, and there are undoubtedly many persons who can be reached in no other way. But is it properly the Unitarian Christian method of working, and are our churches preparing themselves for its deliberate adoption?

Bearing indirectly upon the point, and perhaps throwing some light upon it, we find in the Christian Register of last week (April 12) an elaborate leading editorial, which assumes the more importance because the Register has always been regarded as the exponent, to a certain extent, of the "conservative" part of our religious fraternity. After two columns of cautious critical argument upon the Resurrection, which is called, however, the "Reappearance" of Jesus, in its historical or rather traditional aspect, the following sentences occur, deprecating the censure of those who entirely reject the historical basis, and on behalf of those who still retain some part of their traditional faith: "Surely, those who exalt and refine their religious ideals by sympathetic study of sun-myths and other allegories of ancient worship have no reason to question the sincerity of those who make the same use of the grander New Testament narrative, even though its alleged facts should retreat into the mystic realm of fable. The truth, of which a fable has been the vehicle, is not lost when the child's faith in the fable breaks down; the moral effect survives, and it is the survival of the fittest. No Santa Claus; only the good God working through loving human hearts and hands. Let criticism make itself ever so free with the letter, the spirit escapes unhurt and indestructible. A cloud receives Jesus and all the distant past out of our sight; we know not what happened, and have no right either to affirm or deny. But this we know: that a great light has come into the world, and that for millions, believing or doubting the story of the Reappearance, there is no more death."

We do not enter now into the questions of Biblical criticism, to determine what the gospels really teach, and what is the true history of the Resurrection of Christ. The point which interests us in the present inquiry is, that both in the sentences quoted, and throughout the whole article, the historical basis is treated as of comparatively little importance one way or the other. The disciples may have been entirely wrong about it, and deceived from first to last. They believed it, after some sort, or the tradition says they did; but a mistaken belief answered all the purpose, as well as if it had been true. To us, of the present day, a myth of Reappearance is just as good in giving and sustaining the hope of immortality as the actual Resurrection itself. In fact, it is all we can have, and it is unwise to look for more. Nor can I see why the same line of argument does not equally apply, as by many it is applied, to the whole history of Christ, as well as to the "story of the Reappearance." If all mythical, and if now recognized as such, it has served its purpose, and is just as good a foundation on which to build and sustain a Christian Church and the spiritual strength of its members, as if "Christ" had been a real person who lived and suffered, and died and rose again, according to the Scriptures.

It would be impossible to express the degree of my dissent from such a conclusion, which seems to me unphilosophical, illogical, and at variance with all the principles of common-sense. The substantial historical basis of the New Testament, after making all allowance for just and even sceptical criticism, is as essential to the continuance of the Christian Church or Christian religion as the backbone is to the living body.

But my purpose is not argument nor controversy. The article from the Register is quoted only as an apparent indication of the same drift to which previous reference has been made. It is a tendency away from the living Christ, the Redeemer, the personal Master and Friend and Savior, towards abstractions of religious thought and speculative inquiry; towards a religious philosophy instead of a distinctively Christian faith; away from the acknowledged "discipleship to Jesus Christ" and "allegiance to his gospel," in "the building up of his kingdom," which the "National Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches" avows as the basis of its organization; and towards the "Free Religion" which distinctly rejects all such foundation of faith.

We need have no fear of the ultimate effect upon the cause of Christianity, even if such tendency should be established and carried to its extreme results. But the churches which yield to it will fade away and perish. Jesus Christ can do without us; we cannot do without him. The more closely we hold to him the stronger we are, both to do and suffer all the will of God. The more we separate ourselves from him, as the living Christ, the weaker we become in the resistance of temptation, in the self-consecrating works of goodness, in our hopes of immortal life. Human nature needs the support of personal love and allegiance. The Christian Church can rest upon no other foundation than that which is already laid, which is Jesus Christ.

Perhaps I am foolishly misinterpreting the meaning and tendency of such religious facts as have now been noted, the list of which might be indefinitely extended. If so, the folly will carry its own just rebuke. The mistake, if it be such, arises from no captiousness of spirit, from no uncharitableness of feeling towards those whose convictions of duty are different from my own, and whom I neither censure nor condemn; but from a sincere love of truth and a deep interest in the best spiritual progress of humanity. But if I am even approximately right in my interpretation, I would most affectionately and earnestly appeal to all our brethren to consider the subjects involved with serious care; for out of them must come the issues, not only of our denominational, but also of our spiritual life or death.

W. G. ELIOT.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.
—Christian Register, May 3, 1879.

A MODERN SERMON.

ILLUSTRATING THE METHOD UPON WHICH THE AVERAGE PARSON CONSTRUCTS HIS DISCOURSES.

"Brethren, the words of my text are:—

"Old Mother Hubbard, she went to the cupboard,
To get her poor dog a bone;
But when she got there the cupboard was bare,
And so the poor dog had none."

"These beautiful words, dear friends, carry with them a solemn lesson. I propose this evening to analyze their meaning, and to attempt to apply it, lofty as it may be, to our every-day life.

"Old Mother Hubbard, she went to the cupboard,
To get her poor dog a bone."

"Mother Hubbard, you see, was old; there being no mention of others, we may presume she was alone; a widow—a friendless, old, solitary, widow. Yet did she despair? Did she sit down and weep, or read a novel, or wring her hands? No! she went to the cupboard. And here observe that she went to the cupboard. She did not hop, or skip, or run, or jump, or use any other peripatetic artifice; she solely and merely went to the cupboard.

"We have seen that she was old and lonely, and we now further see that she was poor. For, mark, the words are 'the cupboard.' Not 'one of the cupboards,' or the 'right-hand cupboard,' or the 'left-hand cupboard,' or the one above, or the one below, or the one under the stair, but just the cupboard. The one little humble cupboard the poor widow possessed. And why did she go to the cupboard? Was it to bring forth golden goblets or glittering precious stones, or costly apparel, or feasts, or any other attributes of wealth? It was to get her poor dog a bone! Not only was the widow poor, but her dog, the sole prop of her age, was poor too. We can imagine the scene. The poor dog crouching in the corner, looking wistfully at the solitary cupboard, and the widow going to that cupboard—in hope, in expectation may be—to open it, although we are not distinctly told that it was not half open or ajar, to open it for that poor dog.

"But when she got there the cupboard was bare,
And so the poor dog had none."

"When she got there! You see, dear brethren, what perseverance is. You see the beauty of persistence in doing right. She got there. There were no turnings and twistings, no slippings and slidings, no leaning to the right or faltering to the left. With glorious simplicity we are told she got there.

"And how was her noble effort rewarded?

"The cupboard was bare! It was bare! There were to be found neither oranges, nor cheesecakes, nor penny buns, nor gingerbread, nor crackers, nor nuts, nor lucifer matches. The cupboard was bare! There was but one, only one solitary cupboard in the whole of that cottage, and that one, the sole hope of the widow, and the glorious loadstar of the poor dog, was bare? Had there been a leg of mutton, a loin of lamb, a fillet of veal, even an ice from Gutter's, the case would have been different, the incident would have been otherwise. But it was bare, my brethren, bare as a bald head, bare as an infant born without a caul.

"Many of you will probably say, with all the pride of worldly sophistry, 'The widow, no doubt, went out and bought a dog-biscuit.' Ah, no! Far removed from these earthly ideas, these mundane desires, poor Mother Hubbard the widow, whom many thoughtless worldlings would despise, in that she only owned one cupboard, perceived—or I might even say saw—at once the relentless logic of the situation, and yielded to it with all the heroism of that nature which had enabled her without deviation to reach the barren cupboard. She did not attempt, like the stiff-necked scoffers of this generation, to war against the inevitable; she did not try, like the so-called men of science, to explain what she did not understand. She did nothing. 'The poor dog had none!' And then at this point our information ceases. But do we not know sufficient? Are we not cognizant of enough?

"Who would dare to pierce the veil that shrouds the ulterior fate of old Mother Hubbard, the poor dog, the cupboard, or the bone that was not there? Must we imagine her still standing at the open cupboard door—deploring to ourselves the dog still drooping his disappointed tail upon the floor,—the sought-for bone still remaining somewhere else? Ah! no, my dear brethren, we are not so permitted to attempt to read the future. Suffice it for us to glean from this beautiful story its many lessons; suffice it for us to apply them, to study them as far as in us lies, and bearing in mind the natural frailty of our nature, to avoid being widows; to shun the patronymic of Hubbard; to have, if our means afford it, more than one cupboard in the house, and to keep stores in them all. And oh! dear friends, keeping in recollection what we have learned this day, let us avoid keeping dogs that are fond of bones. But, brethren, if we do—if Fate has ordained that we should do any of these things,—let us then go, as Mother Hubbard did, straight, without curvetting or prancing, to our cupboard, empty though it be—let us, like her, accept the inevitable with calm steadfastness; and should we like her ever be left with a hungry dog and an empty cupboard, may future chroniclers be able to write also of us, in the beautiful words of our text—

“And so the poor dog had none.”

—Portsmouth (Eng.) Monitor.

MR. COMSTOCK'S ANNUAL REPORT.

Few people know “The New York Society for the Suppression of Vice,” but everybody knows who Mr. Anthony Comstock is. We put his name at the head of our article because he is, for practical purposes, the society, and without him the society would cease to attract attention. We have received the annual report of this society, and also the “Trial of D. M. Bennett.” The two will suggest the remarks we have to make. Our comments last year seemed to Mr. Comstock to do him injustice, and we gladly published his letter explaining his course. With no wish to offend him, and certainly with no intention of offering aid and comfort to the vermin who attempt to debauch the minds of the young, we are still unable to accept all the methods of Mr. Comstock as wise or salutary. He has done a good work, and has done it well, in rooting out the vile sources of corruption. So far as this goes, he shall have our approbation and support. He has for this needed work suffered obloquy and violence, and so long as he continues to do it he must continue to suffer from all that malignant wickedness can suggest to ruin his reputation and destroy his peace. So far as his work is manly, honorable, and necessary, we wish him Godspeed. The report makes a defence of the methods employed, and Mr. Comstock justly claims that, if, after wares have been advertised, he orders them, according to the directions given, and in this way obtains evidence to convict, he cannot be accused of seducing men into crime. With that we agree. But if Mr. Comstock wrote the letter said to have been presented in Mr. Comstock's evidence at the trial of Mr. Bennett, and signed G. Brackett, then we say that Mr. Comstock passed the bound of truthfulness and honorable conduct. He writes a cunningly devised letter, giving the impression that he sympathizes with Mr. Bennett in his trials, and ordering his books. If Mr. Bennett were a worse criminal than he is, it would have been far better to let him go unpunished than to write that hypocritical letter. The consciences of men can be debauched in more ways than one, and we do not see any advantage to the community in suppressing one vice by the practice of another.

At the annual meeting, Rev. Joseph Cook was introduced, and in one of his “telling addresses” defended the work and the methods of the society. He declared that the President had pardoned Heywood without a full knowledge of the facts; but Gen. Devens' letter shows that the proper distinction was made by the President, and that he knew what he was doing.

Mr. Cook said also that “the free lovers and liberals, headed by such men as Ingersoll and Heywood, would wipe out the present postal laws, so that crime might hold high carnival in our land.” Mr. Cook reads THE INDEX, and knows perfectly well that this charge can be made only against that small body of extreme freethinkers who captured the Liberal League at Syracuse. He knows that Adler, Frothingham, Higginson, et al. pronounced “liberals” and leaders of free religion, have no more sympathy with “cancer-planting” than he has. But Mr. Cook has taken care with perverse ingenuity to make it appear to those who do not know the facts that what is called free religion and “cancer-planting” are synonymous terms. It is not strange then that he should justify the “methods.” He seems to think that anything is desirable that tends to bring “infidelity” into contempt.

But it will be a great mistake if Messrs. Cook and Comstock attempt to carry on a crusade by law against all forms of indecent opinion. There is a broad, clearly defined and well understood distinction between literature which is written with intent to poison the imagination, and the incidental indecency which is the result of rejecting the accepted laws of society. The one is poisonous and should be burned as fast as it is issued: the other is commonly only foolishly and stupidly indecent. It attracts little attention, wins fewer followers the less it is molested, and if let alone will at last feed the paper-mill. Mrs. Besant's crude production and Mr. Heywood's insane trash have, by the misdirected efforts of reformers in England and America, attained a world-wide celebrity and the certainty of an immense circulation. There are some questions which cannot be discussed, and some subjects which can have no right to show themselves in print. But among them is not the ground of marriage and the laws which protect it. It is better for society, and will give us a better solution of the question, to allow a full and free discussion of the matter in public and private by all who do not attempt to exert an influence over the passions. Any appeal which addresses itself to the reason must be allowed. We are not compelled to listen to it. But if there are fools and madmen who think they can reform society by showing reasons for taking away its chief defences, they must be allowed to exhibit their folly. Society will be the wiser for the exhibition of the absurdity of such reform.

We stand then for the right to express opinions, however absurd and however wicked, so long as such opinions are not shaped into acts which injure society directly. Commonly, the intent to debauch marks the literature we would suppress. If any one wishes to advocate polygamy or any of the other variations from what we consider the sacred type of the marriage relation, we would give him a free field, subject only to such penalties as the ridicule and scorn of his fellows might inflict.

Mr. Abbot in THE INDEX has been fighting a noble battle against the free lovers and “repealers” who have captured the “Liberal League.” The controversy shows that the meanest conceptions of woman and marriage have organized themselves into a system and propose to reform the social state. Such a contest will bring out the differences in sharp antagonism, and “free love,” once brought to the light and forced to exhibit itself, will be glad to slink away among the other licenses which are known by grocer names.

So long as it is possible to have an honest difference of opinion on any topic, that difference must be tolerated. At that point we are willing to-day to draw the line, believing that the instincts of the people may be trusted to defend them from the evil influences of wrong doctrine.—Christian Register, May 3.

RENAN.

BY JOSEPH P. THOMPSON, D.D., LL.D.

France no longer need concern herself for a military revenge upon Germany. The wit of the Academy, the laughter of Paris, have set Berlin in a rage. In a former letter I have pointed out that the one spoil of victory which the Germans brought back from France was Chauvinism. The five milliards have melted away. The military superiority has so far receded before the improved discipline of the French army that a new trial of arms might turn the scale. The conquered provinces persist in being French and await the next fortune of war. The industrial and financial development of France has not only distanced, but shamed, the halting career of Germany. But the braggart vanity which had been a pardonable weakness of France since the days of the Napoleonic conquests—this Chauvinistic inflation—seized the head of the victorious German, and has made him more grotesquely conceited than a Frenchman could ever be. Germans of sense and experience deplore this national intoxication of vanity, and had hoped ere this to see it subside; but it has penetrated even the high places of literature and science, where it shows itself in a bigotry which does not even know itself to be insolent. Nobody outside of Germany knows anything, has done anything, or has the least prospect of being anything, except as he shall be taught in her schools. To an educated American this air of assumption is simply ridiculous; but to the cultivated Frenchman it has, of course, been annoying. At last, however, a keen and competent French savant, honored among scholars and admired in literature throughout the world, having recovered for himself the consciousness of what France still is, has pricked this German insolence with the spear of Ithuriel. At his reception into the French Academy, M. Ernest Renan, as a prelude to his profound and brilliant discourse, made an allusion to a pretentious culture, which his hearers instinctively applied to Germany, with shouts of derisive laughter; and which Germany takes to herself as a snubbing in the face of Europe. Without naming Germany, Renan said: “Elsewhere literature and society are things distinct, profoundly separated. In our country, thanks to you, these interpenetrate each other. You are little disturbed at hearing the pompous announcement of the coming of what is called another culture, which can dispense with genius. You scorn a culture which renders man neither more amiable nor better. I greatly fear that some races—no doubt thoroughly serious, since they reproach our levity—will find themselves mistaken in the hope that they have gained the favor of the world by quite other methods than those which have hitherto succeeded. A science pedantic in its isolation, a literature without vivacity, a surly policy, a high society without éclat, a nobility without esprit, gentlemen without politeness, great captains without lofty words, will not so soon, I think, dethrone the memory of that old French society, so brilliant, so polished, so jealous of pleasing.”

“When a nation, through what it calls its sobriety and its application, shall have produced what we have with our frivolity—writers superior to Pascal and Voltaire; better scientific heads than Aëmbert and Lavoisier; a nobility more elevated than ours of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries; women more charming than those who have smiled upon our philosophy; an élan more extraordinary than that of our Revolution; more readiness in embracing noble aims; more courage; more savoir vivre; a loftier temper in facing death; in one word, a society more sympathetic and spiritual than that of our fathers—then shall we be conquered. We are not yet. We have not lost the audience of the world.”

This characterization of the vaunted culture of Germany is strikingly true. Every cultivated foreigner living in Germany at once feels its breath. And American students who come to Europe for culture would do well to remember that Paris lies nearer to them than Berlin, and that there is a culture that breeds refinement and advances humanity. And a better, truer culture than either is that which they leave behind them, in their chase after the false or faded lights of the Old World.—Independent, May 1, 1879.

CHRISTIANITY ABBAIGNED.

A PAGAN'S IMPRACHMENT OF THE RELIGION OF ENGLAND.

A correspondent writes to the Osaka (Japan) Nippo as follows:—

“Being myself but a poor scholar, it is difficult for me even to read European books, much less to understand the Western religion. Having, however, brought before one of high learning some matters concerning Christianity, of which I am about to speak hereafter, I have found his opinions thereon identical with my own. Christian missionaries say that Christianity is a perfect religion, the objects of which are to exhort men to the practice of virtue; to keep their hearts pure; to maintain that which is right, neither oppressing others nor permitting others to oppress them, and thus all men shall have the same freedom, and exercise equal rights: so the power of this religion is great and boundless. The question to be asked is this: Is Christianity the true religion it professes to be? It is not necessary that in a State where this religion prevails all the people, from monarch to peasant, should be good and pious men; but there is one thing which I cannot clearly understand, so beg to ask you believers in Christianity for solution of the following problems: Looking through the list of nations of the whole world, I find England to be the country where Christianity flourishes most; so I shall take that country to illustrate my questions. If I ask you what sort of men the members of the Cabinet of England are, you would probably answer that they are selected from the nobility on account of their extensive learning and great wisdom. Again, if I ask who the members of the two houses of Parliament are, your answer might be that they are also preëminent for learning and knowledge. There I should quite agree with both your answers, and at the same time I must believe that all of them, being Christians, are, of course, just and disinterested men. Well, do you remember the war between England and China, which took place more than twenty years ago? And do not you know the pretext alleged by the former country for this war? At that time Englishmen imported into China large quantities of opium produced in India, and the Chinese, finding this drug to be injurious to their fellow-countrymen, who unwisely smoked and used it in other ways, desired to put an end to the trade. England, enraged at this endeavor on the part of China, resolved to carry on the trade by force, and made war against the Chinese, which ended in favor of England, thus securing to themselves the importation of opium as before into the Empire of China. It was natural and reasonable for the Chinese to have attempted to stop the import of opium, as they found it injurious to the people; while the conduct of the then members of the Cabinet and of the two houses of Parliament of England is no less than enforcing upon a weaker nation a shameful trade in a poisonous drug. How can such conduct be said to be just and disinterested? It is unnecessary for me at this time to give particular accounts here of England's most cruel government in India, as that is a matter well known to all the world. Alas! where is the virtue of which Christian missionaries preach? Can such conduct as that now instanced, causing injury to others in order to gain advantage for themselves, and the oppression of the weak by the strong, be tolerated by the people of such a great country as England, where Christianity is said to reign supreme? If we say, however, that the Christian religion has no power to control the actions of those who believe it, then we must, at the same time, declare it to be a barren religion, bearing no fruit and having no virtue whatsoever; while its power is both limited and confined. If this is so, how can we look upon it as the perfect one?”

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

BEAUTY.

There sits the sceptred Queen upon a throne,
Fanned by ambrosial breezes; at her nod
A thousand happy slaves go; lan and plod
To serve her, and this privilege alone,
Bestowed by her, they reckon as a boon,
Not as a bond. They fear no tyrant's rod
Nor hope a base reward, yet to no god
Was ever such intense devotion shown.
Among these devotees the chiefs of art—
The poet, painter, sculptor, and musician—
Are foremost in the toll to please and praise.
To me has fall'n the poet's delicate part,
And I would fain proclaim the heavenly vision
To souls less favored and to other days.

G. C. Z.

CAMBRIDGE, May 5.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 10.

Emerson Bentley, $3.50; J. W. Sellman, $3.50; E. Naumberg, $3.50; Robt Clarke, $1.50; Subscription News Co., $2.70; J. W. Goodrich, $2.50; F. A. Green, $12.50; Warren Griswold, $4.40; J. Decker, $10; David Branson, $3.25; Rev. H. M. Simmons, $1.25; J. Whiteley Ward, $10.45; A. & J. Trounstein, $6; Frank Cheney, $3.20; Wm. Hogan, $3.20; F. E. Abbot, $500.00; Godfrey Gundrum, $3; Wm. Smith, $3.20; Henry Bood, $3.20; G. A. Lane, $3.20; Otto Rothschild, $3.20; Miss M. D. Devereux, $3.20; Jas. B. Shane, $3.20; Isaac N. Sterne, $3.20; Ch. Wahl, $3.20; S. R. Mumford, $3.20; Mrs. M. S. Wetmore, $3.20; Chas. N. Norris, $5; Rosa L. Segur, $1; Arthur Farrar, $3.20; Raynal Dodge, $1; Wm. Ulrich, 80 cents; L. G. Felch, $5; Geo. T. Chapman, $1; A. M. Lathrop, $3; John Knight, $1.50; C. E. Hewes & Co., $10; L. K. Washburn, $1.10; F. M. Vaughn, $3.20; Robt Davis, $3.20; H. Stanton Curtis, $3.20; Harvey Moore, 50 cents.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 15, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street; J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPEKRE, MRS. E. D. O'BRYEN, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIOT WRIGHT, O. D. B. MILLS, W. D. L. SUDER, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Eighth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held at their office, No. 35 Monroe Street, Toledo, Ohio, on Saturday, June 7, 1879, at 2:30 P.M., for the hearing of the annual reports, the election of Directors for the ensuing year, and the transaction of any other business that may come before the meeting.

F. E. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The twelfth annual meeting of the Free Religious Association will be held in Boston on the 29th and 30th of May.

The Association will hold its opening session for business (election of officers, hearing of reports, etc.) at Union Hall, in the Young Men's Christian Union Building, on Boylston Street, at 7.45 o'clock, Thursday evening, the 29th.

The Convention on Friday, the 30th, will be held in Parker Memorial Hall, corner of Berkeley and Appleton Streets, with sessions at 10.30 A.M. and 3 P.M.

The new President, Prof. Adler, is to preside, and at one of the sessions will make a special address giving his views of the "Practical Needs of Free Religion." An essay is to be given by John W. Chadwick, on "Theological and Rational Ethics." Among other speakers expected are M. J. Savage and F. E. Abbot, of Boston, G. E. Gordon, of Milwaukee, C. D. B. Mills, of Syracuse, and F. A. Hinckley, of Providence.

On Friday evening, the Association will have its Social Festival in Union Hall, at which Col. T. W. Higginson will preside.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

HERE is a very significant utterance, quoted by the Independent and bearing on the probable future alliance of all forms of organized Christianity, which deserves the heedful attention of liberals: "Who is antichrist?" asks The Presbyterian. It ought to know. See Westminster Confession of Faith, chapter xxv., sec. vi.: 'The Pope of Rome. . . is that antichrist, that man of sin and son of perdition, that exalteth himself in the Church against Christ and all that is called God.' But The Presbyterian, which does not read the Confession so much as it ought, and has forgotten what it contains, says: 'The Papal Church has never, in our judgment, been the antichrist, that man of sin which is to be revealed.' It declares that, in its opinion, the antichrist is international socialism, and that its first assault will be on the Papal Church, and that the antagonism 'will yet bring the whole Christian Church, Protestant and Catholic, into nearer confidence and affiliation, in resistance to the last and most terrible of foes. Common persecution has often made fast friends of enemies, and joined them in self-defence, and we believe this, as between Catholics and Protestants, is in the future, when that man of sin shall be revealed.'"

THE SUPREMACY OF MORAL LAW.

Last week Mr. Frothingham's remarkable farewell address to his society, declaring his conviction that "the era of Individualism is drawing to a close," was noticed at length in these columns; and it has attracted no little attention from the press and the public at large. Since our last issue we have seen a just published address on "Atheism" by Professor Felix Adler, delivered before the Society for Ethical Culture in New York city, which, though not directly mentioning Individualism, contains passages of marked significance in connection with that subject. Mr. Frothingham said that "times have come when this noble position [of Ralph Waldo Emerson and Theodore Parker] is held by fewer and fewer persons,—when the men professing it call themselves inspired, and a coarse sort of self-assertion has taken possession of the proper place of reason and conscience, and of the individual aspiration."

In similar strain Dr. Adler declared that the "object of life" which possesses a "transcendent value" is—the italics are his own—"the subjection of the soul to moral law." And again he emphasizes "the grandeur of the human soul in its sense of responsibility in guilt and goodness." Such declarations as these, profoundly true and greatly needed at this time, are a fresh proof that the glaring excesses and extravagances of the antinomian Individualism so popular with some who disgrace the name of liberalism are yet destined to evoke an effective and crushing rebuke from the spokesman of the main body of the liberal host. Dr. Adler never uttered a truer word than when he said: "The people are justified in declaring him an enemy of the human race who lessens the respect in which the eternal ethical values are held." It will yet become clear as crystal to the eyes of every right-minded liberal that these "eternal ethical values" not only pertain to the actions of individuals, but also inhere in the natural institutions which are the nucleus of society, and in the laws against crime which protect civilization itself from internal decay. The intellectual and moral solidarity of mankind, the universal reason and conscience which are rooted in the unity and universality of human nature itself,—these supreme truths cannot possibly be despised as Individualism despises them, without striking a blow at the foundation of "eternal ethical values" of the very highest order; and he who strikes such a blow is indeed "an enemy of the human race." Natural morality (it is superfluous to point out that we believe in no other than "natural morality," when the "Demands of Liberalism" have emphasized that difference for so many years) is the fundamental law of social no less than of individual life; and natural morality alone lies at the bottom of the Family and the State, as the source and origin of those "eternal ethical values" of which they can never be robbed. With these applications (we trust not extensions) of the principles so eloquently enunciated below by Dr. Adler, we quote from his address some passages which have especially struck us by their beauty and truth:—

"I have said that in moments of exaltation the common objects of life appear despicable. There is one object, however, whose transcendent value shines out with all the brighter lustre the more the others are obscured; and this is the subjection of the soul to moral law. The laws of Nature cannot compare with the moral law; the wonders exhibited by astronomy, the distances of the fixed stars, the infinity of worlds, the sweep of the planets in their orbits through millions and millions of miles, the regularity with which they return unswervingly along their paths through the immensities, the inexpressible grandeur of the material universe dwindle beside the grandeur of the human soul in its sense of responsibility in guilt and goodness.

"Now, while the common people do not clearly appreciate, they yet dimly feel, the sublime value which the law of righteousness gives to our lives, and they cling to the belief in a moral order, perceiving truly that human life would become wholly intolerable, if we indeed believed ourselves to be blown about by winds of chance, the sport of blind forces that wound and pain and crush and grind to no purpose, with no compensating good to be achieved by so much suffering. The natural feelings of mankind, on this account, revolt against the doctrine of chance in any guise, and the people are justified in declaring him an enemy of the human race who lessens the respect in which the eternal ethical values are held. But if we are thus cheered to behold men, even in their outbursts of fanaticism, moved by the desire to protect what is really sacred, it is, on the other hand, inexpressibly saddening to perceive that, owing to ignorance and superstition, they constantly mistake the best friends of the good for its foes, and, like wild beasts, turn to rend their truest benefactors. 'There is a time to act for the Lord by breaking his commandments,' was a current saying among the ancient Hebrews. That means, there is a time to act for religion by protesting against what is called religion; there is a time to prepare for a larger morality by dashing to atoms the too narrow forms in which the morality of the age is preserved. But the multitude understand not this necessity, feel not the breath of the larger freedom that comes to them amid the discords of innovation, as the spring comes amid showers and storms. And thus it happens that the most religious souls have ever been persecuted in the name of religion, and that the enthusiasts of morality have been execrated as destroyers of the good."

In conclusion, Dr. Adler made this impressive declaration, through which breathes the deep undertone of the ancient ethico-religious consciousness of the Hebrew race:—

"The people want a confession of faith, I am told. Hear, then, mine—a simple one. I believe in the supreme excellence of righteousness; I believe that the law of righteousness will triumph in the universe over all evil; I believe that in the law of righteousness is the sanctification of human life; and I believe that in furthering and fulfilling that law I also am hallowed in the service of the unknown God."

It is very evident to us that the capture of the National Liberal League by antinomian Individualism is to mark the turning of the tide. Henceforth its influence is to grow less, and not greater. The supremacy of such moral tendencies as betrayed themselves at Syracuse will not be tolerated by American liberalism. The issue then and there made is no "side-issue," as Mr. Underwood very mistakenly supposes in his article elsewhere; it was an issue of life or death for the liberal cause, as will grow more and more evident every day. Absolute irresponsibility in morals or "the subjection of the soul to moral law"—that was the deeper issue at stake in the repulsive question there forced upon the League by an unprincipled plot as was ever hatched. It is utterly useless to try to cover up that deeper issue; it was there, it is here, and it will stay until it has reached a settlement diametrically opposite to that of Syracuse. From that battle-field dates the beginning of a mighty reaction which is destined to sweep Individualism, with all its paralyzing and demoralizing influences, out of the path of the great liberal movement. It is cause for congratulation that such men as Mr. Frothingham and Dr. Adler, without saying a word on the Syracuse Congress and probably without any conscious remembrance of it, are nevertheless sensitive to the stirrings of a better tendency whose open and determined self-assertion dates from that day. No power on earth can stay its progress, for its strength is the strength of the whole moral nature of man. With us, or without us, it will ride on to ultimate triumph. Individualism, with its one idea of "private judgment" and its denial of "universal reason," is fated to give way to Scientific Liberalism, with its "private judgment and universal reason, now and forever, one and inseparable." For that, and nothing short of it, means the supremacy of Freedom, Reason, and Moral Law.

PIOUS CROOKEDNESS.

The Orthodox conscience is peculiar. It is astonishing what facility its most pious and approved representatives possess to confound distinctions, mystify and falsify things, and shun a clear and accurate statement, when they wish to make a point against unbelievers.

I was forcibly reminded of this, a few weeks since, at Association Hall, in this city (New York), on the anniversary of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, when Joseph Cook, in the presence of Anthony Comstock and a radiant circle of evangelical lights on the platform, amid which he shone as the central luminary, improved the occasion to malign, in shuffling and unscrupulous phrase, American liberalism.

The utmost stretch of charity could find little excuse for the offence, since it was a substantial repetition of that uttered in Boston a short time before, and which, evidently, he was aware had already been answered.

Speaking of the infidels of the country, he was wary enough, in this instance, to admit that the Free Religious Association and the Liberal League were two distinct organizations. This was certainly indicative of a growth in knowledge and discrimination, since they were the objects of his vituperation on the previous occasion.

"The Free Religious Association," said Mr. Cook, "I am aware, includes in its list of officers one or two persons of some literary celebrity; but I have been informed that they are rather ashamed of their company."

It would gratify some who have a latent Yankee curiosity to know the authority for this implication. The Association just mentioned was several times referred to as the "National Cancer-Planting Association," which he seemed to regard as a happy hit. Mr. Cook, if we mistake not, makes some pretension to an acquaintance with science. He has written a book on biology, and ought, therefore, to know something about its pathological developments. But has he not got physiology and agriculture a little mixed in the appellation which he has chosen for the designation of radicals?

"It is true," he continued, "that the Free Religious Association and the Liberal League are distinct organizations. All Free Religionists may not be members of the Liberal League, but all members of the Liberal League are Free Religionists."

The simple fact is that, while Free Religionists and members of the Liberal League would generally agree in their rejection of religious creeds and dogmas, they are in other very important particulars quite the antipodes of each other.

The Free Religious Association has never, so far as I am aware, exhibited any direct or active sympathy in behalf of the Liberal League movement. Some of the most prominent members of the Free Religious Association have never shown sufficient interest in the League movement to become identified with it, if they are not even opposed to it. If it was the intention of Mr. Cook to confound the Free Religious Association with the repeal wing of the Liberal League (and that was evidently his intention so far as possible), nothing could have been more false and slanderous. The Free Religious Association in its whole character and spirit has been quite a different organization from that of the repealers. It has never been the special refuge of those who oppose all legal restriction upon the free circulation through the mails of obscene literature, or advocate free-loveism. It has never shown any leaning towards, or disposition to aid in, the propagation of such theories. Because three-fifths of the members of the Liberal League at Syracuse were of this sort, Mr. Cook from these facts reached the corollary that the majority of the radicals of the country are repealers.

Did Mr. Cook know what he was talking about? We think he did, much better than one might suppose. He was eager to make as strong a case as possible against radicals, and did not concern himself very much how it was done, if the object were but accomplished.

Here is another gem of Orthodox veracity and conscientiousness that will do to string with the one just given.

A recent number of the Christian Intelligencer, one of the evangelical organs of this city, contained a letter from Boston which possesses some interest for radicals as well as those for whom it was written. It is chiefly devoted to a meeting of the Chestnut Street Club, at which the author was present. The essayist of the occasion was Col. Higginson, whom the correspondent delineates with considerable appreciation and grace. He recounts some reminiscences of him, and renders a deserved tribute to his character and culture. On the whole, the letter is pleasant reading for the friends of the Colonel, notwithstanding the lachrymose strain into which it runs,—though very consistently, be it said,—in consequence of the announcement with which Mr. Higginson convicted some of those present, or the portion of the religious world to which they belonged, of practical unbelief, because no Orthodox friend had ever spoken to him concerning his soul's salvation. But the passage that seemed to me particularly choice, to which I wish to call attention, is this: Speaking of Col. Higginson's "pet theory of Free Religion," the writer proceeds,—"Theory, because, as exemplified by the Association which bears this name, it is not a practice. I have heard Col. Higginson tell them so to their face in convention assembled, and furthermore express his intention of withholding the title till their minds were sufficiently emancipated to welcome Mr. Moody and Joseph Cook to their platform, and hear them with the same equanimity as they heard himself or Mr. Frothingham. It means, in fact, free religion for every form of religion except evangelical Christianity."

Those who are familiar with the Free Religious Association can hardly fail to be pretty effectually confounded by the above statement. It makes one exclaim, as boys and girls do sometimes when some one has told a "whopper," "Well, I never." It is hard to refrain from venting one's emotion in such words as these: "Why, how this world is given to lying!" It would be natural to doubt whether the author was serious, or to suppose the quotation belonged to the "Humorous" column, but for the general seriousness of the paper.

Surely no one who knows anything about the Free Religious Association, enough to write about it with any intelligence,—no one who has lived in Boston during the years of its existence,—can be so ignorant of its real character as is implied in the passage we have noticed. What are the facts? If the correspondent had troubled himself to the extent of looking over the Annual Reports of the Free Religious Association, he would have discovered, by the printed letters at the close of them, that a very large number of the most prominent evangelical clergymen of the country, including the Rev. Mr. Cook, Rev. Phillips Brooks, Rev. W. H. H. Murray, and such as these, had been invited at one time or another to the privileges of the platform which he asks for them, and have again and again, with almost entire unanimity, declined a part in such fellowship. Even the very meeting which he described refuted the allegation preferred against radicals, since, according to his account of it, there were several evangelical divines present who participated with equal freedom in the proceedings.

The writer I have referred to signs himself "Old Colony." Old and antiquated, if not colonial, one might easily conceive him to be, if sincere in his misrepresentations. May he not be the brother of Mrs. Partington—possibly Isaac?

There are numerous instances, similar to the foregoing, of one kind or another, occurring from time to time, illustrative of pious crookedness. Such, for example, as the trial, now going on across the river in the "City of Churches," where one of the great star preachers of the day is charged, and in the popular mind justly convicted, of lying and deceit; and where, if half the lies have been told of which the brethren there accuse each other, there have been enough to sink a ship, to say nothing about a meeting-house. We might refer to the case of Archbishop Purcell, but we forbear. We simply close as we began, with the remark: "The Orthodox conscience is peculiar." D. H. C.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

The past two months I have given forty-five lectures, and during the time have spoken in Massachusetts, New York, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, and Michigan. Of the twenty-seven places visited I have found six with liberal organizations, and most of them lacking in numerical strength and vigor. The Free Congregational Society of Florence, Massachusetts, is, according to my notion, the best liberal organization in America. I found it, when I spoke before it a few weeks ago, in a flourishing condition. The very full descriptions of this society which have appeared in THE INDEX render unnecessary any particular reference to it by me. One of my lectures in Paine Hall, Boston, in which I protested against quackery and fraud put forward in the name of free thought, and called attention to the difference between true liberalism and the spurious stuff that attempts to pass itself under the name, has, I notice, called forth some severe denunciations, but from a class whose superficial criticism and unreasoning abuse are to me evidence of the timeliness of my remarks. Because some of the advocates of free thought, for reasons known to themselves, have the past few months pandered to the free-love element, some of its noisy leaders seem to act as though they would like to crush or cripple any liberal editor or lecturer who has the temerity to call attention to the distinctions between free thought and free love. In the Boston lecture referred to, the editor of THE INDEX, who was present, will remember that I defined free love in the very language of its leaders, quoting from their own pamphlets, and wholly refrained from any remarks of a personal nature; yet Mr. Heywood, with his characteristic unfairness, speaks of my "slandering falsehoods" concerning free love. I am glad to learn from one of his speeches, as reported, that he is not a freethinker, and that he got his free-love notions from the Bible. It may be hard on the Bible, but creditable to freethought.

I lectured one evening in New York before the Fourth Liberal League, of which Mr. Courtlandt Palmer is President. The attendance was good. The League has many earnest members and is doing a good work in the city. It is composed chiefly of young men. No mere difference of opinion on what I regard as a side issue shall prevent my recognizing the intelligence, the sincerity, and the effective work of such an association.

While in New York I had the pleasure of hearing Felix Adler. He is a man who possesses genius and will yet exert a commanding influence in the liberal ranks. He is something of a thinker, and by his earnestness, simplicity of manner, and natural eloquence impresses his audience as but few speakers can. His congregation is chiefly made up of reformed Jews. It is not, for obvious reasons, as difficult to keep together or to satisfy as a society composed of heterogeneous elements, like most organizations.

Mrs. Clara Neymann informed me that she intended to enter the field as a liberal lecturer next autumn. She is a lady of talent, very earnest, and thoroughly imbued with the importance of familiarizing the public with the higher phases of liberal thought. I hope she will receive many applications for lectures.

I passed a few hours with Stephen Pearl Andrews, to whose merits as a close metaphysical thinker I trust I am not wholly insensible, but who evinced some surprise and not a little annoyance, I thought, when I frankly told him that his recent articles in THE INDEX were beyond my comprehension. I am glad to learn that there are others in the same predicament with myself. Mr. Andrews' conversations are to me always interesting and instructive; but somehow I fail to derive great profit from his writings. Quite likely the fault is in me and not in him.

At Port Jervis I found many liberals, and in a few days I am to return there and speak several evenings. At Zionsville and Indianapolis I had full houses. I spoke at Quincy, Carthage, Clayton, Augusta, and Monmouth, Illinois. Quincy is a city of over thirty thousand, and quite liberal. I gave a course of lectures in the Opera House to audiences of seven or eight hundred, and spoke one evening by request of J. Villa Blake from the pulpit of the Unitarian church. Mr. Blake's society is in a vigorous condition and is doing good work in Quincy. He informed me that his congregation was quite equal, if not superior, in intelligence and appreciation, to the Parker Fraternity, for which he spoke two or three years. A speaker needs to be West but a short time to learn that the notion of some Eastern people, that the intelligence and culture of the country are chiefly East, is a mere conceit without any foundation. Intellectual vigor and independence, especially, are more marked in the West than in the East. It is unquestionable that, as a rule, the bold, enterprising, courageous, independent minds have been attracted West. A more conservative element has been left behind. There are more first-class colleges East, but the common schools of Illinois and Nebraska are, so far as I have seen, equal to those of Massachusetts, and the Western colleges are improving every year. The average intelligence of the West is, in my opinion, greater than that of the East. The secular press is more bold and independent. More liberal papers are taken, the clergy are more advanced, and the masses more liberal. Observe the difference between the Unitarianism of the West and that of the East!

I lectured to good audiences at Arcadia, River Falls, Merrill, Mono, Wisconsin; Vinton and Scranton, Iowa; and Escanaba, and Union City, Michigan. In all these places I found a large liberal element and as many hearers as the best halls could hold. The clergy generally attend my lectures and reply the following Sunday from the pulpit. As I never hear the replies I cannot speak as to their worth; but, as I am credibly informed, I am usually annihilated. One preacher recently characterized me as "one B. F. Underwood, who has some notoriety as a strolling slanderer of Christianity and its advocates," "a cowardly, lying, unprincipled scoundrel," a "self-confessed liar and scoundrel." He is evidently partial to vigorous language, and I am sure I don't object.

I don't find liberals generally much interested in the discussion between those who advocate repeal and those who demand modification of the so-called Comstock laws. I think the general belief is that the introduction of this difference into the Syracuse Convention was a piece of folly. I may think this the general view, because it is my own. I think liberalism and the cause of State secularization will both survive this quarrel among their friends. I am still of the opinion that the leagues ought to drop their difference and unite their strength, allowing each member to decide for himself whether the circulation of obscene literature should be prevented by State laws or United States laws. I am yet of the opinion that it is within the rightful power of Congress to exclude from the mail bawdy books, as it is to prevent their importation into the country, and that such power can be exercised without suppressing any opinions on any subject whatever; but since there are persons who think Congress has no such power, and who are just as much opposed to obscenity as myself, I see no reason that this difference should prevent our working together for State secularization.

If I thought, as some liberals do, that the triumph of liberal principles depends upon organization, I should indeed despair; but it is clear to me that the progress of liberal thought shows itself more in the modification of creeds, in the growing indifference to old theological belief and the gradual adoption of more advanced views, in the tone and tenor of our general literature, in the desire for scientific knowledge, in the growth of a liberal public sentiment, and in all the liberal tendencies of the day, than in the few liberal organizations I find in my travels through the country. The influence of these organizations is generally restricted and in some cases almost insignificant. In many of the cities and villages in which there is the largest number of intelligent liberals, there are no liberal organizations and no desire for any. Not a few of the organizations which appear in the lists of the Liberal Leagues published in the liberal papers have only a nominal existence—an existence only on paper. This was true even before the Syracuse Convention was held, and explains why so few delegates were sent to the Convention. I know whereof I speak.

Organizations succeed only in proportion as they have points of contact with preëxisting organizations. Nature abhors abrupt transitions. Existing species are the modification of extinct species. Modern institutions, customs, habits, thoughts, and usages are the modification of preëxisting institutions, customs, habits, thoughts, and usages. Organizations based on principles contrary to the moral or social order and established convictions of the age have not always been useless, for they have been instruments often for moulding and modifying public sentiment; but they are no index of the strength of the reforms at which they aim, and much less do the reforms depend upon them for their ultimate success.

They may, by the folly of their members, remain insignificant in numbers and influence, while the cause they were organized to advance, passing from their control and becoming a part of the popular thought, goes on to a glorious triumph. It may be so with the cause of State secularization. I have no doubt that the Liberal League, in the objects for which it was organized, represents a large public sentiment; but in introducing into the proceedings of its Congress at Syracuse a question alien to its aims and purposes, and subordinating its main object to a bitter quarrel pertaining to this question, it has, in the opinion of thousands of liberals, shown itself unworthy of their support, and impaired, if not destroyed for the present, its effectiveness.

Let both Liberal Leagues at their next annual convention subordinate the difference on which they split to the great work for which the organization was formed and resolve to unite for common work, and they will be able to achieve a success equal to the most sanguine expectations. B. F. V.

WHAT "REPEALERS DEMAND."

In THE INDEX of April 24, I entered a protest against the statement that—

"Repealers, in addition to that complete protection for liberty of opinion which the reformers equally demand, demand unrestricted freedom for the vile stuff known as 'obscene literature' to circulate through the mails."

It appeared to me this statement was not only false, but suicidal, as coming from THE INDEX, the suppression of which, more than that of any or all obscene publications, was the object for which the Society for the Suppression of Vice was organized. But the editor still adheres to the statement under a modified form. The Repealers demand there shall be no restriction on the circulation of any literature through the mails, and therefore none on obscene literature. This, he thinks, knocks the bottom out of my protest, and does not seem to see that he knocks the bottom out of his own argument by his next sentence: "It can only be sustained by mentioning some restriction upon the circulation of such literature by mail which the repealers do demand." Very well. There are State laws which, if executed, would not allow an obscene publication to get into the post-office. The "repealers" have not demanded the repeal of those laws, therefore they have not demanded the unrestricted circulation of obscene literature through the mails. THE INDEX is the last paper which should say they have. For the Christian bigots who back up Comstock, if they could only "stamp it out," as they have threatened, would condone or at least put up with all the obscenity in Christendom, as indeed the Church generally has for hundreds of years. E. W.

[State laws cannot impose any restriction upon the circulation of vile literature BY MAIL; national laws can alone do that. The repealers demand repeal of the only laws which can possibly restrict such circulation BY MAIL; that is all that we originally said; we still adhere to it, and it is self-evidently true to the very letter. As to the adequacy of State laws to prevent the stuff from getting into the mails, that is a point wholly distinct from any contained in the statement objected to. We believe they are utterly inadequate, but decline to go into that irrelevant question here. Mr. Wright does not deny anything that we really said, and therefore does not invalidate our statement in the slightest; and we hope the disagreeable subject may be dropped here, unless we can be held to account for what we did, and not for what we did not, say.—ED.]

THE SUNDAY LAWS IN ALBANY.

An Albany correspondent to whom we are indebted for many kindnesses in the form of local intelligence, newspaper extracts, and so forth, writes: "On Sunday, April 20, Judge Hurlbut lectured on 'Secularism' before the Albany Liberal Association to an audience of about eight hundred, and again on Sunday, the 27th, to a somewhat smaller audience on 'The Priests of the Sun.' As will be seen from the article enclosed from the Albany Evening Times, there was an attempt made to suppress the former lecture, but it was unsuccessful, as it was found not to be covered by the law; so the two lectures took place, realizing quite a pecuniary profit, and, we trust, also some further advantages in the future to our society."

The extract alluded to above is the following:—

Enforcing the Sunday Laws.

The law in relation to the observance of Sunday as a day of rest is much more strict than many people suppose. To say nothing of the present excise law, our own city ordinance provides a penalty of from $5 to $25 for the act of exposing for sale any goods, wares, or merchandise in this city on Sunday, except fresh fish, which may be sold till ten o'clock in the morning, and milk, which may be sold till six o'clock in the evening. Under this ordinance, nine-tenths of all the cigar-dealers and newsmen in the city are liable to arrest every week in the year. This law, however, like many others, is never enforced and is not likely to be. Still, its existence on the statute-book places a great many people at the mercy, to a limited extent, of a great many others. It is under this same chapter (Chap. 4, Section 1, Title vii.) that Mr. William M. Van Antwerp prevented the appearance of the so-called "Jubilee Singers" at the Leland Opera House last night. They are a small party of inoffensive colored people, who skirish around in the small towns week-days giving their concerts, and go to larger places to sing Sunday nights. They have been here before frequently, and their performances, although not strictly sacred in the ordinary sense of the word, have certainly been innocuous, and the audiences which have attended have uniformly been orderly, well-behaved, and none the worse for hearing them. Still, we suppose that the entertainment comes under the head of "amusements," and consequently may be prohibited whenever any one is disposed to take it up, just as any cigar-dealer may be fined if he keeps his store open on Sunday. Mr. Van Antwerp, who appears to have constituted himself guardian of the sacredness of Sunday, not long ago interfered with the mesmeric illustrations of a professor who proposed to give them on Sunday, but was prevented in the same way. It should be stated that under this same ordinance a theatre or hall, by disobeying, also forfeits its license, so that as the law now stands we do not see but that Sunday amusements in halls and theatres are effectually barred. We understand, however, that Mr. Van Antwerp went a step further a few days since, and applied for the prevention of a lecture under the auspices of the Liberal Club; but as a discussion of "Secularism," or the Origin of Species, or "Resolved, That the sun do move," whatever effect it may have upon the religious belief of the auditors, certainly cannot be classed as "amusement," the lecture was very wisely allowed to proceed. Nothing would do so much to spread whatever evil exists in the Liberal Club as to attempt to prohibit its speakers from airing their ideas in public. The cause of religion or of the Sabbath would not be advanced.

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Tea-growing is proving a success in Georgia.

The culture of coffee is exciting great interest in Florida.

Vanderbilt University has four hundred and twenty students.

Rev. Dr. Miner preached his thirty-first anniversary sermon on May 4.

Wine is consumed in France at the rate of thirty gallons a year for each inhabitant.

The women of Massachusetts can control the schools of the State, if they choose.

It is said that Queen Victoria is in constant fear that some one will attempt her life.

Froude was once refused a position as teacher on account of his theological opinions.

Cornell has fifty young women and three hundred and fifty young men on her college rolls.

Some of the prominent educators think that in this country compulsory education is a failure.

Gail Hamilton says she does not like normal schools. She is not obliged to attend them.

Alderman Kelly seeks a little notoriety in opposing so-called sacred entertainments on Sundays.

The radicals of Paris expect to get Father Hyacinthe into the French Chamber of Deputies.

Two hundred cases for divorce on the docket in the Supreme Judicial Court from Suffolk County.

The Boston Transcript speaks of "Col. Bob Ingersoll, that superb stayer for humanity and equality."

Zion's Herald does not recommend any more evangelical movements. Amen! Glory to Zion's Herald.

No Brooklyn clergyman can be found guilty. Talmage is as white and pure as the snow on Diana's temple.

In a certain part of Washington Territory the annual rainfall is eleven feet. A fine place for Baptists.

China produces annually six hundred million pounds of tea—seven-eighths of all that is raised in the world.

Terror reigns in Russia and may yet be Czar. The next movement will be the arrest of the Government by the Nihilists.

The first regular public lighting with the electric light in any city in this country was at Cleveland, Ohio, on April 20.

Immigration from Ireland is falling off. This ought to cheer our esteemed contemporary of Cleveland, Ohio, the State.

Oxford is to follow the example of Cambridge in furnishing English women with the means for securing a higher education.

The first work lightning did this year was to strike a church at East Weymouth. Lightning seems to be no respecter of buildings.

A new ten-cent international postal card will be issued about July 1st, and a double-sized two-cent card for domestic use next fall.

It is said that three hundred families not owning a Bible were found in Brockton. There are better things one can have in a house.

The livings in the Church of England range from princely incomes to less than starvation wages, that of Shipton being worth $15 a year.

Both in the University of Paris and in the provincial universities in France, women are received as students, and are eligible for degrees.

During 1878 the American and English societies distributed nearly four million Bibles, almost one-quarter of which were sent to Russia.

On Easter Sunday the sound of an organ in public worship in Glasgow (Scotland) Cathedral was heard for the first time in three hundred years.

The people of the United States used last year seven million six hundred and sixty thousand barrels of salt. We ought to "keep" some time.

Dr. John Brown Smith, of Belchertown, has gone to the Northampton Jail because he was foolish enough to refuse to pay two dollars poll tax.

Petroleum has been known to exist in Japan for upwards of twelve centuries, but it was only six years ago that the Japanese learned how to refine it.

The Christian Union refers Mr. Frothingham to I. Corinthians, third chapter and eleventh verse, for a basis of organization for his society. This is a joke.

English physicians are adopting bicycles or tricycles instead of horses, in the rural districts, as a means of locomotion. They make eight to ten miles an hour.

Eighty-six per cent. of the words of Shakespeare are Anglo-Saxon; and three thousand of the thirty-five hundred words in Tennyson's Arthur are monosyllables.

Newark will hereafter allow newspapers, milk, and other necessities to be sold on Sundays, and bar-rooms will be allowed to sell to customers who enter through the back door.

While England has outwalked America, we have the supreme satisfaction of knowing that we have outrowed her, and that an American horse has outrun the best English blood-horses.

M. Ernest Renan is described as "having the body of Ben Butler and the same enormous head, with a face so sweet and benignant that it seems more like that of an angel than a man."

The legislature has opened the doors of all the charitable institutions in the State to clergymen of every denomination. This certainly is better than closing them to some and opening them to others.

It is gratifying to the Congregationalist to state that the theological views of Rev. Dr. Duryea, recently installed in Boston, are not of that advanced description that finds favor with the Independent.

The Herald says: "We learn from a Western contemporary that Orthodox circles are rejoicing over the virtual accession to their ranks of A. Bronson Alcott, one of the celebrities of Concord and the friend of Emerson."

George Eliot has lately fallen into a state of such indifferent health that she is unfit for much intellectual labor, and her medical advisers are dubious as to the propriety of her resuming the writing of fiction for several years.

A London newspaper furnishes the surprising statement that eighteen hundred and eighty-five out of five thousand two hundred and forty-one shares in a new brewery company in Sheffield, England, are held by English clergymen.

The Superintendent of the Industrial Temporary Home, Mr. S. T. Andrews, said in a recent address that he spent all night on his knees in prayer, asking God how his work might be carried on. He had better ask some sensible, intelligent man.

John Bright is sixty-eight years old. He is a Quaker and a manufacturer. He has been in public life for a quarter of a century, and his name is associated with all the reformatory measures that have been carried through Parliament in all that time.

The Hudson, between New York City and Jersey City, is to be tunneled. The tunnel will be twenty-six feet in width and twenty-four feet in height, with a double track of heavy steel rails and capable of passing four hundred trains every twenty-four hours.

The progress of Catholicism in the United States has induced the Pope to arrange a complete organization of the Hierarchy and a more intimate union with Rome. New bishoprics are shortly to be created and the Society of Jesus will be more satisfactorily organized.

It pleased the Baptists to see Rev. E. E. Hale and Dr. Minor participate in the farewell honors offered Dr. Lorimer. If there was any theological surrendering on this occasion, it was not done by the Baptists. The progress of certain liberals to-day is in going backwards.

The "iron clad" tramp law was justly killed by the Senate Judiciary Committee. We have no sympathy with professional tramps, but we are rejoiced to know that Massachusetts has refused to pattern after the inhuman legislation on this question which some New England States are guilty of.

The American Church at Rome, built to be an undenominational place of worship for Americans, is in reality a Catholic church. What there is American in eight white-robed priests, an altar surmounted by a cross, an organist wearing a long white gown, and the reading of the Catholic service, we fail to see.

A large number of unemployed clergy of the English Church in this country talk seriously of giving up the ministry and undertaking secular work for a living. When the money stops coming, men cease working for the Lord, just as though he was a man. A call must be accompanied with a salary in order to be obeyed.

William Dawson is the name of a poor Quaker shoemaker in Spiceland, Indiana, who is an excellent astronomer, who has made his own telescope, constructed his own observatory, and for twenty years has furnished the Smithsonian Institute and the Meteorological Bureau with valuable statistics and observations.

In the Catholic Directory the total Catholic population of this country is set down as six million three hundred and seventy-five thousand six hundred and thirty. There are still five Protestants to one Catholic in the United States, so that war between the two divisions of Christians will not take place at present.

Thirty-six years ago the island of Samoa had a population of thirty-four thousand, all of whom were barbarians. Now the population numbers eighty thousand, the majority of whom are Christians. In the theological seminary are sixty students, and twenty missionaries are sent every year to the neighboring islands.

Does it seem possible that the author of "Thanatopsis" wrote in this manner? "Take away the blessing of the advent of the life of Jesus and the blessings purchased by his death, in what an abyss of guilt would man have been left! It would seem to be blotting the sun out of the heavens—to leave our system of worlds in chaos, frost, and darkness."

There is no law of divorce in France. Such a law was enacted in 1792 and remained in force until the Restoration. Something like thirty thousand divorces a year were granted under it. The present law admits only of separation. In cases of crime, the want of a divorce law is severely felt, and a strenuous effort is about to be made to procure the enactment of such a law.

An attempt is being made in California to grow Egyptian wheat. It yields enormously and furnishes good food for man and beast. One grower raised eighty bushels to the acre. It does not grow in ears, but is gathered from the top of the stalk like broom corn, only in more condensed form. It grows to a less height than Indian corn, branches out more, and has on each branch a large head containing hundreds of seed.

Mr. Moody says: "Love God above everything else, and then you can go to the theatre all you want to. If a man or woman could go to the theatre for the glory of God, they might go every night in the week. And so about playing cards. A person could play all he had a mind to if he loved God—if he could do it with a clear conscience, and without its interfering with his communion with God." All this simply means that, if you love God, you will not go to the theatre or play cards. Well, we shall enjoy Janau-schek and cribbage just the same, for all Mr. Moody has said.

A new church has recently been organized in this city under the name of the Metropolitan Independent Church. The parties interested have secured Union Hall for a term of years, should it prove of sufficient capacity. Services are to be commenced the first Sunday of September next. Rev. H. A. Shorey, who was associated with Mr. Murray on the Golden Rule, has received a unanimous call to settle over the society. Independent churches in Boston have not proved successful heretofore, but there are independent people enough in this city to support a church outside of denominational walls, if they only will. But a Christian Church is not an independent church.

Communications.

INFINITE INTELLIGENCE.

EDITOR INDEX:—

If something—it matters not what we call it nor how we define it—has always existed (which no one will dispute), it never commenced to produce; and if it never commenced to produce, it never produced anything original; and if it never produced anything original, there is infinite intelligence.

What is infinite intelligence? How is it constituted? Is it possessed by one transcendent, infinite personality, or is it not?

It can be shown, as it often has been shown, that there can be no infinite personality, in the popularly accepted meaning of the term.

Personality implies a form, and form is limited; therefore the intelligence, of which the form is a reservoir, must be limited. Consequently there can be no infinite personality, in the generally understood sense of the term. An infinite personality is an infinite finite; a contradiction; an absurdity; a non-entity. That which is limited in space cannot be unlimited in intelligence. In other words, there can be no infinite personality to whom all things or anything is external.

We can proceed from finite intelligence, of which we have experience, to infinite intelligence, of which we have no experience, and obtain an adequate conception of the one from the other. The aggregate intelligence of man, although finite, is immense, and no one of the personalities to whom it attaches can possess it all; or the intelligence of no one of the personalities can equal that of the aggregate of personalities. Now let us consider the intelligence and the personalities extended to infinity, and we have infinite intelligence distributed through an infinity of personalities,—an intelligence which no personality, nor any finite number of personalities, can ever possess in its entirety, but of which each and every one is forever appropriating more and more. While the intelligence of each and every one is forever expanding, the aggregate intelligence, being infinite, is eternally the same,—constituting the infinite intelligence of an infinite personality to which nothing is external.

BOSTON.

E. B. B.

"SOCIAL REFORM."

My thoughts have been arrested by an article in THE INDEX of April 24, by Albert Warren Kelsey, on "Social Reform." He makes the old-time assertion that if all the wealth of the Rothschilds was divided among the working classes, in less than a month the knaves would have garnered in the greatest share. Even so; but it is not the present wealth of the world which should be divided. It is the wealth of the future, that which is yet to be created, which should find a more equal and just distribution, a distribution so just that a Rothschild or a Stewart would become an impossibility.

An industrial system which allows the growth of our Stewarts and Vanderbilts necessitates the opposite growth of the tramp. The former is naturally and inevitably followed by the latter. Justice will be reached when such distribution is made of wealth, as it is produced, as to wipe out both of these unnatural growths of extreme wealth and poverty.

He goes on to say that the way to elevate the position of the working classes is not by reducing hours of labor, or raising the wages of employees, but by educating the youth of the country in such a way as to enable them to realize the advantages of fixed habits, good principles, and high character. Under the present system of long hours and low wages, I fail to see how the youth of our land, or any land, are to acquire a realizing sense of these advantages.

After men and women, and especially little children, have worked their ten or twelve hours a day, what vital force is left for either mental or moral education? Common-sense must reply that without time to devote to this education it becomes a myth, a mere dream; minds and bodies must come to such a work not entirely exhausted with a long day of toil, or the result will be failure. And until the working classes have time, the all-needful in accomplishing any great work, it is useless to talk of their elevation.

On every hand this cry for more leisure confronts us. Humanity demands it by its birthright of a nature divine as well as human; the civilization of the nineteenth century demands it; and the machinery of the nineteenth century not only demands but justifies and makes it possible.

He cites the case of Socrates, in his rags and poverty the admiration of Athens. But Socrates was honored, not because of his rags and poverty, but in spite of them. In themselves they are not desirable, neither conducive to self-respect nor demanding respect from others. It takes a Socrates to make them respectable; and to prate to our working classes in the depths of their rags and poverty of what Socrates has done, saying, "Go thou and do likewise," is almost insulting.

Why, it takes the ages to make a Socrates, one of the bright stars which appears but once in the centuries. It is asking too much of the average man to rise above the influence of his surroundings; it is only the strong ones of the race who can do it.

Yours, for less hours and more wealth,

A SUBSCRIBER.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The colored churches of New Orleans number about fifty of all denominations. The following municipal order has been issued:—

To the preacher of — Church, on — Street:

Your attention is called to the following order:—

OFFICE CHIEF OF POLICE, {
April 22, 1879. }

TO ALL STATIONS:—

Commanding officers are hereby instructed to notify the preachers of the various colored churches in your precinct that services, whenever held, must terminate at ten o'clock P.M. Under no circumstances must they be allowed to hold services after that hour. Affidavits must be made against preachers violating this order for disturbing the peace.

By order of the Mayor,

T. N. BOYLAN, Chief of Police.

The sacred rights of the gambling-hells, the beer-saloons, and the dance-houses were not infringed by the order, it will be observed; but, as if by a patriarchal instinct, our Mayor closely watches the negro churches. Some good people who read THE INDEX are wondering why the negro exodus has taken place. The spirit of the order given is its origin. It is the effort of a race to assert its manhood and rights of citizenship, as written in the Constitution of the land. Should it not be a religious duty to assist the fugitives now going to the West?

Yours respectfully, EMERSON BENTLEY.

IT IS CURIOUS to learn that the "glass slipper" in Cinderella—of which from our youth upwards we never questioned the authenticity, though well aware that no one who was not a protégée of fairies would think of dancing in such an article—was not part of the original story, but has been due to a misunderstanding of a word used in the French version of the tale. The slipper, we have been told by a writer in the Sunday Times, supported by "Littre's Dictionary," was originally a slipper trimmed with a particular kind of rare fur, called in French pair, the fur of a creature of the weasel kind. But this fur not being known to ordinary French story-tellers, they spoke of a pantoufle de verre—a glass slipper—by a sort of unconscious pun. Certainly the new reading is far more creditable to the sagacity of Cinderella's god-mother, as a purveyor of comfortable clothes; for whatever magic power the glass slippers might have had of surviving a dance, it is impossible that they could have been comfortable to the feet, and must have resulted in all probability in serious corns.—London Spectator.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 " "	8 " "
" 26 " 51 " "	6 " "
" 52 " " " "	5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

Toledo, Ohio, Sept. 30, 1872.

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEINER.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publisher

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. OHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-ly, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MÜLLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.50 for one year, including postage, or 40 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Oheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. E. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Galtrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesab Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, E. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Farton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. E. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi LaSker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism," why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. OHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-ly, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 25 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a Se' sol. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; & Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogmas.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	1.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	5.00
The Blazing Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	6.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	3.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 1 vol.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTIER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	3.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.....	5.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	1.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DEQUARTEN (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 4 vols., each.....	1.00
Compromising.....	1.00
Adam Bede.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Bliss Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 3 vols.....	1.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wife and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformation of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	1.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GORTHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elektive Amicitie.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	1.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	1.50
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	3.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	1.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.). Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	3.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	1.50
Venetian Life.....	1.50
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel-lige.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy. A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.25
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.50
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerostatics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Diseases. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Glanville's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jew. Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into 2 vols. with Analysis and Introductions by J. J. Gifford, M.A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KNEER (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 3 vols.....	3.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 1 vol.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 1 vol.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	1.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays. Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	3.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	3.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	1.50
Representative Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	1.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MULLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swinging Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	6.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Faith, Doctrine, and Practical.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHILIPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Discoveries. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Sonnets, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expansion of Heaven.....	1.50
ROSBETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	4.50
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Huxley.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	3.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	6.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tarns.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	11.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Scottish Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fluke.....	1.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.35
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.50
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Roggarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	1.50
The Maine Woods.....	1.50
Cape Cod.....	1.50
Letters.....	1.50
A Week in Canada.....	1.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.). The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	1.50
On Sound.....	1.50
Radiant Heat.....	1.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Addresses before British Assoc. at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sings and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.50
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folk.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

251 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 8,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

M. J. SAVAGE'S NEW NOVEL,

Bluffton,

Describing in a very interesting way the processes of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical. 12mo. Price $1.50.

Also, by the same author,

The Religion of Evolution:

"An exposition of religion in the light of the most advanced science. A brave and reverent thinker."—London Inquirer. Price $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

UNITY.

A FORTNIGHTLY ORGAN OF

Freedom, Fellowship, and Character in Religion.

Editor, H. M. SIMMONS. Publishing Committee, ROBERT COLLYER, J. L. JONES, C. W. WENDT, J. C. LEARNED, W. C. GARNETT.

Vol. III., beginning March 1, 1879, will contain Robert Collyer's "Table Talk"; two series of articles on "The Liberal Preachers of America out of the Pulpit" (our Poets and Essayists), and "The Growth of Doctrine, or the Old-New Creed"; Unity Sunday-school Lessons, etc.

Price $1.50 a year. Clubs of 10 at $1.25.

ROOM 57, 75 MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW,

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher, 34 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

NORTHERN LITERATURE AND ART ROOMS

will immediately be opened in Boston by Miss Marie A. Brown, for the purpose of giving due prominence to the many beautiful productions of Sweden, Norway, Finland, and Denmark, comprising the literature, English translations and originals, illustrated works, views, photographs, portraits, and paintings and statuary of the most celebrated Northern artists. The "Rooms" will be elegant in all their appointments,—an attractive resort for all art-loving people and purchasers.

That it may become an international affair, Miss Brown invites all Americans and Scandinavians who are interested in the enterprise, and wish it success, to aid her efforts by subscribing the requisite fund. One thousand persons are desired who will each subscribe $10.00, for which Nadeschda, a poem by Runeberg, and a full set of The Surgeon's Stories, six historical novels by Topelius, as translated and published by her, will be sent them in return, as they are issued.

MARIE A. BROWN, P.O. Box 900, Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on new issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred B. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin, Lionel A. Trollope, Author of Supernatural Religion, M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine, G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn, AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-RELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Pre-existent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address B. F. UNDERWOOD, THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Sent to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. M. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 12 and 20, 1878.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. O. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament (in preparation). Price $3.50 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 232 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction by L. Maria Child. 266 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.25.

THE GHOSTS; Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. B. G. Ingersoll (his latest lectures). 372 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 243 pages. Price $1.25.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with Index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.50. Half calf, $6.00. Will be ready March 30.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.75, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME, ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By N. F. Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried...
E. C. WALKER.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE

OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.

2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 34 pp. Single copies, 5 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. . . . It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of mankind in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 22, 1879.

WHOLE NO. 491.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N.B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

THE TWENTY-SEVENTH annual meeting of the Progressive Friends will be held at Longwood, Pa., June 6.

MARCUS AURELIUS gives a needed lesson thus: "If thou wouldst have peace, busy thyself with but few things," said Democritus. We should rather say, Busy thyself with all that needs to be done and that belongs to thee as a member of the community."

THE PITTSBURGH Dispatch of May 12 states that the Mayor of that city had "decided" to "suppress" a lecture of Mr. Underwood on the preceding evening, under the Sunday law; but it turned out that he could not do it legally. However, a petty prosecution is threatened still.

IT IS STATED by the New York Herald, after gathering statistics, that a great diminution has taken place in the number of unemployed mechanics in that city. Three winters ago it contained sixty thousand idle men; there are now less than twelve thousand. Wages have indeed fallen from $4.50 to $2.50, and from $3.50 to $2.00. But laborers have accepted the situation, and are at work again. "During the winter of 1873 it was computed that a daily average of over twenty-five thousand men were idle in that city, and the number annually increased until it reached as high as sixty thousand; then fell again, until last year it was only about thirteen thousand," and now is about eleven thousand three hundred and ninety-five.

MR. EMERSON'S late address to the Debating Club of Harvard Divinity School (concluding the course in which we spoke on "The Final Appeal in Morals"), is thus noticed by the Christian Register of the 17th instant: "Mr. Emerson gave what we fear must be called a farewell lecture before the students of the Cambridge Divinity School on Monday, May 5; and many were the reminders of the famous epoch-making 'Address' of 1838. His present word was marked with his own beauty of thought and vigor of expression. The heat of the chapel oppressed him, but there was a pathetic eloquence in the pauses by which he seemed to recover himself. In some passages the old sweet tone overcame the huskiness, and the sentences came out sparkling like gems. He was obliged to omit a large portion of what will prove when printed a notable statement of the relation of his own life-work to the spiritual progress of the world. For centuries to come men will repeat the saying of this wise man, 'Unlovely is the life without God.'"

REFERRING to the Pocasset tragedy, the Boston Advertiser of May 12 said editorially: "Nothing in the Advent creed tends to uphold the deed. There is absolutely no connection between the murder and Adventism; the responsibility might as well be charged to that part of the universal faith of Christendom which holds to the doctrine of sacrifice." Very well; the "responsibility" is to be charged to "that part of the universal faith of Christendom which holds to the doctrine of sacrifice." That part is in the "Advent creed" also, and it "tends to uphold the deed." What becomes, then, of the Advertiser's asseveration that "there is absolutely no connection between the murder and Adventism"? All the truth it contains can be summed up in the statement that Adventism is no more responsible for the murder than any other form of Christianity. But the responsibility for the crime falls all the more heavily on essential Christianity itself. The hideousness lies in the very idea of "sacrifice"; and this Christendom sets in the forefront of its religion when it bows down before the sacrificial "Lamb of God."

TWO HUNDRED new members have joined the New York Society for Ethical Culture the past year, nearly doubling its membership. Standard Hall no longer accommodates the audiences, and next season the Society will occupy Chickering Hall. During the summer the Sunday meetings will be discontinued, but the philanthropic work in which the Society is engaged will go on. The secret of Dr. Adler's remarkable success is not fully explained by his unusual gifts as a public speaker, nor even by his beautiful, brave spirit of devotion to truth and righteousness; it lies even more, we believe, in his faith in organization, his executive ability, his indomitable industry and self-sacrifice, his controlling purpose to found institutions that shall outlast his own individual exertions. The spirit of Individualism has too long paralyzed the liberal movement, and rendered ineffective almost every attempt to found permanent societies. Workers are no less needed than thinkers, and it is the phenomenal combination of both qualities in Dr. Adler that is giving him great success where so many others have failed—a success not likely to be ephemeral. That liberalism is indeed beginning to pass out of the individualistic stage, and beginning to appreciate the necessity of institutions, is a conviction that gladdens us with new hopes of its future; and we rejoice unfeignedly in the promise of better things for the liberal cause contained in the example of this strong Society.

HOW UTTERLY untrue is the pretence that the infamous business described below is independent of the post-office system, and therefore needs no restriction by a wise and just postal law! To repeal the law of 1873, instead of amending it so as to guarantee the liberty of theorizing even on social questions, would be to break down all effective barriers against one of the worst crimes that curse society; and we reiterate with tenfold emphasis that to advocate "repeal" instead of "reform" in this matter is to advocate immoral legislation. Woe waits the party that takes that ground! The Boston Journal of May 9 says: "The crime of sending obscene matter through the mails is growing to be more dangerous to its perpetrators than housebreaking. Through the efforts of Mr. Anthony Comstock, another individual has been brought within the reach of the law, and his crimes cannot be made to appear the lighter, even by those who would set up the freedom of the press as a barricade from behind which the weapons of licentiousness might be used against public morals. Frank Johnson is the fellow's name, and this morning before United States Commissioner Hallett he waived examination and was held in $1500 for trial. He lives in Framingham, and though but eighteen years old is sufficiently precocious in crime to have rendered it necessary that a warning should be given him a year ago to discontinue this business. He failed to heed it, however, and will now doubtless receive the punishment which he deserves. A peculiarly atrocious feature of his work was that his advertisements were inserted almost exclusively in boys' papers, where under eight different aliases he invited children and youths to send for his horrible stuff. A year ago his father discovered what he was about, in Framingham, and prevented him from carrying on the business there. Then he hired a box in the Saxonville post-office, where letters intended for him were sent, and whither he went three or four times a week for his mail. After he began to advertise, a letter was sent him by Mr. Comstock from New York State, but, apparently suspecting something, he returned no answer. He, however, answered other letters sent him by the same gentleman from different parts of Massachusetts, in which he explained that a private detective was after him and that he had to be careful. It is a significant circumstance that the letter which drew from him an answer sufficient to criminate him was dated from a Massachusetts college. He undoubtedly has been a very bad boy, though his parents are respectable people, and he acknowledges all that Mr. Comstock charges against him."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N.Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. E. P. HALL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES E. BROWN.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUBERT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R.I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. F. ELSENTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. HORACE SEEVER.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 W. J. HARGREAVE.....Editor of "Freemason's Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N.Y.
 HON. R. S. MOOREHEAD.....Franklin, Mass.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS.....Mount Lebanon, N.Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST.....Rochester, N.Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON.....Tennady, N.Y.
 MISS SALLY HOLLY.....Lafayette, N.Y.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N.Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N.Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
F. E. ABBOT.....C. D. B. MILLS.

D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLET, Selma.
 Arizona.....JOHN ABBEY, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Milledgeville.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galena.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. O. MICHELER, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Hillsville.
 Louisiana.....ERNEST BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWYER, Boston.
 Michigan.....E. A. SCHUBERT, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. E. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. GEORGE, Warren.
 Ohio.....D. SPARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt.
 Pennsylvania.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 Rhode Island.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 South Carolina.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chatham.
 Tennessee.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Texas.....E. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Vermont.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Wyoming.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 N. B......N. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 N. B......NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....157 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
 SYRACUSE, N.Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
 ALBANY, N.Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 PASSAIC CITY, N.J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
 JACKSONVILLE, FLA.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.
 ROCHESTER, N.Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cole.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Resolved, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N.Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of; to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. MOSES HAYS, Rochester, N.Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-S. B. URBINO, West Newton, land, N.Y.
 Z. T. WATKINS, Syracuse, N.Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N.Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, Syracuse, N.Y. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, Mass.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mil-M. N. LADY, Albany, N.Y.
 HENRY A. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y. J. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N.J.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
 T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N.Y. D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
 E. P. UNDERWOOD, Thornhill, Mass. CHARLES ELLIS, Boston, Mass.
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. JOHN W. TRUESDELL, Syracuse, N.Y.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee, Wis. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N.Y.
 JOHN NILL, Watervliet, N.Y. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N.Y.
 E. A. SAWYER, Boston, Mass. W. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N.Y.
 THOS. DEGAN, Albany, N.Y. JOHN PREST, Albany, N.Y.
 JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N.Y. C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass. E. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Origin and Growth of Moral and Civil Law.

AN ESSAY READ TO THE LITERARY CLUB OF KINGS-TON, N.Y., MARCH 24, 1879.

BY CHARLES J. BUELL.

If we take even a hasty glance at the different groups, tribes, and nations of men who inhabit the earth, we shall see that they are in various stages of advancement. Some are very low in savagery while others are high in civilization; but between these extremes all shades are found, so that we might commence with the very lowest, and by almost imperceptible gradations advance to the highest. There would be no great leaps.

History shows us that the nations that are now civilized and enlightened have reached their present condition by a slow and tedious growth from a state of less enlightenment. England, France, Germany, and the other nations of Europe have risen from barbarism within a comparatively recent period. Greece, Rome, and Carthage grew into civilized states during the early part of the historic age; while Egypt, India, and China were considerably advanced at the earliest times of which we are able to find any record. Thus, as we trace civilization backward, we find it everywhere emerging from savagery, everywhere coming up from a lower condition. Civilizations die out, it is true. Many are the groups of people that have struggled on manfully from generation to generation, only to yield at last to unfavorable surroundings and return to the savagery from which they were rising; but with these cases we have nothing to do. They had to climb up before they could fall back.

We are therefore forced to the conclusion that, back of and beyond all that we can see, there was a time when mankind existed in a state of the very lowest savagery. How he came to be in that condition, whether he had developed to it from one still lower, as the evolutionists claim, or had fallen to it from comparative purity, is of no account in the following discussion. That he was there is undoubtedly true. We must study him there, if we would understand him.

Assuming mankind to have once existed in this savage state, without arts or sciences, government or society, without the family or any marriage custom, without morals or religion,—in short, without any form of organization,—the object of this essay is to discover, if possible, how the moral and civil laws that now govern society may have originated, and to trace them in their growth.

In the field of morals, as I understand it, belong all those relations that exist between man and the lower animals, all those relations that exist between each man and all other men; and, finally, all those relations that exist between each man and himself.

Self-preservation is often called the first law of Nature. All animals, even the very lowest, will make some effort to save their lives or avoid injury to their persons. This effort is comparatively feeble among the simplest organisms; but as we slowly ascend the trunk of the great tree of animal life, we find it growing and strengthening; and when we reach the highest branches the protection of self has become the strongest spur to action, in reality "the first law of Nature."

Just as all the members of the animal kingdom are found to have powerful instincts of self-preservation, so among all the higher animals do we find a strong attachment to offspring. With man, this is especially true. In the lowest stages of savagery, even before any marriage customs have grown up, and when the father, not knowing his own children, does little or nothing for their support, the human infant is nourished and cared for by its mother, until it is able, in some measure, to care for itself.

During this period, there grows up between the mother and her child a network of mutual relations that are, for the time, very powerful. Each is ready to assist in the protection of the other. If the child is attacked, the mother comes to its rescue; on the other hand, if the mother is in danger the child will show its willingness to help, though the aid it is able to give may be of very little value. This same network of mutual relations exists not only between the mother and her offspring, but also in a lesser degree between the children of the same mother, especially those that are not very widely separated by age.

As the children grow older, they leave those with whom they have heretofore been associated, and go out to shift for themselves as best they may. They see each other less often, and spend less of their time in each other's company than formerly. There now begins to take place a gradual loosening of the ties that bound them together in their early childhood. The older they grow and the less often they meet each other, the fewer and the weaker do these bonds become, until finally brother may meet brother, mother may meet child, and not recognize each other. This often takes place among civilized people like ourselves. Much more would it be likely to happen among savage tribes.

But though mother and child, brother and sister, may separate in this way from each other, yet they are by no means cut off from intercourse with other members of the tribe. As the ties that bound them to their old associates were gradually loosening, other ties binding them to new companions were gradually forming. These ties would be of a slightly different nature from the former ones. They would be rather bonds of friendship than of kinship. They would be tribal instead of family relations. In some instances, these friendly and tribal relations might not be so strong as had been the family ties; yet, in other cases, they might bind even more powerfully than the ties of blood had done.

Now, so long as nothing happens to create hatred between members of the same tribe, who of course must be accustomed to meet often, they will have at least some little respect for each other's lives, and will be ready to help each other as occasion may demand. The very fact that they have reached so high a state as the tribal relation, presupposes, on the part of each, some little regard for the welfare of all the others. Without this, even the lowest forms of tribal society would be impossible. Indeed, this is quite noticeable among the lower animals, and its origin must certainly be sought below the level of the human species.

But among savages these primitive friendships and weak altruistic relations often hang upon slender threads. They cannot stand the test of trial or of changed conditions. The slightest cause will often bring a deadly hatred; and when a savage is angered, he tries to mete out a punishment that shall be fully equal to the injury he has received. Personal revenge is his only means of redress; and he pursues it with a determination that has little regard for consequences. Human life is of less value than the revenge he seeks.

Here, then, is the gist of the matter. So long as nothing happened to cause trouble between our two savages they respected each other's lives and general welfare; but upon the first provocation they became deadly enemies. The faintest germs of the moral laws are here discernible; but they hold only among friends. Strangers and enemies have no rights that the savage is bound to respect. In fact, he has not yet reached the stage when even the idea of such rights can have taken any definite shape in his mind.

But as the savage gradually improves his physical condition, and slowly comes to have a wider acquaintance with things around him and with other men, faint impressions begin to force themselves upon his mind that, if he fail to have any regard for the rights of others, they also need have no regard for his. If he attempt to take the life of an enemy who has offended him, and the enemy, not being very willing to have his life taken, gives blow for blow, so that he comes out of the fray with a broken leg or a badly bruised head, he will learn a powerful moral lesson. Experiences of this kind undoubtedly have a restraining influence on those savage men who have felt their full force. They begin to see that others can fight too, and that punishment may very probably follow an attempt to take the life of another. In time there will begin to grow up a sentiment against the taking of human life. Reformers will appear who will teach that it is wrong to take the life of another; and, though their followers may be few and their ideas far from clear, yet they will have an influence. The law of self-preservation will thus be instrumental in giving birth to the moral law, "Thou shalt not kill." But we are not to suppose that this law appeared at first in all its breadth. It had force only among members of the same tribe, where a mutual acquaintance or a common interest had a restraining influence, or else where fear of being badly beaten held back the would-be murderer. In the early stages of its growth, therefore, this moral law should have read, "Thou shalt not attempt to kill thy friends, nor a man who is stronger than thyself."

It was not until the human race had advanced far beyond the savage state, that this moral law against murder came to have anything like a general meaning. And even to-day, among the most highly civilized people in the world, it has not reached its full development. We, too, have less regard for the lives of strangers than of friends. We mourn more deeply the loss of one near kinsman than we do when a whole ship-load of unknown persons sink to the bottom of the ocean. In short, we feel the loss of a person just in proportion to what we consider him worth to ourselves and to mankind; and we make our commandment—"Thou shalt not kill"—broad and binding just in proportion to our love and respect for those who are the victims of its violation. It is not thought very wicked to kill a few Indians, or negroes, or Chinese, even though they may be entirely innocent of any heinous crime. Boys think nothing of killing toads, or snakes, or birds, merely for the fun of the thing. And even in England to-day, grave members of parliament, who have felt themselves morally bound to pass laws prohibiting scientists from making vivisections, experience no rebukings of conscience when they impale a living animal on a fish-hook, and watch its death agony as it slowly yields up its life in the interest of "sport." The human race has yet to learn that it is wrong to wantonly take the life of even the lowest living thing.

There undoubtedly are cases where it would not be wrong to take even human life. Any one may justly take life in self-defence. Thus the law of self-preservation, which has taught mankind not to attempt to kill, bids us disregard that teaching when our own lives are in danger.

As a moral sentiment against the taking of life within the tribe was probably the first to take anything like definite form in the mind of primitive man, so a sentiment against stealing would be likely to grow up next in order. There is quite a close connection between life and that which sustains life. Hence we are not surprised to see an equally close relation existing between the moral sentiment that would protect the life of the man and the moral sentiment that would protect his right to what he had accumulated that his life might be sustained.

If a hungry man had spent a long time in catching a fish or in killing an animal, and some one should try to take it from him, he would undoubtedly resist. He would think, even though he might not be able to put the thought into words, "Thou shouldst not steal this food from me. I got it. It is mine." But if he should see a weaker man, ten minutes afterward, with something that he wanted, he would be very likely to take it from him; and if he could secure anything that belonged to some one else, without being caught at it, he would be still more likely to forget all about his law against stealing. But these ideas of property would grow. Slowly but surely it would come to be recognized that each one should have the right to enjoy what he had got by his own efforts. As soon as most of the members of the tribe had reached this conclusion, then the moral law would emerge, embodied in some such words as these: "Thou shalt not steal." Any one who persisted in stealing would come to be considered a bad person; though the degree of his badness would depend largely upon the strength of the sentiment against stealing. It would also depend somewhat upon the rank of the person who stole, and upon the rank of the person from whom the thing was stolen. It would be considered worse to steal from a leader than from an obscure member of the tribe, whatever might be the rank of the thief; while the thief himself would be likely to receive a punishment whose severity would be about in proportion to the lowness of his rank. To steal from strangers or from enemies would be considered no crime at all.

As more advancement was made, other moral laws would slowly crystallize into definite shape. A sentiment against lying and cheating would grow up, and would make itself heard in some such form as this: "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor"; or in the Buddhist commandment, which enjoins upon all "not to tell lies." As marriage customs became somewhat established, there would, at the same time, grow up a sentiment against their violation. The commandment, "Thou shalt not commit adultery," would begin to be heard. The advice to children, "Honor thy father and thy mother," could not well have taken any definite form until after the family had been developed; for, before that, no child could know who his father was, that he might honor him. Among the Acadians, the laws especially enjoined upon children to honor their mothers.

In time it would come to be seen that it is not only wrong to take from another what belongs to him and to no one else, but also that it is not right even to have a wish to do so; and hence would arise the sentiment so well expressed in the words, "Thou shalt not covet . . . anything that is thy neighbor's," a sentiment which is the outgrowth of quite an advanced stage of progress; and one which does not seem, even yet, to have made the slightest impression upon the minds of Socialists, Communists, and others who would like to reorganize society.

Last of all, when civilization had become quite thoroughly established, when men had reached fairly just ideas as to the rights of others,—then there would begin to be heard that grand and noble sentiment, a sentiment that is not the exclusive property of any race, or time, or religious system, a sentiment that has been uttered by all the world's great teachers from Confucius to Christ: "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

As the different tribes, among whom these simple moral laws for the protection of life and property had originated, became more and more firmly convinced of their rightness and necessity, they would begin to make them the nucleus of a civil code. Things that the natural moral law had heretofore considered wrong, the civil law would now call crimes; and suitable punishments would be provided. Indeed, there must grow up a moral sentiment against certain practices that are seen to be evil, before any necessity can be felt for a civil law to regulate the evil.

As time went on, other customs would be incorporated into the code,—other laws would be added for the better enforcement of these few fundamental principles, until quite a body of laws would be the result. Nearly all the enactments that are on our statute books to-day are the offspring of the few that form the nucleus of every code in the world.

People who were in the habit of attributing whatever befell them to some supernatural agency would, in time, come to consider these laws of divine origin. They would become a part of their sacred writings, and the god of the tribe would be honored with their authorship. In this way they would become embodied in the religious creed of the people, and might be handed down to future generations as the commands of God.

Thus, from small and obscure beginnings, have the moral and civil laws of the world grown up. Slowly and with much difficulty they first gained a foothold. Gradually, as mankind advanced, new laws appeared, and the old ones became more binding in their influence. Including at first under their protection only a few who were bound together by the ties of kindred or friendship, they have silently but surely been growing broader and more comprehensive; and at some time, perhaps in the far future, we may hope to see them reaching around the earth, and protecting every living being in his natural, inalienable rights.

Every steamship that ploughs the ocean, every railway that girds the earth with its iron bands, every wire and every cable that bring messages from distant countries, every invention of the human brain that helps to better the condition of mankind, every fact learned and every theory established, each helps to draw all thinking beings nearer together; each does its little part to bring about that long-waited-for, that ever-hoped-for time, when the Confucian law of reciprocity shall be comprehended in all its breadth and beauty and grandeur, and when every man shall learn "not to do to others what he would not that others should do to him."

ROSENDALE, N. Y.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

ESTHETIC DIFFERENCES SUBJECTIVE.

BY WILEY BRITTON.

No. VII.

Next to the eye, the ear is the most important member in the hierarchy of the senses for receiving impressions from the external world that arouse aesthetic feelings.

The external ear, called the auricle, with its ridges and channel-like depressions, may be regarded as helical in shape; and its funnel-shaped inner cavity opens immediately into the auditory canal, a tube about an inch long, somewhat bent, irregular in width, and leading to the internal apparatus of the ear. The principal office of the auricle is to collect the air-waves and conduct them through its inner cavity to the auditory canal, which receives them somewhat condensed and conveys them to the tympanum. We come next to the tympanum, a delicate membrane spread over the inner extremity of the auditory canal, like a skin stretched over the head of a drum. The tympanic cavity is a hollow space behind the tympanum, and is penetrated by a long trumpet-shaped duct called the Eustachian tube. And the ossicles of the tympanum form a chain of small movable bones, perfectly articulated with one another, with one end of the chain attached to the tympanum and the other end of it attached to the fenestra ovalis, or open window. As has already been pointed out in the introductory remarks to this paper, the acoustical function of these bones is to transmit the vibrations of the tympanum to the reservoir of fluid in the labyrinth. If the labyrinth be separated from the inner parts of the ear, it may be divided into three principal divisions, the vestibule, semicircular canals, and the cochlea, the whole apparatus measuring less than an inch in length. The vestibule is an ovoid cavity in the middle portion of the labyrinth, from the upper part of which proceed the three tubes called the semicircular canals; and the lower part of the labyrinth terminates in a spiral canal which makes two and a half turns, and is called the cochlea from its resemblance to the shell of the common garden snail. These cavities are all surrounded by osseous structures, lined with delicate membranes, and are filled by a transparent watery fluid which bathes the extremities of the auditory nerve. The auditory nerve issues from the base of the brain, and, after passing through several openings of the petrous bone, penetrates the labyrinth near its centre, and then divides into two principal branches, one of which passes into the vestibule and the other into the cochlea. We cannot stop to describe the arrange and distribution of the numerous filaments into which these two principal branches of the auditory nerve divide after they pass into the vestibule and cochlea; but may add that each filament at its terminal expansion is supplied with vesicular matter, extremely sensitive.

Now it is well known that a sensation of sound depends upon the number of air-waves that takes effect upon the auditory nerve in a given time, provided this number is not too great or too small. For instance, with the average human ear, if less than sixteen air-waves follow one another in a second of time, there is no excitation of the auditory nerve, and, consequently, no sensation of sound. Nor does a sensation of sound arise when the number of air-waves exceeds sixty-four thousand in a second, and probably thirty thousand in most ears; perhaps because the human ear is furnished with no special organ capable of vibrating in unison with undulations of such great rapidity. The upper and lower limits, however, at which a given number of vibrations per second produce a sensation of sound are not likely quite the same in the organs of hearing of any two individuals. With different races and different individuals of the same race, different amounts or intensities in stimulation, or different sizes of air-waves, are required to excite the auditory nerves. No doubt almost every one has heard of the acuteness of hearing of the American Indian; and of the Veddahs, Calmucks, and many other uncivilized races, we are told that by putting their ears to the ground they receive auditory impressions from distant moving objects that fail to produce a sensation of sound in the ear of the civilized man. For the purpose of illustrating the different grades of sensibility to sound, some experiments were made upon the students in the University of Edinburgh a few years ago, by sounding a set of small organ pipes of great acuteness of tone; and these experiments tend to show that note-deafness and pitch-deafness, like the defects of vision called Daltonism, are much more common than is generally supposed. Commencing with the gravest note, which was distinctly heard by the entire class, the tones gradually rose, and presently the shrill piping became silent to one and then to another of the students until it was inaudible to all, thus showing that they were not all equally sensible to sounds of the same pitch. There are also instances of persons whose auditory nerves are readily excited by ordinary sounds, but are not excited by certain acute sounds, such as the chirp of a grasshopper, the cry of a bat, and the notes of certain birds. How are we to account for the different degrees of sensibility to sound thus exhibited by different individuals? If we take two strings of equal length and tension, and capable of yielding tones of a given pitch or of sounding the same note, and place them a few inches asunder and strike one of them a smart blow, the air-waves caused by its vibrations will produce a sympathetic vibration in the untouched string. Again, if two tuning forks which sound the same note be placed a few inches apart and we strike one of them, the other fork will also shortly commence sounding. Well, the anatomical arrangement of the nervous terminations in the ampulla and vestibular sacs leaves scarcely any room to doubt but that they have natural periods of vibration of their own, like the string and tuning fork, and like them may also be set into sympathetic vibration by the waves of sound conducted to them through the different media of the ear. But the velocity of the sound-waves must correspond to the natural periods of vibration of the nervous terminations above mentioned, or there will be no perception of sound in the auditory centre. The perception of musical tone, however, is now regarded as the result of sympathetic vibrations of fibres in Corti's organs in the cochlea. This wonderful apparatus, which was discovered by the Marchese Corti, is not a harp of a thousand strings, but one of three thousand strings, with each string possessing a period of vibration different from the others, like the strings of a piano. As no string in a seven-octave piano can be set into sympathetic vibration by less than thirty-three undulations per second, or by more than four thousand two hundred and twenty-four per second, so in some ears the strings or fibres in Corti's organs are not so arranged as to respond to vibrations outside these limits. We thus see that it is possible for a person with ears of a certain structure to enjoy the music of a six-octave piano and yet be incapable of enjoying the music of a seven-octave piano, if the piece is so written as to require the playing of notes of the highest pitch in the treble. Now, if we regard Corti's organ as a musical instrument in the ear, and the complicated arrangement of its microscopic strings or fibres seems to make it answer to one, then it would appear that this instrument ranges an octave or so higher in some ears than in others, just the same as one musical instrument may be one octave or two octaves, etc., higher than another.

Though we do not deny to the tactile sense an aesthetic function, it is an unimportant factor of that phase of the subject which we have under consideration. That the sense of touch is more delicate in some than in others, will perhaps be admitted by every one who has given any thought to the physiology of the sense of feeling. But this greater delicacy of touch always occurs in thin-skinned persons, and is no doubt due to the fact that in the epidermis of such persons the peripheral terminations of the nerves of sensation or feeling are more exposed to external excitants than they are in the epidermis of thick-skinned persons.

While we do not speak of odors or perfumes as beautiful, yet we think that smell is entitled to a place in the aesthetic hierarchy of the senses. Here, too, there are different degrees of sensibility in different individuals. An odor that has the delicacy of bouquet to one person is overpowering in strength to another. There are some persons, too, whose olfactory nerves are insensible to certain odors, and whose sense of smell is otherwise in a perfectly normal condition. The delight or disgust which an odorous substance produces, no doubt in most cases depends upon habit, custom, bodily conditions, and the physical environment. For instance, tallow, which by its rancid smell is disgusting to us, is eagerly sought by the Laplander. And then, among ourselves, a perfume that is agreeable to one person is disagreeable to another; as, for example, valerian and musk. The æsthetic office of smell may, I think, be regarded as mostly representative; that is, a given perfume revives in imagination a representation of the object yielding it. We are not likely to smell the perfume of a rose or lily-of-the-valley without thinking of the flower yielding it.

The persistence of an odor when its almost infinitesimally small particles take effect on the olfactory nerve will probably make it impracticable ever to produce æsthetic combinations, or harmonies and contrasts of odors, by instruments, after the manner of musical harmonies.

In regard to the sense of taste, we need only remark in passing that strictly speaking its sensations cannot properly be classed as æsthetic. But delicious fruits and red wines may become æsthetic factors in painting and poetry.

We may now pass to the consideration of the constitutional state of the individual as affecting his æsthetic conceptions. Views of tropical scenery which were regarded by the traveller almost with indifference have, when photographed or painted and seen under a different nervous diathesis, aroused in him a glow of delight. To persons under the influence of opium, according to the accounts of De Quincey, space seems to swell, so that buildings and landscapes are exhibited to them "in proportions so vast as the bodily eye is not fitted to receive." In a state of high nutrition too, that is when the blood is rich and rapidly circulated, there can be hardly a doubt but that objects classed as æsthetic produce visual impressions of greater vividness than when the blood is poor and circulates languidly. Tints upon the autumn forest, clouds with silvery linings, lovely sun-sets, or the grandest auroral displays arouse in the aged and debilitated, whose vital activities are not vigorous, but feeble waves of æsthetic pleasure.

Persons in the habit of using opium give it as their experience that when under the influence of this powerful nervous stimulant they enjoy music which was previously unenjoyed. Again, those fond of the opera sometimes just before going to hear a celebrated prima-donna, take a cup of fine-flavored coffee to give tone to their nervous systems and greater vividness to their imaginative and discriminative faculties. On the other hand, there are agents called anesthetics and narcotics, which, when swallowed, inhaled, or injected into the system, soon produce stupor or insensibility; so that no matter how intense the external stimulation, vivid sensations are not aroused. Natural anesthetics, too, carbonic acid urea, also produce stupor, when they exist in certain quantities in the blood.

If an object is moving towards or away from us, or we are moving towards or away from the object, we receive visual impressions slightly different from what we should receive were subject and object both stationary. It is well known that the fixed stars vary in color from the red end of the spectrum to the violet end of it. And some of the results of spectrum analysis seem to make it at least highly probable that the motion of a star towards or away from the earth at a velocity of a million or so miles per day would give it an apparent color different from what it would present were it stationary relatively to us. The wave-lengths of light emanating from a star receding from the earth at a velocity of more than two million miles per day can hardly be the same as if the star were approaching the earth at the same velocity. In short, it was thought that those stars emitting rays of light which produced in us the sensation we term red were receding from us at immense velocities, and that those emitting rays of light which produce the sensation of violet are approaching us at immense velocities. Though the colors of the stars are now generally believed to be due to the chemical constitution of the atmospheres which surround them, still their spectra probably show something of the directions in which they are moving through space. A statue which at a given distance we are delighted to look upon on account of its elegance of form becomes less and less an object of beauty if it is gradually moved away from us, or we gradually move away from it. Again, of two persons whose ears are equally sensible to musical tones, let one rapidly approach a band playing an air, and the other as rapidly move away from it, and it is obvious that they cannot both give the same experience as to the merits of the piece.

Since it is now known that vibration and sensation travel through the nerves at the rate of about thirty-two yards per second, future investigations may show that size of the individual in many instances slightly modifies his æsthetic conceptions. A child's conception of space is not the same as an adult's. Whoever will recall the earliest recollections of his childhood will, I think, be able to testify that the distance of a mile seemed greater, and the hills and mountains higher, than during adult life. And if we turn to the lower forms of life, we know that a creature which has to run many times its own length to pass over the space which another creature passes over at a single stride cannot have the same conception of distance as the latter. It is the same in regard to time. The sixteen taps per second which produce in us a sensation of tone of the lowest pitch would probably produce in a whale a sensation of tone of a much higher pitch. Hence it seems clear that our consciousness of a given time cannot be the same as a whale's consciousness of the same length of time. Or to take the other extreme: the average human ear is insensible to vibrations of upwards of thirty thousand per second. This number of vibrations per second would probably produce in a gnat, whose wings it is estimated make ten to fifteen thousand vibrations per second, the sensation of tone of a very low pitch. That is, the consciousness of a second to us would be to the consciousness of a gnat something like two to four hours. And should we go into the world of microscopic life, we would find the conceptions of time and space still more strongly contrasted.

In the search with the telescope for faint and distant stars, and in transit observations, there has been discovered amongst astronomers and astronomical observers what is now known as the "personal equation." When the rays of light coming from a star strike the retinas of two observers at the same instant, the star is not referred by them both to the same place in the heavens. If we suppose the star to be moving in a given direction relatively to the earth, it will always be referred by one observer to a position somewhat in advance of the position to which it is referred by the other observer. The true explanation of the phenomenon I suppose is this: When the rays of light from the star decompose the unstable matter in the ends of the rods and cones of the retinas of the two observers, and thus set up a molecular change in the nervous fibres of each of their optic nerves, the molecular change thus set up travels more rapidly through the optic nerve to the brain in the one case than in the other. Experiments made with the electric spark would also probably show that a given phenomenon may be telegraphed to the brain perceptibly quicker through certain nervous organizations than through others. While the personal equation here referred to does not probably affect our æsthetic conceptions to any appreciable extent, it seemed to deserve a passing notice, along with the structural, functional etc., differences with which we have had to deal.

If then no two persons are equally sensible to the same amount of a given stimulation, the thought will naturally arise in the minds of most, is not an absolute standard of æsthetic taste impossible? It must be admitted that the foregoing argument points to such a conclusion; and, we may add, without necessarily weakening our faith in the scientific treatment of æsthetics.

Finally, we conclude that while it is impossible to establish an absolute standard of æsthetic taste, we think we may accept as a temporary and relative standard the judgment of the highest cultured and most discriminative of those who have paid greatest attention to æsthetics, feeling convinced that along with higher intellectual and social development grander æsthetic conceptions will also arise.

THE BLOODY SWEAT OF JESUS.

MR. ABBOT:—

I believe I have found how originated the statement (in Luke xxii., 44) that Jesus, in his passion, sweat as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground.

Please note the following particulars:—

1.

Before the composition of the Luke Gospel it was a common belief of the Romans that when calamity had impended over Rome, images of their gods had sweat, and blood had appeared miraculously, sometimes dropping in showers upon the ground.

In De Divinatione, l. 48, Cicero represents his brother Quintus as saying:—

"Quid cum Cumis Apollo sudavit, Capuæ Victoria? quid ortus androgyni? nonne fatale quoddam monstrum fuit? quid, quod fluvius atratus sanguine fluxit? quid, cum, exspe lapidum, sanguinis nonnumquam, terre interdum, quondam etiam lactis limber defluxit? . . . nonne et haruspices ea responderunt, quæ evenerunt, et in Sibyllis libris eadem reperta prædictiones sunt?" [TRANSLATION: Again, when the image of Apollo sweat at Cumæ and the image of Victory sweat at Capuæ, and when the hermaphrodite was born,—did not these things forebode horrible disaster? And when the Tiber flowed blackened with blood, and when a shower, often of stones, sometimes of blood, more rarely of earth, and at one time even of milk, has fallen, . . . did not the soothsayers, on being consulted, announce the events that afterwards occurred, and were not the same predictions found in the books of the Sibyl?]

In De Div. l. 44, Quintus is represented as saying: "Idem [Sibylla] contra ostenta nihil disputat, exponitque initio belli Marci et deorum simulacra sudavisse, et sanguinem fluxisse, et discississe cælum." [TRANSLATION: Sibylla does not in the least discredit prodigies, and he reports that at the beginning of the Maric war the images of the gods sweat, and blood flowed, and the heavens were opened.]

In De Div. II., 27, Cicero represents himself as saying: "Sanguinem pluisse senatui nuntiatum est; atratum etiam fluvium fluxisse sanguine; deorum sudasse simulacra." [TRANSLATION: It was announced to the senate that blood had rained down, that the Tiber had flowed blackened with blood, and that the images of the gods had sweat.]

In De Natura Deorum II., 5, Balbus, a stoic, is represented as saying: "Cleanthes quidem noster quatuor de causis dixit in animis hominum informat deorum esse notiones. . . Tertiam, quæ terret animos fulminibus, tempestatibus, . . . et guttis imbrum quasi cruentis." [TRANSLATION: Our Cleanthes, indeed, affirms that ideas of the gods are formed in the minds of men by four causes. . . The third is the terror with which the mind is af-fectected by thunders, tempests, . . . and rain-drops as it were of blood.]

2.

Paul calls Jesus (II. Corin. iv., 4) "the image of God"; and, in imitation of Paul, the author of the Epistle to the Colossians calls Jesus (l., 15) "the image of the invisible God."

3.

The Luke Gospel is Pauline in character; and to the writer of Luke xxii., 44, the doctrine that Jesus was the image of God must have been familiar.

4.

To this writer, acquainted with the Mark and Matthew accounts of Jesus' passion, the belief that when great calamity had been impending over Rome, images of the Roman gods had sweat, and blood had appeared miraculously, might very naturally suggest the thought that when great calamity was impending over the perfect image of the true God and over his disciples and over Jerusalem and over Palestine at large, this image sweat, and blood appeared miraculously. Moreover, to such a writer, with his views of Nature, the blood would have been suggested as flowing from the body of Jesus in union with the sweat.

5.

While the thought in Luke xxii., 44, could readily have been suggested by the designated Roman belief as commonly held, there are in the De Divinatione some sentences which would have especially tended to suggest it to a Pauline reader of our first or second century.

After the passage in which Cicero says it was announced to the senate that blood had rained down, that the Tiber had flowed blackened with blood, and that the images of the gods had sweat, he adds, "num censes his nuntius Thales, aut Anaxagoram, aut quemquam physicum crediturum fuisse? nec enim sanguis, nec sudor, nisi e corpore est." [TRANSLATION: Do you imagine that Thales or Anaxagoras or any other natural philosopher would have believed such announcements? For neither blood nor sweat proceeds from anything else but the animal body.] Here Cicero himself unites blood and sweat in thought, in so far as to emphasize their having the animal body for their common source.

Again: when it was stated that "at the beginning of the Maric war the images of the gods sweat, and blood flowed," the meaning (as is shown by the other quoted passages) was that blood flowed in the streams, but linguistically it was possible for the meaning to be that blood flowed from the images of the gods.

Each of these two passages, therefore, would have tended to suggest the flowing of both blood and sweat from the body of Jesus. There is, however, one fact which, taken in this connection, tends strongly to prove that the writer of Luke xxii., 44, was indebted to Cicero for the thought it contains. I refer to the great similarity in expression between the Luke statement and a clause in one of my Cicero quotations.

The Luke statement is, "His sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground"; the Cicero clause is "guttis imbrum quasi cruentis" ("rain-drops as it were bloody," or, "of blood"). In both we have "drops," and "as it were," and "bloody" or "of blood." In the Luke statement we have "falling down to the ground," and this is implied by the Cicero clause in the word "rain."

I ask, therefore, whether the thought of the bloody sweat of Jesus was not most probably suggested by the Roman belief which I have designated, and by this as presented by Cicero.

The above explanation of the manner in which Luke xxii., 44, originated has led to my finding, as I believe, what is meant both by the statement in John xix., 34, that when the dead body of Jesus, still hanging upon the cross, was pierced, "immediately there came out blood and water," and also by the following remarkable words from I. John v.: "This is the comer by water and blood, Jesus the Christ; not in the water only, but in the water and in the blood: and the spirit is that which beareth witness, because the spirit is truth. For there are three that bear witness, the spirit, and the water, and the blood; and these three agree in one."

The meaning is that the liquid in the heart, arteries, and veins of Jesus, during the whole of his pre-crucifixion life on earth, had been composed partly of human blood and partly of water: partly of human blood, because he was a man; partly of water, because he was the Son of God. The piercing of Jesus' dead body and the standing of the beloved disciple by the cross were devised in order to assign an opportunity for showing and testifying to the nature of this liquid. The piercing led to the representation of Jesus as the paschal lamb, and this led in turn to representing that he died when the paschal lamb was killed. That this is the true explanation of these two important passages, I hope to show at some future time.

CHARLES H. GODDARD.

MARIETTA, Ohio, May 6, 1879.

THE CRISIS.

EDITOR INDEX:—

"The infirmities of her friends are the worst enemies of Truth," observed a critic in 1866, alluding to the indifference manifested by the followers of Comte toward Jesus of Nazareth. But this is not the most deplorable result of the reactionary tendencies of modern thought. The Being, God, is likewise ignored; the soul is classed with mythical fancies, and not only the moralities, but the moral instinct is labelled "false."

It is doubtless true that in many instances these negations have their affirmative side; that the denial has a core of fervent sincerity and conviction, carrying with it a spiritual significance; and that what is called an atheistical extreme, may oftener than otherwise be but the rejection of a definition which answers not to the deeper consciousness of a more expansive life. But substitution is the true method of reform, unless our latter-day wisdom has discovered a more excellent way; for anciently the prophet could say, "I came not to destroy, but to fulfill."

Positivism, liberal Christianity, and liberalism have each in its turn essayed the rôle of arbiter of human destiny. How successfully they have met the falsities and tyrannies bequeathed us by medieval times I do not propose to discuss; but their conduct toward each other and their internal dissensions surely savor of the odium theologicum. What is to be done? Possess one's soul in patience? Rome or Reason, are we told? But the manifestos of reason,—are they not on a par nearly with the Papal Syllabus and the double-tongued mystifying edicts of expiring Orthodoxy? Come impeached metaphysics; Channing, Orthodoxy; and Abbot, Christianity. The world now looks for the outcome of this series of assaults on the faith of our fathers. What is more certain than that science is materialistic, liberal Christianity hollow-sounding, and liberalism tangential? "Theism or Atheism, and Science holds the scales," is what the positivist asserts. "Christ or the Creeds, and the New Testament the standard," says the liberal Christian. "Freedom or Servitude, and the Liberal League platform our only safety," thunders the liberalist. Then our attention is directed to the Consensus of the Competent; but how to reconcile it with the "divine right to bolt," presents a query to many minds. Science, Religion, and the State are certainly Nature's auxiliaries in diffusing a knowledge and securing the observance of the laws; but according to THE INDEX editorials, these servants of Dame Nature are "no better than they should be."

But there is the "Free Religious Association," does not that satisfy us? Now Unitarianism is a body-guard of liberal scholarship, and Free Religion of freethought,—grand worthy objects both. But as the American Unitarian Association is Unitarianism, so is the Liberal League Free Religion. It was the opinion of THE INDEX once that the "Liberal League was planned to be the right arm or executive branch of the free religious movement. "Unitarianism is nothing till it becomes an organized idea." "Ideas rule at last." That I believe to be true; but that sentence proves itself a two-edged sword to-day; for is it not plain that until the new movement "organizes its ideas, it will remain to the world an object of mingled suspicion, fear, and contempt, notwithstanding the individual genius and worth of some of its adherents"? Does not liberalism throw a pound to doubt, and a penny to faith? and has it not been taught that "a conscience for freedom is the point to be carried"; that "liberty means anti-Christianity"; that "the moral principle demanded by the occasion is devotion to the principle that in America the Church and State shall be absolutely separate"? Ideas will rule at last.

But suppose Church and State become absolutely separate, and a tendency "from civilisation to barbarism" reveals itself! What is the nucleus about which the influences, forces, of the time are to assemble and become organized? Science identifies itself with truth; Christianity with religion; and liberalism with freedom. But is positivism positive, is Christianity Christian, is liberalism liberal? The one forbids us to look beyond phenomena, sequences, the other beyond Christ and the Bible, and the other beyond anti-Christianity and anti-Comstock. I am a Materialist; I am a Spiritualist; I am a Positivist; I am a Christian; I am a man: these are the clashing declarations one hears every day of his life. THE INDEX hand oscillates between Yes and No. "Sic et Non"; the Register reflects the practical agnosticism of the times; the Investigator will not come out of its mammoth cave of materialism; and the Alliance is but a new-fledged Unitarianism. "For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who will prepare himself for the battle"?

The split in the Liberal League I regard as disastrous; but a similar fate impends over the Unitarian body. Its heterogeneous claimants must under it into two separate spheres, if they are not soon crystallized into one by a change of basis from the letter to the spirit. The Eastern half will write the name of God in its lessened sphere, but will overlay it with traditional symbolism and the Hebrew Scripture. The Western half will write beautiful motives and common-sense maxims on the periphery of its sphere, leaving the centre a blank. We shall soon hear again from his "lectureship" seated on his mediæval throne.

The Liberal League has yet a career before it, a divine mission to fulfill; and "the champion fanatic," THE INDEX, must still lead its hosts to battle and to victory,—the extravagancies of individualism notwithstanding. The present status of the cause is no doubt a caricature of its ideal, but we must have faith that liberalism will yet tide over the difficulties and appear in the not distant future on the side of truth and the right. The time is not far off when in America this movement will hold the same relation to the ecclesiastical party that dissent does to episcopacy in England. But the League must organize its ideas and outstrip its adversary in temperance and good works, in systematic purpose, in noble deeds. The conscience of the land needs to be aroused from its slumber,—a miracle as great as was ever wrought. There is more infidelity within the Church than without it, notwithstanding the vagaries which disfigure liberalism. The two greatest curses of our time are bigotry and levity. Preach manhood to the one and holiness to the other; but to all God, the centre and source of every virtue and every good. God, whose three emanations are truth, justice, love, the blessed holy Trinity forever and forever.

Manhood! That word pitches the keynote of the gospel for ages to come. The time is approaching when those whose faith rests on Scripture-texts will appear on history's page, as Pilate inquiring, "What is truth," and as Agrippa saying, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a"—man.

Let deeds of justice and of ruth
Fling their halo o'er fleeting time,
And mingling form the soul of truth,
The murmur of the spheræ chime.

So let us then undo the wrong
Nor blind our own nor others' eyes,
But join the noble martyr throng
In love's eternal sacrifice.

T. W. CURTIS.

MEADVILLE, Pa., April 15, 1879.

CZARS IN A PANIC.

Nicholas I. was a man of much firmer stuff than his son, the present Czar, yet the abortive conspiracy of Petroschenki in 1848, coupled with the revolutions which were then raging all over the continent, completely unnerved him. The chief of the Third Section, or secret police department, was at that time Prince Alexis Orloff,—a man remarkable alike for his haughtiness, his rabid detestation of liberal ideas, and his Herculean stature, to which were added strength and courage of no common sort. He once collared an insurgent peasant in the midst of his comrades, and killed him with a single blow from his fist. Orloff's secretary was General Dusselt, a man of infamous character and brutal manners, whom Russian society loathed; and these two men received a commission to terrorize the Empire,—a task in which they succeeded thoroughly. All that they did, however, fell short of what the brooding, affrighted Czar wished to do. Nicholas proposed that all the universities should be abolished, and he could only be coaxed out of this idea by Orloff's assurance that a reduction of the number of students to three hundred in each university would make these places manageable and answer the same purpose. There seemed to have come over Nicholas a madness like that of Tiberius. Alone in his palace, like the Roman tyrant in his island, he did not, after the manner of the latter, consult astrologers about the future; but he abandoned himself to the practices of a mystical religiousness, and grew more and more rooted in the idea that while thus brooding solitary he was living in communion with his God. His hypochondriacal fancies delighted in those passages from the Old Testament where the "Lord's anointed" are described as ruthlessly exterminating all who opposed them; and he was hardened against pity because he conceived it would be a derogation from his semi-divine majesty to show weakness. It was in keeping with the belief in his heavenly investiture that to the end of his life he walked and drove about unattended through the streets of St. Petersburg, having made up his mind that if an assassin tried to murder him Providence would interpose in his favor. Latterly he forbade that anybody should salute him in his walks; not because he was tired of public homage, but because he objected to the French fashion of bowing by lifting the hat as too frivolous. What he liked was the deeply deferential folding of the hands across the breast and the salaam almost to the ground which is the old Russian and Oriental style. Sometimes he would come across a peasant, who, disregarding the police injunctions, would flatten himself out on all fours with his forehead in the mud; then he would say graciously, "God be with you, my son," and make the sign of the cross with three fingers as if he were officiating pontifically. There is no doubt that the unfortunate prince was crazed. A despot who could have ladies arrested as they were leaving a ball at his palace and taken to a police-station to be whipped for imprudent words spoken in his hearing must have lost all sense of his being a mere human creature. But there was also in the manner of Nicholas' death—whether he perished by his own hand or died broken-hearted at the success of the Anglo-French armies in the Crimea—the evidence of a pride which had swollen till it became a disease. It is said that in his last moments he repeated to his heir, whom he had long suspected of liberalism and kept under close police supervision, "Remember my lessons!"

In Alexander II. the human fibre has always been more tender than in his father. He is not cruel, and, though mystically inclined, has never got further than bewilderment in trying to guess what exact measure of authority he has derived from heaven. He mutters sacred words as if they were learned by heart, and accepts acknowledgments of his divine right with a puzzled air, as if trying to read in the eyes of his courtiers whether they truly believe what they are saying. He has visited France where monarchs are held of little account; and England, where the Queen enjoys a popularity and a worship which are not evolved from terrorism, but from a system just the opposite. Then he has been to Germany, and has learned from his uncles and nephews that the prestige of an emperor must depend on the number of his regiments. All this has confused him; and, to make matters worse, he has been distracted by the conflicting counsels of statesmen, soldiers, and of princes, his sons,—some urging him in one direction, some in another, and all trying to explain in fashions of their own the long and dismal wall that has arisen from a people cruelly misgoverned and persecuted. Perhaps the Czar has really not been able to understand what this means. The other day, after his life had been attempted, he fainted away; and it is said that he has hardly yet recovered from a state of nervous prostration. This alone would seem to show that he was not fully aware of the alarming condition to which his empire has come. Had it been otherwise, Alexander was scarcely the man to court assassination by walking alone in a public thoroughfare; for, though brave like all his race, he is not foolhardy. He is too much beloved by his family and by his personal entourage to run any danger of foul play within his own palace, like Peter III., Paul, and so many other czars of the past; and, knowing this, he would have probably chosen to live in quasi seclusion until the present agitation had subsided, had he suspected how serious this agitation was. Alexander, however, has always been indebted for his views to secretaries, who made up for him a daily journal of extracts culled from different papers, and there is no reason to believe that these extracts were selected so as to lay the whole unpleasant truth before the imperial reader; perhaps also the Czar was partially instructed by private correspondence from Germany, but here again it is doubtful whether he always got the sort of information that would open his eyes. His state at this moment must be a pitiable one, for a sovereign undecieved is one who feels that he has been duped. Under such circumstances, the fear is that a man of weakened mind like Alexander may give way to the impulses of unreasoning terror, and try to cope in the readiest way with evils which demand to be met with the coolest judgment, based upon the most accurate discernment of hard facts.—Pall Mall Gazette.

AFTER reading a brilliant leader in a metropolitan religious journal, against the high schools as nurseries of "indisposition to manual labor," we kept our eyes open for half a day. In the space of two hours, without going out of our accustomed resorts, we found one fine student running an elevator in the afternoon, and studying his lesson in the pauses. Another wide-awake fellow spent his off-hours in a butter-factory, relieving his parents from his support. Two beautiful girls were found selling bread over the counter of their father's bakery, where their brother, a Harvard student, relieved them at vacation. The two last high-school lady-principals of these young people are now engaged in educating two large families of younger brothers and sisters, and enforcing such economies upon themselves as would even satisfy the longing of our Atlantic editor. Every city and town in New England is crowded with bright and active young people, the rising hope of the town, who are graduates of the public schools. To shy stones in at the school-house windows, after the style of this and other public journals, betrays either a lack of knowledge of what is going on among American children, or a disposition to reckless criticism, which is, itself, an evil of no common order.—N. E. Journal of Education.

Poetry.

LIFE.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Is life one dreary round of care?
Do thorns lie thickest in the way,
And pains our sweetest joys impair
From night to night and day to day?
Do flattering hopes awake our trust
And beck'ning garlands win the eye
Only to trail anon in dust,
Unmindful of the tear or sigh?
Aye, more than this: misfortune's wrath
At times with lightning cleaves the sky,
Thus shedding woe along the path
Our inmost strongholds to defy.
But is this all? Beyond the wreck,
Wait not the depths of gold and pearl
All heaven's dome with stars to deck
And fields of holiest calm unfurl?
Then what if hours are racked with pain
And baffling waves against us roll?
If steadfast loyalty remain,
Triumphant song shall fill the soul.

J. P. T.

FACTS AND FANCIES.

FIRST VOICE.

How like an egg is life,
A fresh-laid egg;
Its lines so smooth and fair,
So full of richness rare,
With nutrient sweetness rife—
How like an egg!

SECOND VOICE.

Yes, fair upon its face,
Like Easter egg;
Without, so gayly decked,
With countless colors flecked;
Within, an empty space—
A hollow egg!

—Transcript.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though ordered on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 17.

Wm. O. Mack, $5.20; F. H. Buchanan, $3.20; Jacob Betthelmer, $1.50; S. C. Mason, $5.40; M. S. Fecheimer, $3; Chas. C. Lane, $5.20; Mrs. C. Neyman, $5; Mrs. Kate N. Doggett, $2.50; C. H. Goddard, $2; Lizzie Richards, $1; J. Campbell, $2; A. H. Leppere, 40 cents; Mrs. E. R. Francis, $3.20; Jos. A. Stevens, $3.20; E. R. Brown, $3.20; Dr. W. S. Leach, 3.25; Wm. Keith, $1.50; Wm. Ellis, $3.60; Chas. Richardson, $3.20; H. F. Badger, $1.50; Jas. Shearer, $3; Wm. Newman, $3; C. A. Greenleaf, $5; A. G. Boynton, $3.20; F. Goodfellow, $5; C. R. Woodward, $4; E. M. Watson, $2; W. H. Young, $6; B. F. Hughes, $5; W. Rogers, $2; S. L. Hill, $125.00; D. B. Tripp, $3.20; W. S. Cunningham, $5; John Campbell, $1; Verein Vorwärts, $3.20; J. H. Clark, $3.20; Paul Zimmerman, $3.20; Peter B. Brigham, $3.20; F. M. Ehrlicher, $1.50; Geo. Henshaw, $10; A. Hale, $3.20; B. Myrick, 60 cents; E. C. Darling, $1.60; Jno. Watson, 75 cents.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 22, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street; J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

MR. HILL'S RESIGNATION.

Mr. Samuel L. Hill, who not only lent the influence of his honored name to the National Liberal League at the time of its inception, but generously contributed a hundred dollars to the Centennial Congress fund, forwards to us for publication a copy of the following letter of resignation:—

FLORENCE, Mass., May 16, 1879.

MR. A. L. RAWSON, Secretary National Liberal League, 34 Bond Street, New York:

Dear Sir,—I hereby resign the Vice-Presidency and membership of the National Liberal League, because it stands for "repeal" of the postal law of 1873, rather than for its "reform."

This duty would have been earlier performed but for poor health, which prevented due attention to the matter.

Yours respectfully,

SAMUEL L. HILL.

THE "POWER of the press" is often decanted upon, but probably no journal in a free country aspires to such power as this: "The chief Nihilist organ, which is clandestinely distributed throughout Russia, is entitled Semla i Svaboda (country and liberty), and is printed in a quarto form. It claims to hold jurisdiction over everybody. It warns, threatens, and pardons right and left, and gives prompt and accurate information respecting the carrying out of its sentences, which are those of the revolutionary committee. It is found everywhere. It is laid by unseen hands on the master's table, is unexpectedly discovered among the banker's registers, and the imperial councillor is astonished to meet with it among his papers; it is slipped furtively between the sheets of conservative journals,—in a word, it finds its way, as if by enchantment, on the tables of the cafés, and into the private houses of rich and poor. It appears twice a month, and advertises for subscribers. It mentions the Nihilist pamphlets which have appeared, and informs the public that others bearing this or that title are shortly to be published, the prices of which are given; but the editor contents himself with designating the place at which they can be bought as the 'well-known house.' On the day after General Mesentzeff was murdered, the Semla i Svaboda appeared illustrated with a large cartoon, in which the general was represented as lying in state, the first page being occupied with a kind of proclamation giving the reasons which had decided the committee to pronounce sentence of death upon him. Three days after the secret printing offices in St. Petersburg were discovered by the Russian police, a man was assassinated at Moscow, but who he was and why he had been murdered remained a mystery till the Semla i Svaboda published the following notice: 'On the 9th of March the traitor Reinstein was executed in the Moscow Hotel, at Moscow. Reinstein, a Polish Jew, disclosed to the police the whereabouts of two of the printing offices. We have, therefore, killed him. The government need not boast of having made any great discovery. It has found nothing of any value. The editor's portfolio being seized has certainly caused us some inconvenience, but as we never sign any of our articles the affair has no further importance. It will be useless to offer gold; traitors will not be found in our ranks. Reinstein was only an agent—a newspaper distributor. We have at our command such considerable sums of money that we can resist all attempts at bribery. The execution of Mesentzeff cost us six thousand roubles, Krapotkin nearly as much; nevertheless, we still possess four hundred thousand roubles for the accomplishment of our work.'

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Eighth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held at their office, No. 35 Monroe Street, Toledo, Ohio, on Saturday, June 7, 1879, at 2:30 P.M., for the hearing of the annual reports, the election of Directors for the ensuing year, and the transaction of any other business that may come before the meeting.

F. E. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The twelfth annual meeting of the Free Religious Association will be held in Boston on the 29th and 30th of May.

The Association will hold its opening session for business (election of officers, hearing of reports, etc.) at Union Hall, in the Young Men's Christian Union Building, on Boylston Street, at 7.45 o'clock, Thursday evening, the 29th.

The Convention on Friday, the 30th, will be held in Parker Memorial Hall, corner of Berkeley and Appleton Streets, with sessions at 10.30 A.M. and 3 P.M.

The new President, Prof. Adler, is to preside, and at one of the sessions will make a special address giving his views of the "Practical Needs of Free Religion." An essay is to be given by John W. Chadwick, on "Theological and Rational Ethics." Among other speakers expected are M. J. Savage and F. E. Abbot, of Boston, G. E. Gordon, of Milwaukee, C. D. B. Mills, of Syracuse, and F. A. Hinckley, of Providence.

On Friday evening, the Association will have its Social Festival in Union Hall, at which Col. T. W. Higginson will preside.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

THE SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON.

Rev. Mr. Hunting and "F. S. C." continue on another page of this issue the discussion on the Consensus of the Competent. It evidently needs to be discussed until the supremely important principle covered by that phrase is at least understood. The phrase is new, but the principle itself is not new at all except in the form of statement; it has been unconsciously acted upon, more or less, from the very birth of human society, and is constantly illustrated not only in the history of science, but also in the history of popular government in all its forms. What the world needs is to understand clearly what it has been doing all these long centuries. It is like Molière's hero, who "talked prose" all his life and was astonished at discovering the fact. All we seek to do is to analyze and formulate the world's experience, and express it in the form of a philosophical principle available for common use. It is precisely for lack of such a philosophical formula that so much confusion prevails on social subjects, leading to wild, crude, and ignorant theories, and enabling moral quacks to victimize the gullible multitude.

Now we cannot undertake to give a set answer to all Mr. Hunting's numerous questions. He has not given sufficient attention to what we have said, in numerous long and carefully written articles, to make his questions pertinent. All we can do is to beg him to read those articles with a little more care, and he will find his questions fully answered already.

The Consensus of the Competent is simply the agreement of those who know,—not of those who imagine they know when they do not, but of those who really know. The distinction between real knowledge and fancied knowledge has got to be made before anything can be well done. Is there no difference between the fool and the wise man? Is there no test of real knowledge? If there is, what is it? How has it happened that mankind have actually accumulated a vast mass of real knowledge called "science," dissent from which is recognized as "ignorance" by all except the ignorant themselves? These are questions to which consistent Individualism can find no answer. It takes something else than "private judgment" to serve as the test of real knowledge. What is this something else? When it has been discovered, it will prove to be that which we have called the Consensus of the Competent: the name is not essential, but the thing named is.

With regard to the communication of "F. S. C.," it is proper to state that we have not named Josiah Warren, or anybody else, as the peculiar representative of Individualism; we deal with principles here, not with individuals. Here are some definitions:—

1. CONSISTENT INDIVIDUALISM is logical and practical adhesion to the principle of the final and supreme authority of "private judgment" in thought and conduct both, and the strictly consequent refusal to admit the existence anywhere of a right to hold the individual responsible or accountable for anything he may think, say, or do. If there are any persons who hold this principle, they are consistent Individualists; if not, there are none who deserve that epithet.

2. INCONSISTENT INDIVIDUALISM, or SEMI-INDIVIDUALISM, affirms on the one hand the principle just stated, but couples it on the other with the limitation that no individual shall infringe on the equal rights of other individuals. It is inconsistent because this limitation is impossible, if the principle it limits is true. Who has the right to impose it? Not society, for the principle declares "private judgment" superior to the judgment of society; not any one individual, for the principle declares every other individual independent of him. We repeat—who has the right to impose that limitation on any individual that chooses to disregard it? Whatever limit is placed upon the principle must derive its justification from some source equal in authority to the principle itself. But the principle is that "private judgment" is final and supreme; if there should exist any other authority equal to it, then "private judgment" could not be final and supreme. Hence to affirm the general principle of Individualism, yet limit, frustrate, and defeat it by such a contradictory restriction, is to say yes and no in one breath, and forfeit all claim to the respectful consideration of thinkers.

3. SCIENTIFIC LIBERALISM is logical and practical adhesion to the principle that Reason is the final and sovereign authority in thought and conduct both, and for the individual and society both. This law of the Sovereignty of Reason is given in the common nature of all rational beings, as such. From this one ultimate principle, rooted in and ordained by the Nature of Things, six great and coordinate but derivative principles follow:—

(1.) That every mature rational being has the right to govern himself by his own reason in all that concerns himself alone, as an individual. This is the right of "private judgment" or individual self-government—the law of individual rational existence.

(2.) That no rational being has the right to extend this government over others—i.e., no right to encroach upon them by force or fraud. This is the "limitation" of the right of "private judgment"—the law of individual non-aggression.

(3.) That every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his right of self-government. This is the right of individual self-defence, the "seven-shooter doctrine"—the law of resistance to wrong.

(4.) That the community of all rational beings has the right to govern itself by its own common reason in all that concerns itself alone, as a community. This is the right of social existence and self-government—the law of universal reason.

(5.) That the community of all rational beings has no right to extend this government so as to encroach upon the liberty of any rational being in what concerns himself alone, as an individual. This is the law of social non-aggression.

(6.) That the community of all rational beings has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its right of self-government. This is the right of social self-defence—the right of revolution, as against tyrants, and the right of self-protection, as against criminals—the law of individual responsibility to universal reason, as interpreted by the Consensus of the Competent.

These six principles, three relating to the individual and three to society, and constituting really only three parallel applications of the one simple, undivided principle of the Sovereignty of Reason in all human affairs, set forth the natural relations of "private judgment" and "universal reason" in a form which we think cannot be successfully controverted. These principles are not in the slightest degree invalidated by showing (what is perfectly true, and what we have explicitly stated again and again) that the Consensus of the Competent has changed from age to age, condemning in a later period what it approved in an earlier one, and vice versa. To admit this is simply to say that humanity is progressive, that it learns by experience, that it becomes civilized only by degrees.

Human fallibility is not to be escaped from by any device—by "private judgment" least of all. The one great, central, radical defect of Individualism is that it is utterly unable to justify the limitation which its inconsistent expounders attach to the principle of "private judgment," which they at the same time declare to be supreme and final, yet pretend to restrict by a limitation which immediately overthrows their own declaration. They have got to give up either the principle or the limitation. If there is any Individualist who desires to arrive at clearness and consistency here, let him begin by concentrating his attention on this point. Let him seriously and honestly ask himself whence he gets that limitation. Does he get it from the right of "private judgment"? If so, how? But if not, then whence comes it? Let him puzzle out for himself an answer to these questions that will stand examination, and not waste his time in cavilling at answers which he cannot possibly understand until he has wrestled manfully with the difficulties of his own position. No more vital or fundamental problem was ever raised than this; it challenges the attention of every hardy thinker, not only because of its profound scientific bearings, but even more because of its important social and moral applications. To earnest and resolute and robust minds, whether now on one side or the other of lately disputed issues, we recommend a patient and sincere study of the questions now put to Individualism. For the transfer of final and supreme sovereignty from "private judgment" to "universal reason," already accomplished by Science in her adoption of the scientific method, portends a far greater and deeper revolution of human thought than was ever wrought by the much-vaunted Protestant Reformation.

THEOLOGY AT HARVARD AGAIN.

In a previous article I spoke of the effort that is being made to increase and strengthen the Faculty of the Divinity School at Cambridge. I noted the stress laid on the principle of mental liberty in the appeal which has been issued in behalf of this movement, and yet had to note also the fact that liberty was and must be necessarily hampered so long as the school is pledged by its aims and methods to graduate ministers of the Christian religion. While most heartily wishing the success of the school in every effort towards a larger liberty and a more complete range of study, I could not help seeing, too, that this attempt could not bring us to the much-desired goal of a really scientific school of theology, and that it would be unfortunate if we were to be deluded with the idea that it would. In this article I wish to offer some remarks on the kind of theological school that would be in place at Harvard, and which not a few of the friends of the college, as I believe, hope yet to see established there.

It is much, indeed, that there should be a free and unsectarian school of theological study as regards the sects and divisions of Christianity. This certainly is a great gain over those seminaries for the preparation of ministers which require subscription to some denominational creed at the outset, and whose whole course of study is arranged with reference to turning out ministers of that particular creed. But it cannot have escaped the notice of thoughtful observers of the times, that the theological problems which have been pushed to the front for consideration and discussion to-day have comparatively little concern with the differences of creed which separate the Christian sects from one another, but rather are problems which concern the very foundation of Christianity itself,—aye, even of religion and ethics. Theological study takes a much broader sweep to-day than the circuit that bounds the petty divisions of belief in Christendom. These divisions sink into insignificance before the questions which, not a crude and petulant scepticism, but science, now puts before all Christian believers,—as, How did Christianity arise? Was its origin in kind unlike that of other religions? How is it related to other religions? What is the source and sustenance of religion? What the foundation of the Moral Law? What the true working power of religion in human society to-day? Are there any religious beliefs and institutions that can claim anything more than a human origin and authority? Is the Bible anything more than a human literature? Where is the real criterion for belief and practice? Must not the belief that Jesus was more than a fallible man be classed with the legendary superstitions rife in all mythological religions, whereby heroic human characters were depicted as more than mortal?

It is questions of this sort that science is presenting to Christian believers of all creeds. And is there any way to meet them except by applying to their solution the strict scientific method? Science, we may be sure, will not be satisfied with the answers obtained from any school where it is assumed at the outset that Christianity is an exceptional faith among the religions of the world. No solution can satisfy the spirit that puts these questions—and it is the enlightened spirit of the age—which does not utterly discard the bias of all theological assumptions and trust itself wholly to the required tests of science; namely, accurate observation of all the facts and accurate and logical generalization from the facts. In other words, we want a school for the full, free, scientific study of religion.

And this is the kind of department for theological study that ought to be attached to Harvard University. Nothing short of this can meet the claims of the college to be an unsectarian institution. And nothing short of this can meet its new and honorable ambition to be a complete university,—keeping step with the progress of the freest and most enlightened scholarship. Only in such a school, I may add, can students get the training to which President Eliot refers as soon to be demanded when he says, "We are rapidly approaching the time when the untrammelled study of theology in a university, as a noble branch of learning, will be the most natural—I had almost said the only respectable—way of preparing for the ministry." When theology at Harvard shall come to be regarded as "a noble branch of learning," when it shall cease to be a mere provincial phase of supernaturalism and shall be considered as coincident with the whole science of man's religious nature and history, then shall we have a theological department at Cambridge in fit keeping both with the traditions and aspirations of the place.

It is, perhaps, too much to hope that the present effort in behalf of the Divinity School will effect much or anything in this direction; but the object may be commended to the serious consideration of the honorable committee who are making the present appeal for funds. I would ask them to put the question to their own minds and consciences, whether they can by any other method justify and make real their own noble words in behalf of intellectual liberty. To descend to particulars, would they approve of the appointment to a professorship of the Hebrew Language, Literature, and Religion, such a man as Prof. Felix Adler; or to a chair of Comparative Religion, Samuel Johnson? If they had the power, would they summon and set to work there, without regard to their special creeds, such scholars as Whitney and Max Müller and Renan? Names like these last may not indeed be secured to honor the college catalogue. But younger men are following the footsteps of these scholars,—men learned, able, earnest, and free. Will the college honor itself and them by giving them free room to inquire, think, and express themselves?

W. J. P.

THE LAW GIVING WOMEN THE RIGHT TO VOTE IN THE ELECTION OF SCHOOL OFFICERS.

The Legislature of Massachusetts have taken a most important step in acceding the right of suffrage to women in the election of school committees, and it is of great consequence that it should be considered in all its bearings, and that women should understand the provisions of the law, and be prepared to exercise the function and fulfil the duty now before them.

Whatever influence this act may have upon the broader question of equal suffrage for men and women, it is an undoubted fact that this measure was petitioned for, and the petition both advocated and granted, in the interests of the schools. Gentlemen appeared at the hearing and voted for it in the Legislature on this ground, who are not committed to the full measure of suffrage. It should therefore be regarded especially in this light, and every woman should ask herself what is the condition of education in her own town, and whether she cannot so use this new power as to perpetuate the good that is accomplished or to rectify the evil that exists.

Although apparently a small part of political power is thus placed in woman's hands, it is really a very important one. The choice of governor or senator may show more immediate results for good or evil to-day, but the choice of the school committee, affecting as it will the whole character of education, and, through that, of the coming generation, will have far-reaching results, which will be most sensibly felt in the future. Who does not know a New England town in which the labor of some school-committee man—very often the liberal minister—has really moulded the schools, and through them the character of the children of the town, so that a superior character for intelligence and morals has been generally conceded to them? The work of Theodore Parker in West Roxbury, and of Dr. Levi Leonard of Dublin, N.H., are well-known examples of this result. But where such powers for good are not concentrated in one person, it needs the united influence of the best men and women to keep the schools as good as they ought to be.

It has been thought that women need not and will not exert themselves to vote and so directly influence the election of school committees, where their composition is altogether satisfactory and the schools are doing well. But this is a misconception of duty. If the town is already blessed with an efficient and faithful committee, it is not necessary to change it, even to put women on the board at once, unless such an addition can be well made and welcomed; but it is important to strengthen the hands and hearts engaged in such work, and the emphatic declaration of appreciation of the service already rendered, by a large vote of the intelligent women of the town, would be a most graceful and encouraging compliment.

The voting for school committee must and should be largely, not voting for measures, but for persons. Very few citizens have such acquaintance with systems of education or methods in schools that they can judge wisely of the details of school work, and it does not help matters to form bigoted partisans for or against corporeal punishment, or the conduct of religious exercises in schools, or the programme of studies to be pursued; but every one can learn enough of the character of their fellow-townsmen to judge whether they are working for the interests of the schools or to forward some personal object of their own. Vote for the best men, and if you are not satisfied with their measures, let there be abundant and intelligent discussion of them; but do not trust a noisy, empty demagogue who flatters your pet prejudices that he may secure a stepping-stone to higher offices, or the power of awarding lucrative contracts.

But in order not only to select men, but to bring a public opinion to bear upon them which will sustain wise measures or reform foolish ones, the greatest amount of intelligent acquaintance with the actual condition and work of the schools is also desirable. Criticism is precious; fault-finding is pernicious. Of all the adverse criticism of public schools that I have heard in my lifetime, I should think at least three-quarters came from those who had never sat through a session of a public school, and who judged only by common gossip or uninvestigated complaints. Every woman-voter should make a point to read the annual reports of the superintendent; they are not dull reading, and in their spirited discussion of the questions which are really important in education, they throw great light upon the practical difficulties which outsiders understand so little. I have heard intelligent men make statements in regard to the general state of affairs at the South which an hour's reading of General Eaton's masterly reports of the Bureau of Education would have corrected at once.

The law as it now stands is by no means all that its friends could wish for, and many women will be deterred from taking advantage of its provisions by a sense of injustice in the unequal terms on which men and women vote even on these restricted questions, and others from feeling that they must take a great deal of trouble for a very small amount of power. But—in the first place—the provisions of the law are not so harsh and unequal as they appear on a first reading, and much that seems arbitrary is absolutely necessary to secure a full and exact registration,—the first requisite for a fair exercise of suffrage.

I cannot now go into a full explanation of the law, but the Woman's Suffrage Association are about to issue a circular prepared by able lawyers, which will give all the information requisite on this point. Every woman should give it careful study.

In the second place, the best means of securing a revision and amendment of the law is to manifest sufficient interest in the schools, to take pains to vote even at the expense of some inconvenience and trouble to oneself.

I hope that those persons who are interested in this subject will consider it as the especial work of the months intervening before the election, to bring together the intelligent women of their own towns for discussion of this subject, and for bringing out by concerted action the strength of the community at the elections.

It will not revolutionize the State or the Church or the family; but I believe it will be the beginning of a new influence and interest in education which will come as gently as the spring and bear as good fruit. We must put up with a few east winds and chilling blasts, but seed-time and harvest will not fail.

It is especially proper that free-religious women should not fall in their duty in this matter, since it is on education that we rely mainly to remove the evils of superstition and bigotry from the land. How needful that work is, the late tragedy at Pocasset with its painful revelations gives us new reason to feel. We thank the Legislature of Massachusetts for the new power of good which it has put into our hands.

E. D. C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Garibaldi is seventy-three.

Freeman out—Abrahamed Abraham.

Kentucky sighs for the whipping-post.

One American city boasts seven suicides in a day.

A recent earthquake in Persia destroyed twenty villages.

There are one hundred thousand insane persons in Russia.

The first name given the piano was the hammer-harpichord.

There are forty-four American firms doing business in Japan.

Ohio had nineteen hundred and ninety-seven divorces last year.

A Russian proverb says: "God is too high; the Czar is too far off."

Ice is manufactured in Tennessee and Georgia at one cent per pound.

Eight lawyers and eight physicians were patients at the Washingtonian Home last year.

The United Presbyterians give an average of seventy-eight cents per member to foreign missions.

Immigration is increasing. Eighteen thousand more arrived at New York last year than the year before.

The Hungarian Academy of Sciences has published at its own expense G. H. Lewes' History of Philosophy.

Twenty say that Talmage will lie and did lie, and twenty-five say he won't and didn't. Vindicated by five majority.

Geneva will not allow the Bible used in her schools. The law requires that the instruction be strictly secular.

The American Sunday School Union reports one thousand and eighty-seven new schools established during the past year.

Seventeen students in the Agricultural College at Sapporo, Japan, have lately been received into the Methodist Church there.

Eight Mormon girls have married colored men within the last twelve months. There is not much prejudice against color in Utah.

Four hundred million meteors are said to fall upon the earth annually. The average weight of these shooting stars is less than a pound.

Rev. E. E. Hale, of this city, will have been pastor of the South Congregational Society for twenty-five years on the first Sunday of next October.

A new work by George Eliot, written and prepared for the press some time ago, is soon to be issued. It is called Impressions of Theophrastus Such.

Father Taylor, the celebrated seamen's preacher of Boston, commenced his ministry in Saugus in what was called the old Rock School-house.

The Baptists seem to be troubled. Tremont Temple Society is the last place attacked by discord. Some one is wanted who can pour oil on the water.

It is said that new members do not come in to Dr. Bartol's church as fast as the old ones die off. The best shepherd does not always have the largest flock.

Mrs. Jefferson Davis is described as very charming, very Orthodox, and very aristocratic. If one accepts the last two "very's," he must decline to believe the first.

A meteor a foot in diameter, with a blazing train, recently fell at Worthington, Minn., exploding just before reaching the earth with a shock that jarred the buildings.

The Herald asks: "Was Freeman's faith in the restoration of the life of his slain child any less reasonable than the widely prevalent belief in the literal resurrection of the body?"

Professor Tyndall says that very great improvements in the electric light must be regarded as inevitable, but he does not believe gas will be beaten out of the field by it; there is too much use for gas.

There are signs of reconciliation between the Papacy and the German Government, but signs of war between Catholicism and the French Government. The Church dies hard, but its days are numbered.

Two thousand and four hundred Young Men's Christian Superstition Associations in the world. What a swarm of Protestant Jesuits do these institutions send out to make narrow the mind of man!

The French propose to have a free press, rights of public meetings, income tax, free trade, secular education, separation of Church and State, and abolition of the clerical students' exemption from conscription.

A man in Hartford tried to do what the New Testament says Jesus did—that is, "fast forty days and forty nights"; but he gave out at the end of five days, and now his family have a lunatic on their hands.

Rev. Dr. Fulton has effected a reconciliation with his estranged Baptist brethren, and there is prospect for peace for a few days. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

The American admirers of Thomas Paine have decided to put up a colossal statue of him at St. Louis, and Col. Robert G. Ingersoll will soon visit that city and deliver a series of lectures in aid of the enterprise.

Rev. Dr. Newman, the newly-made English Cardinal, says he will continue, as in the past, to resist with all his powers the spirit of liberalism in religion, and oppose the doctrine that one creed is as good as another.

When a man leaves his property for the benefit of the world, his will is always contested on the ground that he was insane. It is hard to convince this age that a man of sound mind can seriously contemplate doing a good deed.

Missionaries are needed in Pocasset, Massachusetts. Cannot India or China send some of their heathen teachers to the benighted Christians of Pocasset, where fathers kill their children to please the idol they worship?

The Methodist Episcopal Church has captured the colored population of the South. It has built over one thousand churches for these people, and gathered upwards of two hundred thousand of them into its communion.

In the heart of London, recent excavations unearthed elephant tusks and molars and teeth, and numerous bones of the gigantic extinct ox. The depth at which the remains were found varied from fifteen to thirty feet.

Beecher says: "I do not believe the nonsense that 'in Adam's fall we sinned all.'" Had he said this forty years ago, where would Plymouth Church have been? It is not safe to be honest too early in life, if you want to succeed in a Christian pulpit.

There is a girl in Amherst, N.S., who, when she goes into a store, carries hatchets, shovels, tubs, spikes, bags of salt, et cetera, to take on life and fly about with great velocity. The spirits are made to shoulder the responsibility of these antics.

They have an International Marriage Office in Italy which has been established for twelve years. This matrimonial bureau claims to have done a good business, and assisted a great many men to good situations in life by getting them a wealthy wife.

Andrew Jackson Davis welcomes Superintendent Kiddle to the ranks of the Spiritualists, but regards him only as a neophyte, and not an adept in the science or philosophy of Spiritualism, and says that his "communications" are of little consequence.

The foreign Catholic papers were formerly filled with announcements of the large sums of money continually placed at the feet of Pius IX. Now, instead, we hear as repeatedly of the munificent amounts given by Leo XIII. for charitable purposes.

Among the liberal ministers of Massachusetts who spoke upon the recent Christian tragedy at Pocasset were Dr. C. A. Bartol, Rev. J. P. Bland, and Rev. W. H. Spencer. They all put the blame where it belongs—upon the false teachings of the Christian Church.

The Mayor of Birmingham, at his own personal cost, is giving a series of free concerts at the town hall, the first of which was attended by three thousand workmen, their wives and their children. Some of our wealthy citizens might make themselves benefactors in this way.

The Philadelphia Ledger thinks it is very curious that all the messages from the spirit-world come in our language—no matter whether the author is a Greek, Jew, Swiss, Italian, or a Berks County Dutchman. Evidently the English is the universal language in the summer land.

A volume has just been published in France containing a list of works which the censor has not allowed to see the light. It is stated that the simple list of works suppressed in France during the present century furnishes titles enough to fill a volume of five hundred pages. All condemned books are taken to a board, manufactory at St. Denis, and there converted into pasteboard.

Submarine telephoning is described in Van Norstrand's Engineering Magazine. One telephone was placed in the diver's helmet and fastened in such a position that by turning his head he could place his mouth or ear to the instrument. The other telephone was placed on a scow which carried the air-pump and diver's helpers. Conversation was carried on with the utmost facility.

The Investigator has lived forty-nine years in Christian America, and has lived to see some of the principles which it has unflinchingly advocated accepted by a large and respectable portion of our population; while the church dogmas which it has steadily assailed have been "growing smaller by degrees" with every year of its life. It has reason to be proud of its career, and we extend it our good wishes for the future.

The pilgrimage to the spot where the sacred "Mother" Ganges emerges from the mountain has again resulted in cholera, owing to the neglect of sanitary arrangements among such a large assemblage of people. It is matter of rejoicing that the holy river has lost its sacred character by allowing European engineers to build bridges over it. Civilization and modern improvements are the only saviors of the human race in all parts of the globe.

The heart of mankind is where the religion of the world is found. Look into men for their creed. Half the world is with us privately. It joins the church's worship to find it is no worship. Man will one day be to the world what he is to himself,—sometime show to the public what he dares now confess only to friends. The religion that he lives by he will yet be known by, and what he stands for in his business and private acts he will one day make known as his religious convictions.

Frederick Douglass expresses himself as opposed to the negro exodus. He says: "My counsel to the negro is to bide his time, to labor and wait, in the full assurance that time and events will sooner or later establish his rights in the South upon enduring foundations. I have seen many attempts to lash colored men into schemes of emigration. I am old enough to remember the Haytian emigration scheme fifty-four years ago; another to the British West Indies forty years ago; another still to Central America sixteen years ago; and they only served to unsettle the minds of the colored people, deranging their plans of enterprise for home improvements, and were transient, as I believe this one will be."

Col. Ingersoll has been rather severely criticised by the Chicago liberal-Christian ministers. Rev. Dr. Ryder, Prof. Swing, Rev. Robert Collyer, and Rev. Brooke Herford said some things about the Illinois lawyer and his ideas that he did not like, so he has retaliated in characteristic style. Of Prof. Swing he says: "His spirit is as sweet as the odor of flowers, but sometimes he seems to believe the Bible to be inspired, at other times to disbelieve it. He reminds me of the young man who passed a counterfeit bill. When detected, his father asked him how he could do such a crime? The boy replied: 'Well, some days I thought the bill was bad and some days I thought it was good. One day when I thought it was good, I passed it.'"

It is a fact, which should warn society of the necessity of instruction in this matter among the lower classes, that most of our criminals come from our surplus population. Large families among the ignorant and poor furnish a large proportion of the idle and vicious in every land. The only thing that will insure a reform in this direction is education. There is no reason why a child should grow up in this State without acquiring a good education, which is the best basis for a good life; and yet thousands are allowed to reach the years of manhood and womanhood with knowledge only of vice. They come in contact only with what will lower them or keep them low. If we would send more children to school, we should not have to send so many men and women to prisons and houses of correction.

The Church makes its minister one of the most miserable objects of pity. He is one of the saddest sights in creation,—one of the worst inventions of mankind. He must have an authority for everything he says. He is not allowed to exercise his own judgment, to have more than half a right to give an opinion. His soul is not his own. Either St. Peter, St. John, or St. Paul must be his authority. The world will not take the word of St. Honesty, St. Virtue, or St. Truth; yet God Himself canonized these saints and robed them with the immortal authority of divinity. Every man who presumes to say anything to-day on a religious subject is expected to bow in the direction of Judea, to show his reverence for the current faith, and to make a sign of the cross upon his breast in token of his allegiance to the dominant church. But it is time for men to slough this expectation. Religious independence is an indication of religious health. There is a pious regard for certain men and women who have, in past ages, been as it were the world's salvation. We would honor these wherever piety offers her praise, but we would not, like piety, forbid man the right to excel them. Men who can save themselves are the saviors of the world. To touch these sacred heroes of mankind with the pen of criticism is regarded as searching for flaws in the heavens or for faults in truth. No matter how high a man has climbed, another may equal or excel him. He cannot pull up the mountain with him after he has reached the top. No more can he pull up the life-steps whereby he gained his height in virtue, love, and truth.

Communications.

THE FIRST LIBERAL LEAGUE OF BOSTON.

A most interesting session of the First Liberal League of Boston was held on Sunday afternoon at No. 4 Park Street, the meeting being the last one of the season. The rooms were so well filled that the space of the ante-rooms was necessary to accommodate the audience. The powerful attraction was the presence of Colonel Higginson and the presentation of his address, "The Meeting of Extremes." Some delay in his arrival was filled by Mr. Abbot with an elaboration of Mr. Frothingham's recent affirmation that the era of individualism is passing away. The spiritual heat created by his remarks was just making itself felt, when Colonel Higginson's arrival called forth the heartiest applause from the disappointed audience. The address created a blended impression of intellectual insight and moral fervor. It dealt mainly with the historic aspects of the growth of the human mind, and traced some of the contrasts of former narrowness and present toleration. The last point was made more definite by a comparison of the method and language of the older revivalist, President Finney, of Oberlin, and the milder style of Mr. Moody, the present apostle of revivalism. Another most helpful thought was brought out in an attempt to hint the possible reconciliation of inexorable law in the individual fate with the reign of love which the heart strives to realize.

The speaker claimed that our highest moments reveal the harmony of these two antagonizing ideas, although the usual, every-day thinking finds them irreconcilable. Religion he claimed to be an emotional experience, and he dissented from Mr. Abbot, who (as the speaker said) placed it rather in the realm of science or knowledge. The unconscious drifting together of the representatives of extremes of thought was illustrated by references to prominent men in the Catholic and Episcopalian Churches both of England and America. The entire tendency of the discourse was to rouse vigorous thinking and to increase optimistic views of life.

Some good music preceded the discussion, which was participated in by Mr. Abbot, Col. Higginson, Mrs. Otis, and Mr. C. D. B. Mills, of Syracuse, N. Y.

The latter gentleman, who is filling the pulpit at the Parker Memorial for two weeks, including next Sunday, presented an appeal to the highest religious sentiment which set every heart vibrating, and showed the power of simple fervor and unconscious eloquence. The address was very brief, and was one of those expressions of faith in the destiny of mankind whose power can be recalled, but whose form cannot be reproduced. On the whole, the meeting seems to have been the most satisfactory and successful one of the series. It was announced that the growing needs of the League demanded more commodious rooms, and interested friends were asked to bear in mind the financial wants of the organization.

M. A. H.

THE "CONSENSUS" AGAIN.

DAVENPORT, Iowa, May 5, 1879.

MR. ABBOT:—

You have begun a discussion all-important for us liberals. "Private judgment in morals" has become a doctrine of liberal religion; but still we repudiate the extreme individualism of the "free lovers." W. H. S. is on the platform of the radical Unitarians and Free Religionists, as we understand him, but his doctrine of "a good seven-shooter" is hardly the doctrine of "universal reason." The thing is not yet clear to my mind, nor does the case of Charles H. Hartwell settle it.

The "Consensus of the Competent" is a criterion which individuals in this country have so often set aside that it is not easy so to put the issue as not to trench upon some established moral or political truth or democratic practice. I suppose public opinion is the best popular expression of the "Consensus of the Competent." You know how this acts in religion. Morally speaking, was it competent to burn heretics? Was Pilate morally competent to crucify Jesus? The popular opinion of the people of Smyrna said: "Away with the Athelists!" and Polycarp was burned. You know it is said that the Roman Consul, in pity for him, asked him to "swear by the fortune of Cæsar," and cry: "Away with the Athelists!" With indignation and scorn he pointed to the multitude, and cried: "Away with the Athelists!" and was burned. Did he do well? The Roman law expressed the "Consensus of the Competent" for that time. Did that make the persecution right? Ought the martyrs to have obeyed man rather than God? Was that appeal to God as we have it in the New Testament an evidence of fanaticism? It was surely laughed at.

I like your essay, "What is Truth?" in THE INDEX of May 1. Probably you are right when you say that, to the utterance of Jesus, "I came to bear witness to the truth," Pilate exclaimed contemptuously: "King of truth? Pah! King of moonshine." By the popular opinion of Jerusalem, Jesus had spoken blasphemously. Was that Consensus morally competent to kill Jesus? Let the legal point go. Was Jesus morally right? Were not the Pharisees sincere, hence free from moral blame? Don't mind what is said in Matthew, 23d chapter. Does not your "Universal Reason" doctrine bring us back to the Paley doctrine of morals—that universal utility is to be a test of the right of an action? Is a convention of Roman Catholic cardinals competent to make a law on marriage, on public schools, on heresy, on intolerance, that should bind the conscience of every person in a Catholic country, after the government (of Spain, for instance) has approved of that law?

"Universal Reason" cannot mean the reason of all mankind; that would be absurd. The cardinals of the Church are supposed to represent the "universal reason" of the Church, and when that Church represented all of Christendom it was the "universal reason" of Christendom. How about Huss and Luther and the rest of them, who refused to recognize the "Consensus of the Competent"?

Jesus said as against the competency of the Scribes who "sat in Moses' seat": "I say unto you so-and-so." Was he morally competent to say it? I say morally competent because we must come to a rule for all mankind.

The Orthodox appeal from "private judgment" to "revelation." We ask, whence is revelation, if not to the individual's private reason and conscience?

The revelation in and through Jesus may be sufficient for him; how shall it become so for you and me? But I will stop. You cannot do better than clearly show your readers how the "Consensus of the Competent" is superior to "revelation" as taught by Orthodoxy.

S. S. HUNTING.

INDIVIDUALISM AND THE CONSENSUS.

Would it not help us if we could agree upon the true definition of these terms, so as to know exactly what we mean? Josiah Warren first made his statement of "Individual Sovereignty," which Mill afterwards expressed in other words in his essay on Liberty, in the formula: "Individual Sovereignty to be exercised at one's own cost, and limited by the equal sovereignty of every other individual." He laid especial stress on the negative side, or what may be called the duty side; that is to say, the injunction to respect the rights of others, to let other people alone,—the "non-aggression" doctrine, so admirably stated by Mr. Abbot, in other words.

I knew Mr. Warren well, and I am sure the idea that an individual was not to take the responsibility of his own actions never entered into his head. He held that the individual must bear all the natural costs of his individuality, and that he had no right to impose those costs upon others. But it was only the natural and equitable cost that he contemplated. So long as the individual respected the rights of others and did not infringe upon his neighbors, no one had any right to interfere with him.

A love of justice, of exact equity, was, I think, the leading characteristic of Warren's mind; and I believe many of his disciples are like him.

Certainly there is not the least warrant for injustice or inequity in the doctrine of "Individual Sovereignty."

The weak point, as it seems to me, in Mr. Warren's mind was his utter incapacity to see the necessity of society and social organization for the protection and perfection of the individual. But, as I look at it, his doctrine of "Individualism," fully and logically carried out, inevitably leads to socialism, the apparent opposite, but real complement, of Individualism.

To say that Individualists wish to do as they please, and avoid the consequences legitimately growing out of their action, seems to me unjust and inaccurate, unless the Individualist is incompetent to understand his own doctrine, or unwilling to stand by it.

Now, what is the Consensus of the Competent? Is it the common opinion of mankind as expressed in statutes or customs? If it is, and our actions must be controlled by it, and we must appeal to it as the last resort to settle ethical questions, all progress is at an end, and the best thing we could do would be to enter Mother Church, the only really competent institution in existence. But it cannot be that THE INDEX will claim that the existing opinions or customs or laws of Church or State are the final judgment of the competent. To do so, would be self-condemnation and self-stultification. Of course, if one thinks or acts in a spirit or way contrary to the customs and opinions of the day or the laws of the land, the Consensus of the Competent for the time-being, he must take the consequences; and he may be regarded as a fanatic by the majority who have the power to punish, and they may scorn and flout and laugh at him, but he laughs best who laughs last.

Is there, then, any "Competent"? Yes, human reason and the scientific principles which it discovers.

But, at this present moment, are those scientific principles so well known to the majority who sustain the customs and make the laws, that they can constitute a Consensus of the Competent on questions of social ethics? Most decidedly, No!

I fully believe that the application of the scientific method to ethics or to the ascertainment of the laws governing human relations will give us the means of determining what actions are just and right, will furnish us with a consensus of the really competent. Nothing will or can do this short of an Integral Science of Society, which will reconcile the rights of each individual with the welfare of the collective whole.

In the meantime, the efficacy of the vigorous method of the revolver as against fanaticism would depend very much on the relative competency of the revolver of the fanatic and that of the reformer, and still farther on the competency of revolvers to hit fanaticism.

F. S. C.

"VOICE BUILDING."

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Your columns are ever so friendly to the cause of scientific verity as opposed to popular prejudice and error, that I beg indulgence for the following testimonial which was lately signed by many able exponents who stand ready to support its claims in their full significance:—

"Whereas, An original and comprehensive system of vocal culture was evolved, published, and taught by the late Dr. Horace R. Streeter, and

"Whereas, The said system justly claims for itself the sole right among all other so-called vocal systems to the name of sound and efficient method; and

"Whereas, Many individuals more or less known to the musical public have used more or less publicly many of the peculiar features of Dr. Streeter's method while at the same time ignoring or denying its origin;

"Resolved, That we the undersigned announce our unqualified appreciation of the wonderful originality, exhaustive scope, and philosophic depth of the vocal principles he discovered and in the face of bitter opposition labored to establish.

"Resolved, That we declare our firm conviction of the justice of his claim to the origin and ownership of that which he entitled "Voice Building," and that we gladly and gratefully accord to him the credit due for its marvellous efficiency in our experience as vocalists and teachers.

"Resolved, That we assert our belief that in no other manner than by the simple and philosophic means he employed can absolute and unvarying purity of intonation and quality be secured when these attributes do not manifest themselves as a birthright in the individual; and that such attainment is invariably accessible, with the addition of flexibility, compass, and strength, through the just apprehension and honest application on the part of both teacher and pupil of the above-named simple and philosophic means.

"Resolved, That we consider the expression of these views due to the cause of genuine art and science as well as to the public welfare; and that we look confidently forward to the time when prejudice and selfish interest will be forced to give way and allow the old so-called methods and this new and mighty engine of common-sense and scientific adaptation to measure forces in an open field.

"Resolved, That we give ardent tribute to the memory of our friend and teacher as having, in addition to his surpassing musical genius and philosophic insight, the spirit of self-sacrificing, untiring devotion to the well-being of humanity, being in himself a shining specimen of generous and peerless manhood."

The foregoing was adopted at a late gathering for the purpose held at the residence of Mr. Wm. B. Merrill, whose name has had honorable connection with the educational and business interests of this city. I will also state that Prof. Stacy Baxter, late occupant of the Chair of Elocution at Harvard University, gave full endorsement to Dr. Streeter's theory and adapted its principles to his branch of vocal teaching.

J. P. TITCOMB.

BOSTON, May 12, 1879.

THE FOLLOWING bit of news, says the Lancet, will serve to clear up a misapprehension existing in this country as to the position of the woman doctor in Russia. It is widely believed here that the woman doctor is a recognized institution in the empire of the Czar, a belief in some sort warranted by the prominence which has of late years been given in the medical schools of St. Petersburg to the training of women students in physic. According to the Russian Medical Gazette, it would appear that the question of women medical practitioners is not yet settled in Russia. On the 29th of October last, the right of women who had completed a course of medical training to practise medicine in the empire was brought formally under the consideration of the sanitary council attached to the ministry of the interior. After prolonged discussion, the council unanimously resolved as follows: "Although the right to practise medicine by the female students of the medical faculty has not to the present been recognized by the legislative authority, having regard to the evidence now submitted by the professors that these students are fully competent to exercise the medical profession, the sanitary council will itself endeavor to obtain from the government the authorization necessary for them to enter upon practice." The prospects of the lady doctors in Madras have not turned out as bright as might have been expected, and as the promoters of the movement no doubt anticipated. The Friend of India says: "One would have thought some half dozen at least of the eighty million of women, whom Dr. Balfour so graphically described as being without trained medical assistance, would have gladly availed themselves of the three ladies at their disposal; but we are informed that only one fee has as yet been received among them. If this state of things goes on, it will certainly not be in class A. of the license tax that the ladies will find themselves enrolled. One, we believe, contemplates trying Hyderabad, and one has gone to England, so that perhaps the last, finding no opposition, may make a better thing of it."

THERE WAS an exhibition of tableaux in Fond du Lac, Wis., and the small boy was present. A scene was presented—"The Execution of Mary Queen of Scots": Mary kneeling, her head on the block; the executioner standing, with uplifted axe poised for the death-blow, amid breathless silence. Suddenly, in a loud whisper, the small boy exclaimed: "Pa, why don't he chop?"

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 26, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.50 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesab Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"); with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion": Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.50
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUEBLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartre Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	5.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Palanques. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A New Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Palanques.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (HOWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.....	3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COORELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Hahnemann, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Emerson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Etched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man, 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	3.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	5.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 3 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede..... Romola..... The Mill on the Floss..... Felix Holt..... Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life..... The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (E. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Bahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GORTHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Effective Aesthetics.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 1 vol.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Helen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREY'S (W. R.) Emigance of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.50
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.25
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.25
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Fashioned Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Old-Fashioned Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	1.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skol-lige.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.25
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.50
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection" and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of Europe, from Augustus to Charlemagne. 1 vol.....	3.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Helen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 1 vol.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. E.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. E.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.50
My Study Windows.....	2.50
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	1.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	3.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HUBAED). The Life of Horace Mann. By H. W. Wells.....	1.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1852 to 1868.....	1.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.35
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	3.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women.....	1.50
Liberty—both in one vol.....	1.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Murras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	1.00
Romances. 2 vols.....	0.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.25
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workbench. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Psychology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.00
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organisation of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLIV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trosby Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.). Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	3.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Seasons, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.). A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHELLER (H.). Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	21.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology. Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	1.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	4.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.). The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Advantages of Philis.....	1.25
Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmund, and Love the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	2.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Hamlet, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unpublished Pieces.
THAYER'S (MRS. OLLIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	1.50
Cape Cod.....	2.50
Letters.....	2.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.). The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.50
On Sound.....	2.50
Radiant Heat.....	2.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Addresses before British Association at Belfast.....	.50
TYTTER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vols III IV, and VI, each.....	1.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Banquetings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in the Gold-Fields.....	1.50
Love and a Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

331 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

CHEAP, HEALTHFUL HOMES

in Tennessee. Address WARREN SMITH, Flat Rock, Lewis Co., Tenn.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

1 8 7 8,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SPIRITUAL COMMUNICATIONS,

BY

HENRY KIDDLE, A.M.,

Superintendent of Schools, New York City.

MESSAGES FROM THE ETERNAL WORLD! REVEALING AWFUL MYSTERIES OF HEAVEN AND HELL.

350 pp. Price $1.50.

AUTHORS' PUB. CO., Publishers,

37 Bond Street, New York.

UNITY.

A MONTHLY ORGAN OF

Freedom, Fellowship, and Character in Religion.

Editor.—H. M. SIMMONS. Publishing Committee.—ROBERT COLLYER, J. L. JONES, C. W. WENDT, J. C. LEARNED, W. C. GARNETT.

Vol. III., beginning March 1, 1879, will contain Robert Collyer's "Table Talk"; two series of articles on "The Liberal Preachers of America out of the Pulpit" (our Poets and Essayists), and "The Growth of Doctrine, or the Old-New Creed"; Unity Sunday-school Lessons, etc.

Price $1.50 a year. Clubs of 10 at $1.25.

Room 57, 75 MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher, 84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

MARSTON'S DINING ROOMS.

FOR

LADIES and GENTLEMEN, 23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Kellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

M. J. SAVAGE'S NEW NOVEL, Bluffton,

Describing in a very interesting way the processes of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical. 12mo. Price $1.50.

Also, by the same author,

The Religion of Evolution:

"An exposition of religion in the light of the most advanced science. A brave and reverent thinker."—London Inquirer. Price $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

NORTHERN LITERATURE AND ART ROOMS

will immediately be opened in Boston by Miss Marie A. Brown, for the purpose of giving due prominence to the many beautiful productions of Sweden, Norway, Finland, and Denmark, comprising the literature,—English translations and originals,—illustrated works, views, photographs, portraits, and paintings and statuary of the most celebrated Northern artists. The "Rooms" will be elegant in all their appointments,—an attractive resort for all art-loving people and purchasers.

That it may become an international affair, Miss Brown invites all Americans and Scandinavians who are interested in the enterprise, and wish it success, to aid her efforts by subscribing the requisite fund. One thousand persons are desired who will each subscribe $10.00, for which Nordens Roster, a poem by Runeberg, and a full set of The Serpents' Stories, six historical novels by Topellius, as translated and published by her, will be sent them in return, as they are issued.

MARIE A. BROWN, P.O. Box 900, Boston, Mass.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD, THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Sent to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1878.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. O. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING

NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Gort. Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen. Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I. Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II. Kings and Prophets. Vol. III. New Testament (in preparation). Price $2.50 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 178 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 285 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 253 pages. Price $1.50.

THE GHOSTS: Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. E. G. Ingersoll (his latest lectures). 222 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 253 pages. Price $1.25.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Bathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with Index not in other editions, $1.00.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half Oak, $6.00. Will be ready March 30.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $12.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other!

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME, ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experiences. By N. F. Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1878, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1878. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Boston Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 29, 1879.

WHOLE NO. 492.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

"MRS. GRUNDY" may be defined as the Consensus of the Incompetent.

"OBEY that law of Nature," said Antipater Tyrinus, "which makes your interest the universal, and the universal one your own."

WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON is dead. What measureless service has this one brave soul done for his race! A nation follows him to the grave with grateful and reverent sorrow.

THE NEW DISCUSSION respecting Individualism, precipitated by the Syracuse Congress and widened by the Pocasset murder, is rapidly spreading in all directions. Some indications of this appear below.

"IF A SMART lawyer should come from New York, and defend me on the ground that every one had the right to act upon his own conscientious convictions, I should be acquitted." That is the plea of the poor Pocasset father who murdered his sleeping little girl in the exercise of his "private judgment." It is the plea also of the "free lovers" who abandon their heart-broken wives and fly to some new "affinity." And the plea is precisely as good in one case as in the other.

DR. BARTOL, at the meeting of a Unitarian Conference at Hingham, May 21, is reported to have said: "If the individual and the community are not joined in mutual service, we have individualism on one side and communism on the other. Individualism does not consist in individual independence, but in the attempt of the individual to judge and impose his opinion on others and live for himself, as if he were the end of creation. The Pope, in prescribing the faith of the world, is only a great individualist. Victoria, in saying she would not notice Gladstone or Sir Robert Peel on account of their political attitude, has taken a step out of queenly privileges, and become an individualist. Individualism as sovereignty is the germ of all the evils that afflict us,—State sovereignty, secession, nullification, and social license."

PROFESSOR HOWISON, of the Institute of Technology, who read an essay to the Chestnut Street Club in this city, May 19, is reported in a daily paper to have made these statements: "Beginning with a quotation from Goethe's Prometheus, in which the Titan defies Zeus, Professor Howison stated that in the conception we have the principle of progress in man in deadly feud with the principle of conservation and reverence—the spirit of the present and future rending itself utterly from the past; the human reason quite at fault about the divine, and come to open revolt against it and to repudiation of it. The chief question for philosophy to answer is, How shall the human principle of freedom and progress be brought into harmony with the permanence of man, the validity of his past, the possibility of his future, and the voice of that moral law in conscience that declares the nation valid as against the subject, man, our neighbor, valid as against our selfishness, and God valid as against our mere propensities? This question has been the problem of Christendom since the beginning of Protestantism, and is the key to every crisis in human history. It is probably no exaggeration to say that, at present, a larger and more influential mass of men are bewildered by it, and give evidence of not holding any key to its solution, than at any previous time in the history of the world. As Christianity is a higher and profounder ideal of life than any that preceded it, and as Christendom is the most complex, most brilliant, and most comprehensive form society has assumed, as recent science has laid tributary a wide realm of natural resources, so the problem to-day assumes a reality and difficulty never known before. The free individualism of to-day is engaged in that very conflict with the traditional ideal of the conscience which appears in the Prometheus."

MR. POTTER, in a discourse before his society at New Bedford, May 11, on the Pocasset tragedy, made this admirable statement: "If it be said that even on the ground of natural religion, or no religion at all, individual reason and conscience may set themselves up as superior to all other sovereignty, I reply, Yes, this claim may indeed be made, and that in the reaction against the long ecclesiastical suppression of private judgment there has come a perilous tendency to assert that the individual nature, in its own impulses, impressions, and attractions, is a law unto itself. But it is a claim that cannot stand for a moment in the light of a rational philosophy. . . . The divine commands come not through a personal, private vision of truth and duty, but through those great principles of thought and conduct which are or may be the common possession of all men, and concerning which there is a common sense of obligation. The germs of these laws of thought and conduct appear in all men; but naturally they appear more clearly and completely in that portion of mankind where there is the highest degree of civilization and enlightenment. We have, therefore, on the theory of natural and rational religion, a tribunal before which every individual claimant to some new perception of truth and duty must submit his claim for judgment. It is the court of universal reason and universal right, and its judgments in our human affairs are at any time pronounced by the aggregate consenting voice of the highest mental and moral intelligence which the human race has attained. There is a consensus of truth and morals which the experience of mankind has proved trustworthy, and which the individual violates at his peril." At an early period we hope to lay the whole of this noble discourse before our readers; but we cannot forbear anticipating it by quoting this exceedingly fine explanation of the Consensus of the Competent.

THE BROOKLYN Catholic Review is too acute not to see in the Pocasset murder an illustration of the typical Protestant principle, which Individualism simply borrows and runs out into all its logical extravagance: "What may be truthfully called the sublimation of Protestantism was shown in the terrible tragedy at Pocasset, the details of which have for many days filled the columns of our secular contemporaries. The wretched man who killed his darling child, under the influence of the delusion that God had called him to be 'a second Abraham,' now makes known his willingness to be saved from the gallows by purely Protestant pleas. 'If a smart lawyer should come from New York,' said this unhappy man, 'and defend me on the ground that every one had the right to act upon his own conscientious convictions, I should be acquitted.' See how the poison of Protestantism has permeated the mind of this poor wretch. 'The right to act upon his own conscientious convictions!' One is to acknowledge no authority, to seek no counsel, to obey no precept, to submit to no control. The right of 'private judgment' is to be claimed as something that overrides everything else. The 'private judgment' of this poor wretch told him that he should kill his little girl, and he killed her. Under the plea that he might have been insane he may escape the gallows. But from his stand-point, and before a Protestant jury, he wishes to defend himself on the plea that 'every man has the right to follow the honest convictions of his conscience.' So he has, within the limits that God has marked out for all His creatures, but no further. And it is the Church, and only the Church, which has the commission for teaching men what these limits are." Of course the Review claims that the Church alone articulates the Consensus of the Competent: that was to be expected. But who, Protestant or Individualist, can break the force of its criticism on the main point?

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....	Albany, N.Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.....	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....	Irvington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....	Boston, Mass.
MR. WM. J. POTTER.....	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. E. P. HALLOWELL.....	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON.....	Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....	San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....	Providence, R. I.
MR. J. J. SAVAGE.....	Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. F. SELWORTH.....	Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER.....	Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....	Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....	Detroit, Mich.
MR. HORACE SEEVER.....	Editor of the "Investigator," Boston
RABBI ISAAC M. WISE.....	Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....	Editor of "Jewish Times," New York
W. J. E. HARGREAVE.....	Editor of "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
REV. ROBERT C. LEEVER.....	Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGEBSON.....	Poorville, Pa.
DR. T. L. BROWN.....	Binghamton, N.Y.
HON. B. S. MOOREHEAD.....	Franklin, Pa.
ELDER F. W. EVANS.....	Mount Lebanon, N.Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....	New York City
MRS. AMY POST.....	Rochester, N.Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH OADY STANTON.....	Tenafly, N.Y.
MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....	Lottsburgh, Va.
JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....	Albany, N.Y.
RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....	Albany, N.Y.
Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN.....	231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....	142 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX.....	3 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.
J. A. J. WILCOX.....	W. H. HAMLEN.
F. E. ABBOT.....	C. D. B. MILLS.
D. G. ORANDON.
Executive Committee.

Alabama.....	J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.....	JOHN ARRENS, Monticello.
California.....	J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.....	DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
Connecticut.....	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....	JOSEPH D. GORLT, Greenville.
Florida.....	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.....	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....	DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Oakesboro.
Indiana.....	N. D. WATKINS, Lima.
Iowa.....	J. O. MICHENER, Adair.
Kansas.....	JOHN FARMWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.....	S. B. OLARE, New Orleans.
Louisiana.....	EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.....	DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.....	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.....	E. A. SAWTELL, Boston.
Michigan.....	KARL SCHENEMANN, Detroit.
Minnesota.....	B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.....	R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Montana.....	W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
Nebraska.....	V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
Nevada.....	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Hampshire.....	FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New Jersey.....	C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
New York.....	J. W. THORNE, Warren.
North Carolina.....	E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Ohio.....	SAKURU COLE, Humboldt Basin.
Oregon.....	GEORGE LAW, Providence.
Rhode Island.....	P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
South Carolina.....	DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
Tennessee.....	DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Texas.....	E. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Vermont.....	L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
Virginia.....	DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
West Virginia.....	ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Wisconsin.....	D. F. WILCOX, Yankton.
Dakota.....	W. H. McDONOUGH, Washington.
District of Columbia.....	W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Utah.....	NORMAN S. PORTER.
Wyoming.....

Finance Committee.

D. G. ORANDON, Chairman.....	Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH E. OTIS.....	127 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE.....	231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS. —President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
SYRACUSE, N.Y. —President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
ALBANY, N.Y. —President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
BOSTON, MASS. —President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
PASSAIC CITY, N.J. —President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
JACKSONVILLE, ILL. —President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.
ROCHESTER, N.Y. —President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester.
CHELSEA, MASS. —President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Orandon. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N.Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y.	MORIS HAYS, Rochester, N.Y.
FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Corti-S. R. URBINO, West Newton, land, N.Y.
Z. T. WATKINS, Syracuse, N.Y.	W. D. HUNT, Scott, N.Y.
NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, Syracuse, N.Y.	FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, Mass.
GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mil-M. N. LADY, Albany, N.Y.
W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass.	J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N.J.
T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N.Y.	RABBI B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, N.Y.	D. G. ORANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
JOHN W. TRUESDELL, Syracuse, N.Y.	JOHN W. TRUESDELL, Syracuse, N.Y.
CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y.	E. P. STARK, Rochester, N.Y.
JOHN NICK, Chelsea, Mass.	JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N.Y.
JOHN NICK, Watertown, N.Y.
E. A. SAWTELL, Boston, Mass.	JOHN SCHLESINGER, Albany, N.Y.
THOS. DUGAN, Albany, N.Y.	JOHN PERRET, Albany, N.Y.
JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N.Y.	C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
DAVID H. OLARE, Florence, R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

The Christian Tragedy at Pocasset.

A DISCOURSE BEFORE THE FREE RELIGIOUS SOCIETY ON LYNN, MASS., MAY 18, 1879.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

A short time ago the community was shocked at the report of a crime so strange, so unnatural, that the mind could hardly find language to express its surprise. The papers brought the announcement that a father had taken the life of his child, and that the wife and mother had calmly witnessed the act and approved it. All that is human in the breast of man was aroused to indignation at this cruel deed. Were this man and woman fiends, that they could kill their innocent child? The father did not raise the knife that was to still the heart of his little daughter with any purpose of vengeance. He did not plunge the blade through that tender breast to gain any selfish end. He was not mad with the frenzy that comes from intoxication. He was not fired with malice or avarice. This man tells the world that he killed his child in obedience to the command of God. He committed this horrible crime, he performed this inhuman act, to please his God.

We cannot place Freeman in the category of common criminals. We cannot put his deed with ordinary crimes. This terrible act against which our hearts recoil was the deed of a deluded mind. Freeman committed the crime of faith. He was no voluntary criminal. He says he prayed to have his hand stayed, and did not believe that he would be allowed to sacrifice the precious life of his child; but the voice that commanded him to offer this young heart on the altar of faith did not bid him hold his hand when the fatal knife was raised to strike, and this father's faith made him the murderer of his own child. History, with its awful wealth of crime, furnishes no sadder, no more shocking and sickening deed than this Christian tragedy. Horror itself turns pale at the recital, and it would seem as though delusion had claimed its last victim. Some have called the man a lunatic, a scoundrel, a fool; but he is the unfortunate dupe of his religious faith. What made Freeman kill his child? He was not a cruel, bad-hearted man. He did not strike the blow of death in a fit of passion. He had no feelings against his child but those of love. It was not a sudden act. He prepared for it. His wife and some of his neighbors knew that he was to perform the deed. This man's mind was enslaved to the Bible. He was what is called a Christian. He belonged to that deluded sect called Second Adventists. He was doubtless honest in his faith; he had been taught that what the Bible said was God's word, and he believed everything from the first page to the last to be the literal truth of heaven. His mind fed on Bible stories; the most improbable things to him were actual facts. He read and dwelt upon the narrative which said that Abraham, the beloved of God, went to offer Isaac on one of the mountains in the land of Moriah; and it was this narrative in the twenty-second chapter of Genesis that suggested to Freeman the way to show his faith in the being he worshipped as God. He was disappointed that his act was not arrested, but when his hand had descended he felt that some miracle would yet repair his work of destruction. He declared that death would hold his child but three days in his cold embrace, and that then God would restore light to the eyes that he had dimmed, and life to the heart which he had stilled forever.

This may not be the faith of reason and common-sense, but it is the faith of Christians. The Christian Church has preached for centuries the doctrine of bodily resurrection after death. The entire scheme of Christian salvation is founded upon a statement in the Bible that a man rose from the grave after being dead three days; and there are not only commands in this book to raise the dead, but a record that Jesus restored Lazarus to life after his having been buried four days. These things are taught as facts, and Christians profess to believe them. Freeman did believe them, and in his cruel act merely put his faith to the test. This one deed is enough to silence every Christian pulpit in the land, and lock forever the lips of every Christian minister who has dared profane the truth by saying that God ever demanded such a sacrifice as Freeman offered, or that a human being after being embalmed in the coldness of death returned again to life.

If Christianity survives this tragedy, which the faith it has taught inspired, it will be enough to convince every honest mind that there is no truth and sincerity left in the breasts of those who profess to believe it. When Freeman struck the knife into the heart of his child, he struck a fatal blow at Christianity. The deed that so suddenly turned life into death as quickly showed the faith of the Church to be delusion. If the Church teaches that God was pleased to see Abraham take his son with the intention to shed his blood, and could accept the sacrifice of Jephthah's only daughter, it must lift Freeman's act into divine favor, and declare this man worthy to be ranked with the saints of old. We have no doubt that Jephthah repented his rash vow to offer up as a burnt offering whatever came forth of the doors of his house to meet him after he should return in peace from the battle with the children of Ammon, when he saw his daughter, his only child, come out joyously to welcome him home. But his vow had been made to God, who had given him victory over the Ammonites, and it was kept. Jephthah sacrificed his child for power over the children of Ammon. His offering was laid on the altar of political ambition. Between Freeman's act and Jephthah's there is no parallel in the motive of the sacrifice; only in the character of the offering. Jephthah was to gain power over a fallen nation through his act, but Freeman expected no reward. He killed his child, prompted by no sordid desires. Beside this plotting, ambitious Israelite, Freeman is not to be placed for a moment.

In the other instance which has been spoken of as furnishing a counterpart of Freeman's deed, there is wholly wanting that which makes the act a crime. Abraham did not kill Isaac, and hence the resemblance of the two acts of faith is lacking in the most essential point. Freeman's act stands out unique and alone. It is unparalleled by any deed which history relates. This man, believing that he has heard the voice of God, takes that which he loves best of all things on earth, and in obedience to this voice slays his innocent child. Fanaticism can go no further. Never was faith more perfect, never more courageous; but never was faith so betrayed, so disappointed. This wild fanatic's hope, which led him to commit the most horrible murder as a religious act, was blasted. Instead of proving himself a prophet, he has shown himself a dupe; instead of establishing the faith which he held, he has shattered it past repair; instead of making his child a glorified victim of the sacrificial knife, he sent her poor, martyred body to an untimely grave.

Christianity has pictured the Hindu mother throwing her babe to the crocodile, offering her first-born to this monster-idol, and has appealed to the humanity of men to send teachers to India to enlighten the benighted soul which could do such a cruel act in the blindness of unreasoning faith; but here, in an age of civilization, with the light of science and the teachings of the highest religion, faith has committed a crime which rivals the Hindu mother's in its most barbaric features. The Christian's Bible is the idol of this century, and to it is offered a faith as blind, as unreasoning, as ever knelt upon the banks of the Ganges. This Bible was the idol to which Charles Freeman sacrificed his poor innocent child.

The fanaticism which laid human beings in the fiery arms of Moloch in the valley of Tophet, that caused men and women to dismember their bodies and disfigure their faces three thousand years ago, that inspired the Indian wife to be burned alive by the side of the body of her dead husband, that made men die of hunger and thirst while shouting the name of their God, and that drove the Buddhist pilgrim to measure the way to his sacred shrine by prostrating himself upon the earth, and to think it a glorious privilege to die on his journey, is the same religious frenzy that has made Pocasset another valley of Tophet, and that in every Christian church in America makes men and women sacrifice their reason and sense to the words of the Bible. Not only has fanaticism imposed upon the deluded victims the most brutal and degrading services as the holiest and most beatific offices of religion, but it has made the fanatic a demon, and inaugurated systems of war and persecution which have deluged the earth with blood and tears in every age and nearly every land. The voice of history tells us that more human blood has been shed in the name of God and by the hand of religion, than has been spilled through all other causes combined. No such hate has pursued men as the hate inspired by difference of religious faith. The Old Testament is little more than records of Jewish battles carried on in the name of Jehovah, the most high God, and sword-songs sung by the fiend of war, or thanksgivings for the death of foes who were in the way of some ambitious ruler of Israel. Spanish history is covered on every page with the Church's persecutions of its enemies; and the burnings, hangings, and drownings during the dark ages fill volume after volume with the most heart-rending tales of sufferings, sorrows, and crimes. The brutal treatment of the Quakers, Baptists, and so-called witches in the seventeenth century in England and America was the last attempt of the Christian Church to coerce the conscience of the world into accepting its authority through fear of death.

Mankind has passed forever, in civilized lands, this stage of fanaticism. Ecclesiasticism to-day must answer to the conscience of the people. The majesty of the law is enthroned above the voice of the Church, and "thus saith the State" is a higher command than "thus saith Christianity." But the reign of folly and fear which religious frenzy excites in the breast is not over. Nothing dominates the human mind more than the superstitions which are nurtured and taught in the Christian Church. The periodical revival of human fears which are now relegated to pains hereafter rather than to death and suffering here, shows the power of religious fanaticism which still dwells in man's breast. Among all the superstitions that enslave the soul of man, there is none that equals in its baneful influence the notion that the Bible is the word of God. This notion is the most monstrous, the most absurd, the most disastrous in its effects upon human acts and character, of any taught by the Christian Church. The evil which has flowed from this one source can never be computed. The faith that the Bible is God's word has been the warrant for millions of crimes. The Bible has been the halter, the block, the stake, the cross of the world. It has been the world's tyrant. Human affections have been crucified to its statements. Human aspirations have been chained to the earth by its lines. Its texts have been bound around the limbs of freedom to hold it in slavery. Its verses have been wrought into laws to compel obedience to oppression, and the belief that its written words were all heaven-moulded in the lips of truth has lifted profane passages into sacred narrative and exalted impious imprecations to sublime benedictions.

The history of this faith cannot be read with satisfaction. What it has done in the past is partially known; but all it has done and is still doing would appall the mind to know. Not many years ago a man by the name of Mobbs was executed for killing a boy from whom he had received no provocation whatever. His counsel, as there was no motive shown for his act, endeavored to clear him on the plea of insanity. But the plea was not allowed.

Previous to his execution, Mobbs made a confession in which he traced his deed to a state of mind produced by reading a copy of the Police News with a pictorial account of the Alton murder, and the story of Cain and Abel. Here was a man who confessed, in the sight of his own death and looking in the face of eternity, that the crime which he had committed was incited by reading of two murders, and one of these in the Bible. The Christian conscience was shocked, and severely censured the editor of the Illustrated Police News, but said nothing against the Bible. Is this volume, which contains such stories as those of Cain and Abel, Joseph and Potiphar's wife, Lot and his daughters, Jael and Sisera, David and Uriah, necessary to the moral health and cleanliness of mankind? It is time that this book was left to its literary fate, that it was allowed to die into obscurity and adorn alone the shelf of the scholar and the antiquarian. As soon would I think of presenting Rabelais to a child as this book of moral miasma which is called the Bible. It has too long occupied a sacred place in human estimation, and by its false title betrayed too many human hearts to ruin and death.

About ten years ago, there was quite a numerous sect in England calling themselves "peculiar people," who claimed to be followers of Jesus and to live according to his teachings. These peculiar people fashioned their lives upon Bible models and maxims, and pretended to obey to the letter the word of God, as they called the Jewish and Christian Scriptures. It happened that one of their children was taken sick. In obedience to the injunction of the Bible, the elders of their church were called in, who prayed over the child and laid hands upon it; but notwithstanding the assurance of the word of God that if the believer shall lay his hand on the sick they shall recover, the child shortly died. Three more children belonging to this peculiar people died within a few weeks, and at last the father of one of the children was arrested, charged with having neglected to provide necessary medical aid for his child, who had died in consequence of such neglect. The man "was prosecuted according to the power given by a statute which enacted that where parents allow their children to die without medical aid, they shall be liable to six months' imprisonment." The defendant in the case said: "The Lord saved me from my sins eleven years ago, and I now go according to the Scripture, and follow Christ. The word of God tells me to pray, and that if any are sick let him send for the elders of the Church, to anoint the sick with oil and pray over him. This is what I believe in, and what I have done, and if my child had not been sick unto death it would have recovered; but as it did not recover, it was the Lord's will that it should die."

The Chairman of the Board of Guardians before whom the man was tried met him with the statement that "there is nothing in what you have said that tells you not to send for a doctor." The defendant replied, "There is no passage in the whole Bible where I am told to send for a doctor. The command is, 'Send for the elders of the Church, and let them lay hands on him and anoint him with oil.'"

The man was convicted.

It is time that the law dealt with fanaticism, but it must do it in a way to prevent the making of fanatics. Freeman had Bible examples for his act and Bible assurances for his faith, the same as the peculiar people had Bible prescriptions for killing their children, and Mobbs a Bible murder to feed his mind and incite him to crime. The thing above all things else to be done to-day is to dethrone the Bible from its place, to destroy this book as an idol, and to cease profaning the name of God by calling such a book his word. To obey its commands would make us all murderers of our children as was John Baker in London, who would not send for a physician for his child because there was no command in the Word of God to do such a thing.

A religious revival had been going on in Pocasset for over a year. A somewhat noted revivalist had created no little excitement among the people of that quiet place by his preaching and praying. One of the many persons that were made Christians during this religious fever was a man named Charles Freeman. He became a great reader of the Bible, and was soon recognized as a sort of leader in the Christian society to which he belonged. The fruit of this revival is a father and mother, in prison and their child in its grave. Such a sequel should be a warning to Christians everywhere who countenance this insane folly of exciting human fears in the name of religion. Freeman, under the excitement of religious fervor, believed that God had chosen him to be the founder of a new sect. He fancied himself called to a mission to reveal the divine will as it had never been revealed before, and the sacrifice of his child was a part of the work which he was to perform. He told his followers what he was going to undertake to prove his faith and the faith of those who followed him, and his plan was fully approved. He expected that the hand of God would save him from crime, or that the laws of Nature would be suspended to retrieve his work.

Do you agree with a writer in one of our papers that it was not devotion, but conceit, that made Freeman kill his child? This writer thinks that it was conceit on the part of Freeman to think that God would stay his hand, or that Nature would suspend her laws, and regards it as wrong to blame Christianity for his madness. Let us see. The Bible, the book which Christianity teaches as divine, as holding the revealed law and will of God, recounts numerous instances where God interposed in human affairs, and contains the accounts of scores of miracles where Nature's laws were set aside, and in more than one instance just such an event as Freeman prophesied would transpire is recorded in the Bible as an actual occurrence. Was it conceit to believe the word of God? And was it conceit to have faith such as Freeman had? Not from a Christian standpoint; but rather the highest devotion. Freeman's crime must be put to the account of Christianity. It was the faith which the Christian Church teaches, faith in supernaturalism, faith in prayer, faith in miracles, faith in communion between man and God, that made Charles Freeman a murderer. It was faith without reason, which accepts the stories of Jesus walking on the water, raising people from the dead, turning water into wine, and coming back to life after being dead three days, that sent little Edith Freeman to the grave.

No wonder that the Christian Church is frightened at the image of its faith when it is carried out into deeds. No wonder that Christians hasten to shift the responsibility on to the Second Adventists, whom they call a pack of ignorant, foolish fanatics; but it is evangelical Christianity, under whatever name it goes, that is responsible for this Pocasset murder. It is the Christianity which holds the Old and New Testaments to be God's word, which professes to believe that God can act outside of Nature's laws, and that a man's faith is imputed to him as righteousness. Every incident which went towards making Freeman a criminal is found in the Christian Scriptures, and he sharpened the blade to kill his little daughter on the book which to-day will be read from thousands of pulpits in the United States as the word of God. If there were as many thousands of honest, brave men in those pulpits, with the common feelings of humanity throbbing in their breasts, there would be as many churches without Bibles, for they would take with them books from which to read, that were not tainted with such vile language and wicked stories as this volume, which Christianity has made divine, contains. It is the Christian faith which drove Freeman to the crime for which he must answer to the law. Had he never known the superstitions of the Christian Church, had he never been taught that the Bible was God's word, he would to-day be a happy father instead of lying in a murderer's cell.

Christian preachers and editors are trying to show that Freeman was insane, that he was a crazy fanatic; but what made him insane? What is the cause of his fanaticism? There is but one answer: The teachings of the Christian Church. The only wonder is that no more such crimes have been committed under such teachings. Charles Freeman lies to-day in a prison cell awaiting trial for murder of his child; and his wife is held upon a charge of aiding and abetting him in the horrible deed. There are many persons in the country who hope to see these fanatics suffer the extreme penalty of the law for their deeds; they believe that there is no other way to check the spirit of religious frenzy than by making examples of a few of these enthusiasts. There certainly never was a case that appealed more to the sympathy and charity of mankind; and while we cannot wish these deluded beings a worse punishment than their own crimes have brought upon them, we cannot see Freeman any less than a dangerous person whom society has the right to restrain, if not to punish. Whether or not the community shall demand the lives of these parents for the death of their child, it should manifest a disposition to be protected from the teachings that have brought such sad havoc to a once happy family, and such consternation to a once peaceful neighborhood.

If the court before which they will be brought for trial rules that their delusion mitigates their responsibility and visits a mild penalty in consequence, we sincerely trust that the court of human justice which will weigh the cause of their crime will not hesitate to declare that the book from which they drew the poison that instigated their hands to so terrible a deed deserves to be cast out from its present place in the reverence of the world, and never more be taught as the word of God.

If a scaffold is built on which to hang Charles Freeman for his crime, justice demands that every Bible in the land be burned beside it.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

NO. XXXV.

There remains another important and heretofore overwhelmingly difficult connection of passages (in the Apocalypse) to be expounded. In the conclusion of the drama it is said, "And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and put a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled; and after that he must be loosed a little season." By the bottomless pit is meant "the abyss," about which the hermetic philosophers talk so abundantly, and by which is meant the unfathomable depths of the logical and temporal past, out of which, as out of "the womb of time," all change or evolution proceeds. It is the great backlying incomprehensibility, whence all instability and hence evil originated; the source of time and temporality, which is the old serpent and dragon of this same imaginative literature, as has now been sufficiently demonstrated. The essential idea throughout is that immutability (4) is divine, male, true, and good; and that mutability (8) is human, female, false, and bad. It is this principle of evil which was to be overcome in the great conflict, and it was with a view to that victory that it could be said, "Time shall be no more"; and since the currential flux and instability of the sea, and the sea itself like a great river, is another symbol of time, it is added elsewhere, "and there shall be no more sea."

To bind Satan and cast him into the bottomless pit is the same as to repress time and the on-going of change (and so of evil), and to crowd them back into the abyss whence they issued. This whole imagery simply means the overcoming of the principle of evil by the prevalence of good, or as the outcome of the great conflict between good and evil; but the first victory in that great war would not be a complete one,—would not absolutely extinguish evil and end the war. At first, and as all that could be immediately hoped for or promised, there would occur the relative extinction of evil, its repression and partial or seeming extinction, for a very long time, which means rather in a very great degree,—for a virtual but not an absolute eternity; for a thousand (1000) years, 10 meaning many and 1000 a very great many (i.e., in a very great degree). That is to say, the number 10 means a great many, a great deal, in a high degree; and 1000 a relatively infinite augmentation, but not an absolute one, of the same idea,—infinite but not infinite in the absolute sense. This is a very important discrimination, in order that we may understand what follows respecting the reappearance of Satan on the scene of action, and about the two kinds of death, and the two resurrections,—the most subtle metaphysical speculations in the whole Apocalypse.

The world lies "dead" before the vision of the writer "in trespasses and sins." This is the first death, which is assumed as known or conceded, no account being given of it, the series of events opening with the first resurrection. Still there was life enough to struggle against the body of death, and destined to rise triumphantly above it. The first victory will be the relative extinction of evil, which is the cause of death. But, notwithstanding this seeming or apparently complete extinction of evil, to last through a long period of the happy future of humanity, the germ of evil would not be absolutely eradicated. The fact (it is averred) must be recognized, that in any relative view of the nature of things evil is always extant, and ready to spring up again after any amount of repression and of conquest over it. It is this precise idea which is expressed symbolically by the statement that, "after that [the thousand years], he [Satan] must be loosed for a little season." After all, that is to say, evil must come in for something. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection" (v. 6), which is the relative suppression of evil. Fortunate are they who shall experience even so much of blessedness; fortunate nate they who shall yield even to this general predominance of good. "On such, the second death hath no power." That is to say, they are not concerned in what is now about to be said further, of a second and ulterior kind of death and resurrection resulting from the more subtle and occult persistency of evil. They have become good; and this ulterior special kind of death and resurrection, or recovery from it, concerns those who shall have persistently remained bad or evil.

But before passing to this subject, let us consider another designation which is applied to the abyss (v. 10); viz., "the lake of fire and brimstone." What is temporal is also mundane. What is time-like is also earth-like; and both are, from the point of view in question, devilish. (Cf. Paul's expression, "earthly, selfish, devilish.") The beginning of time, as an abyss, finds, therefore, an analogous rendering, in the depths or bowels of the earth, up and out of which evil is then supposed to arise; as God and good, on the other hand, descend from the air and space above. The depths and bowels of the earth are, or are supposed to be, and were, or were supposed to be, a burning lake of molten matter, an incandescent mass, of which, judging from their outpourings through the mouths of volcanoes, the fuel was sulphur or brimstone. So it came to be that, with the hermetics, the abyss or bottomless pit, as the backlying source of time and change, and the lake of fire and brimstone, as the molten interior of the earth (and also hell, or the hole or opening in the earth, Ger. hölle), were synonymous, and alike the residence of Satan and the origin of evil, into which it was held that evil was to be repressed, or crowded back, and there withheld; but not at first, absolutely. The grand evil of all is destruction or dissolution, or death, whence the "angel" or prince or general of the bottomless pit is Abaddon, the Hebrew word for destruction (ch. ix., v. 11).

We come now, in due order, to the second death and the second resurrection. The first death was the introduction and general prevalence of evil. It, as sin, "brought death into the world, and all our woe." The first resurrection was to be the general and relative, but not the absolute, prevalence of good over evil. But evil would still exist. What, then, can be said of its ultimate or final and absolute extinction? This is, or would be were it to occur, the second death, in a most remarkable sense,—THE DEATH OF DEATH ITSELF, the death even of hell itself; and so accepting the paradox, with poetic boldness the revelator declares (v. 14), "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire," that is, into hell, the essential idea of which is destruction; and it is emphatically added, "THIS IS THE SECOND DEATH." The second death is, therefore, the destruction of death and hell, or the full, final, and absolute conquest over evil. The second resurrection is not specifically described, but it is now easily inferred. It is the escape, elevation, or salvation of those who had remained subject to death and evil at the prior and partial deliverance. It can be no other than the rescue of the wicked from the power of evil, and so the ultimate redemption and salvation of all. The good are not to be affected by this ultimate and supreme event, for they were saved already. "On such, the second death hath no power"; but those who had rested still under the power of evil needed, and could only be saved by, this absolute and final conquest over evil itself. After that, after all names were thus inscribed in the book of life, after death and hell and the lake of fire itself should thus be obliterated from the programme of being, then the writer might safely add, as a mere flourish of rhetoric: "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life [when there were no longer any such] was cast into the lake of fire [which no longer had any existence]."

What has preceded includes substantially all the numerical passages of the Apocalypse, except the number 4 in connection with the living creatures (ch. iv.), and 12 with its duplicate 24 and its square 144 in the numbering of the saints, the description of the New Jerusalem, etc., the cube 1728 not being mentioned. These will be treated of incidentally in what follows. Before looking, in conclusion, more specifically (though still very cursorily) at the general plot and structure of this remarkable drama, let us resume, in a sort of tabular way, what we may call the inherent symbolic meanings of the elementary numbers from 1 up to 12 (or 18); in part as they were construed by the earliest crop of scientific investigators in prehistoric times, and as they were traditionally delivered from that time down by an unbroken succession of hermetics, mystics, and philosophers, especially including the Pythagoreans, and spread as a doctrine over all the known world from China and Hindustan to Western Europe, subsiding into the so-called sacred numbers of Scripture exegesis; and, in part, as the same investigation is reinstated, enlarged, and clarified by Universology.

TABLE OF SYMBOLIC MEANINGS OF THE ELEMENTARY NUMBERS.

One (1): Unit, unity, singleness, the Absolute, the absolute unlimited One, God (to ev of the Greeks). First: the first, origin, governing cause, government, authority, arbitrary will, origin-and-government (Gr. ἀρχή). Least portion and origin of substance, element: unit, individual, separate one, least thing, atom, tittle, jot (Gr. ὠν). Point (first element of form): position, positiveness as fact, or first actual presentation, crude primitive positivism. Nature or naturism: statism, rest, immobility, death.

It is to be observed that the meanings thus involved in the single numerical idea One are so numerous and varied that they swing around the circle from that which is absolute and infinite, or most general (universal), to that which is most especially individualized and particular; from that which is the source of all life to absolute death; while yet they are logically related in unity, or as one idea. This immense scope of meaning is inevitably inherent in what as unism (or one-like-ness) is one of the two fundamental generalizations of all things. Unism is therefore, necessarily, a very vague idea, taken in its generality, and only becomes definite in its special applications. So also of dualism (and trinitism). The primary, secondary, and tertiary meanings of 2 are, if possible, still more striking and contradictory.

Two (2): Duad, duality, one and another one, whence, 1st meaning: opposition, antagonism, averseness, "the adversary," SATAN, the devil (the opposite of God, which is to ev, the Supreme One). The hermetics held to this one of the several meanings of 2. Pythagoras is said to have sworn by the number 2. It is more probable, from the side lights on the subject, that the tradition is confused, and that he objected or swore at it. The 2 is the beginning of a row (complete in 3), a series, succession, evanescence, time-like, ordinal, temporal, and hence evil. 2nd meaning: polarity of the thought-line which connects the one and the other one, line, edge, straight-edge, cut, division, parting, de-parting, and motism or movement (as the first or side-wise aspect of a line, but the opposite idea of tie and union in the length-wiseness of the line). 3rd meaning: straight, just, even, true. Fr. uni, unie, so that the 2 goes over inversely into the meaning of 1, but a higher kind of unity: as the one went over into duality, in the form of individuality, or by separation from the other one,—in each case a TERMINAL CONVERSION INTO OPPOSITES. Dualism, as two-like-ness, sums up all this diversity-in-unity of meaning, counterparting that of unism.

Three (3): Two plus one or one plus two; the first or elementary unity of one and two, or of unism and dualism, in the total constitution of being; which as three, distributedly, are dissident or unreconciled and conflicting, and hence evil. Subsumed under the one, they become tri-unity and divine, but in that state they are virtually four. The 3 here laps back upon the 1 (3+1), and so closes and completes the first circuit of number. The series from 1 to 3 thus becomes an elementary epitome of absolutely all numeration; and unism (one-ism), dualism (two-ism), and trinitism (three-ism) become, or rather are and must be, the three fundamental principles of philosophy and science (inasmuch as number is representative of all things numerable; that is to say, of all things). Or, as elsewhere stated, the broadest and quite all-inclusive law of science at large—the fundamental thesis of universology—is: That all phenomena whatsoever, in all spheres of being, material and mental, are distributed into three primal classes, having reference to the numbers 1, 2, and 3 respectively; for which reason the three governing principles of universal things are named Unism (one-ism), Dualism (two-ism), and Trinitism (three-ism). These numbers are the head numbers of the mathematical, which is, scientifically, the governing, sphere of things. They first distribute the universe at large into (1.) The concrete or agglomerative (unism); (2.) The abstract or separative (dualism); and (3.) The rational, rationate, ratio ed, or proportional (2+1). They then distribute the contents of each particular science (or of its domain) in a precisely similar manner, and so on, subdivisively, to infinity.

Four (4): Quaternary, tetraktis, square, correctness, co-exactitude, equity, non-perversity, non-depravity, whence innocence, goodness, or the Good (in the true); spiritual excellence allied with space or measured by the four cardinal points, as contrasted with the time-like and merely rational meaning of 3, organic rectitude, divine quality, the cardinal sphere of entities and properties (specially and representatively so within the cardinality.)

The contrasted meanings of 3 and 4 have been so extensively discussed in the body of this exposition, that they need not be enlarged upon at this point. It may be restated, however, that, geometrically allied, 3 has to do with everything ratio-ed, or non-rectangular, and 4 with everything rectangular. It may also be added that of the series 1, 2, 3, 4, the 1 and 4 (the extremes) were reckoned good by the ancients, and 2 and 3 (the middle terms) were reckoned evil.

Five (5): This number is 2+3 = 5 = one-half of 1+2+3+4 = 10. Ten signifies much, many, numerous, large (see 10); and 5, the antithesis of this; few, little, small. Geometrically, it yields the pentagonal figure, the proper incipency of polygonal configuration, intermediate between the straight and the curve, hence common-place, simple, natural. Emerson says, "Nature loves the number 5."

Six (6): This is 3+3, the reduplication and augmentation of the evil character of 3; as in 666, the number of the beast; co-depravity, complex perversity, social evil.

Seven (7): This is 3+4, the unity of good and evil or their spheres or domains; of the temporal and spiritual; and hence, totality, ALL; the integration of the crooked and the straight; of chaos and the cosmos, of sin and organic righteousness, the crude aggregate wholeness, from the unblended, non-reconciled, inharmonious union of opposites, spanning but not truly unifying the entire sum of existence; the universe in its primitive or natural condition, as contrasted with its scientized exactitude (see 8), and its artistic harmony (see 12).

Eight (8): This is 4+4; co-quaternality, cubosity; supreme or absolute rectitude, the type of all-sided straightness; ALL, in the sense of complete ad-equateness to the demands of truth. "Give a portion to 7, also to 8"; be just alike to the freedom of Nature and to the rigors of exact truth (science).

Nine (9): The trinity of trinities (3×3); or, the trinity of trinities; and, in this higher sense, the GRAND DISTRIBUTIVE NUMBER,—the source of the infinity of tri-logies which occur throughout Nature and all the philosophies; THE BASIS OF CLASSI-FICATION, subsumed in the first and universal trilogy, unism, dualism, and trinitism. On the recognition of this classificatory potency of the number 9, by the ancients, see, especially, Exposition of Daniel, by R. A. Watkinson, at large. In the minor sense, as a higher aggravation of evil than 3 and 6, the 9 does not appear.

Ten (10): This 5+5 is, geometrically allied, polygonism numerously constituted and verging into the circle (see 5 as the lower term of polygonism); hence MANY, but not the infinitely many, which is circular; in respect to time, a great while (as 7+3 or all plus a deficiency, see text of this exposition).

Eleven (11): This unusual number, in symbolism, is best viewed as 12-1; and then means a coming short of the absolute grace and perfection symbolized by 12.

Twelve (12): This is 6+6, the reversion by excess from evil to good, 3×4, the higher unity of 3 and 4 than in 7 (3+4); their blended harmony and reconciliation by the recognition of "the soul of good in things evil." Instead of a mere adherence in unity; or, 7+5, the crude totality (7) plus a somewhat more (5); ALL, in the modulated, artistic, or finished sense (see 7 and 8),—the Artismism of the Numerism; the high harmony of principles, classification, and order. This most plastic and conciliative of all the elementary numbers denotes, in the Apocalypse GRACE (as it does, more generally, gracefulness in the art sense) and the ultimate perfection of the Church; whence 12, 24, and 144, as the supreme and triumphant numbers. As redemption from the state of individual and complex social perversity (see 3 and 6), forgiveness and the consequent love it inspires, it denotes, celestially, religious ecstasy, bliss, and supreme excellence and happiness of all sorts.

Thirteen (13): This ultimate and "pivotal" (as called by Fourier) elementary number, is superimposed upon the otherwise ultimate harmony existent in the 12, as its return to the primal 1, and its consequent completion of this larger circuit of distributive principles (see 3). Hence, if it had occurred in the Apocalypse, it would have been used to denote the Lord God, presiding over the Church; or the bridegroom as related to the Church, 12 or 144 meaning the Church. The harmony of 12 may then again be viewed as a graceful swaying or balanced vibration between the deficiency of 11 and the exuberant or infinite fullness of the 13.

Recurring to and restating the 3 and 4, inverted as 4 and 3, 4 is, in the moral sphere, according to the ideas of the ancients, truth and its good; honor, dignity, masculinity; the higher style of things; the spiritual world or the cardinal sphere; and 3 (repeating the ordinal series, 1st, 2d, 3d, etc.) means actuality; the state of natural wrong; falsity and its evil; Nature; woman and her tendencies; whatsoever is ordinary, mundane, or material; in a word, the ordinary or inferior sphere of universal things. It is now, let me emphatically state, the farther on and strictly universological perception and demonstration, that all this is a one-sided and partial insight into the whole truth of the subject; that "there is a soul of good in things evil," and, inversely, a soul of evil in things good; that the universe is more complex than has been thought; that there are two ups and two downs (as we stand at the earth or the sun), two opposite and coequal scales of superiority and inferiority; that woman has her range of supremacy as man has his, etc. This is merely a universological caveat, that in stating the doctrine of the ancients we are only gaining a standing-ground for the understanding of the higher doctrine. But it is the ancient idea alone with which we are here brought directly in contact.

Fourier, who dealt largely with the sacred numbers, asserts, with startling boldness, that music is the only one of the harmonies as yet discovered and developed; that a series of such harmonizations are to occur, and preeminently, and in precise correspondent unity with music, that of human society, through the similar harmonization of the human passions, etc. He cites the unison, the 3 (or 4) chords, the 7 notes of the diatonic scale, the 12 of the chromatic, etc. Is he the scientific prophet of humanity? Are Fourier the socialist and St John the revelator, who are at one with each other, right; and are all commonplace mortals mistaken? Is it worth while seriously to inquire?

A PARALLEL CASE.

It is said that history repeats itself. Certainly this is true in respect to remarkable crimes. Nothing that happens in one age but finds its parallel in another. An old member of the bar, when reading of the Pocasset horror, recalled a similar affair in Maine more than half a century ago. Knowing that the venerable Judge Sprague, now eighty-six years of age, but in full possession of his remarkable faculties, had seen the principal actor in that tragedy, he requested the judge to dictate an account of it, which he kindly consented to do; and the narrative is as follows:—

In 1815, at Augusta, Maine, I became acquainted with James McCausland, who then was, and had been for several years, a prisoner in the common jail at that place. He was confined as an insane person, and was, in fact, a monomaniac on the subject of religion. I was informed that before his imprisonment he lived in Pittston, a town on the Kennebec River, opposite the town of Gardiner; that he was a common laborer, quite ignorant, and unable to read or write. There was in Gardiner an Episcopal church which he sometimes attended, but his religious excitement was occasioned by hearing an itinerant preacher. He told me himself that it became impressed on his mind that he must make a burnt-offering sacrifice, but he didn't know how to do it, and was much troubled. At length it occurred to him that it would be best to burn the church at Gardiner, and kill a certain woman who was living in a small house on the bank of the Cobosecont, a few miles above Gardiner village; but he was still doubtful. That in this unsettled state of mind he went alone at midnight into the church, and while there, thinking on the subject, he heard a voice from heaven, saying, "Young man, push on;" that this meant that he should go forward and do what he was then contemplating,—that is, burn the church and kill the woman. This removed all doubt; then he knew what he must do. He thought he would save the "holy things," as he called them,—that is, the Bible, prayer-book, and pulpit-cushions. He accordingly carried them a short distance, and hid them under the roots of a tree which had been blown down. He then went and got some live coals, carried them in a shoe to the church, set it on fire, and it was wholly consumed. He said the next day there was a great talk about it, and another man was accused, but he went forward and told the people that that man had nothing to do with it; that he set fire to the church himself; and to convince them of it he carried some of them to the place and showed them the holy things which he had saved. The burnt offering was then complete, and it only remained to make the sacrifice. For that purpose he got into a canoe in the night-time, shoved it up the stream till he came opposite where the woman lived, there landed and went to the house. On entering he found two men asleep on the floor; he stepped over them and saw the woman sitting by the side of a bed on which there was a sick person, and, at the same time, by the light of the fire he saw a butcher-knife sticking in a team overhead; and he knew that the Lord had prepared that knife for his purpose. He took it, went to the woman, seized her by the hair and cut her throat; that he then left the house without being obstructed, got into his canoe and went home. The next day a great crowd came after him, some of them armed, as if they expected a violent resistance; but he had no such idea. He submitted quietly, and they carried him to jail.

I was told by others that when he was arraigned in court upon an indictment for murder, he said he killed the woman. Chief-Justice Parsons told him that he was under no obligation to confess his guilt, and had a right to require the Commonwealth to prove it. He answered that he killed the woman, and he shouldn't lie about it. The jury upon his trial returned a verdict of guilty, but he was never sentenced. On the calendar of prisoners was an entry, "James McCausland, convict of murder"; and under this record he was held in prison until his death, more than thirty years, I believe. I conversed with him several times, and he always told the same story. He answered all questions readily, and without excitement. I asked him if he was not sorry he had killed that woman? He said no; he was commanded to do it, and his sins were forgiven. I asked him if he would do the same again if he were out of jail? He said no; he should have no occasion for it. I said, "But suppose that you should receive another similar command, would you obey it?" He answered: "Oh, I shouldn't receive another command; my sins are forgiven." He was always grave and serious. I never saw him smile, but he had no tinge of melancholy or depression. He never indicated a wish to be liberated, nor made a complaint of his treatment by the jailer. He seemed perfectly satisfied with himself and his condition. I was told that a woman on seeing him burst into tears. He said to her: "Good woman, don't cry for me, but for yourself and your children. I am better off than you are." He had no anxiety for the present or the future. He once said to me: "I am as happy here in the arms of my Saviour as an infant child in the arms of its mother." I think he never had a doubt that burning the church and killing the woman were meritorious acts, in obedience to an express command from heaven, and that his sins were thereby expiated and forgiven.

He was so much an object of curiosity that he had many visitors, from each of whom he exacted two cents. We all stood outside the iron door of his cell, and saw and talked with him through a small, square hole near the top. If, while conversing with one, another appeared, he would dodge out of sight and remain there until the tribute was paid. I asked him why he charged that sum, and neither more nor less. He said it was because that was the smallest sum mentioned in the Scripture,—the widow cast into the treasury two mites,—and he thought that if he charged only the smallest sum mentioned he was doing right. He learned to read while in prison, but I never saw any book in his cell except a Bible and a prayer-book. He generally asked his visitors if he should make a prayer; if the answer was in the affirmative, he would repeat one of the prayers of the Episcopal Church. He was a large man, above the average height, with broad shoulders and other indications of physical strength. In his countenance there was nothing remarkable except his eyes, which were very piercing. He wore a gown or robe, covering his shoulders and reaching to his ankles. He was cleanly and neat in his person, and when he stood erect, with his long, abundant beard resting upon his breast, his appearance was dignified and patriarchal. His cell was not large, and was situated on the ground floor, near the entrance of the building. After being in the gloomy cell many years, I think about twenty, he was on one occasion taken out. It was in order to measure him for some new clothing. The jailer conducted him through a covered way to his dwelling-house. He was there met by a tailoress, who at once proceeded to take the necessary measurements. While she was doing this, which was but a short time, he stood perfectly still; when she turned away, he walked to the middle of the room, looked about, and said, "This seems to me like a palace;" then going toward a window, he said, "What large windows you have!" It was a small dining-room, with a painted floor, an ordinary table, and a few common chairs. The windows were small. There were four or five men present besides myself; they made some few remarks, but McCausland was silent. He seemed excited, walked to and fro three or four minutes, and then said, "I will go back." Mr. Dillingham, the jailer, said to him: "You needn't be in a hurry, McCausland; sit down," and offered him a chair. He said, "No, I'll go back; I'll go back;" and then of his own accord he returned to his cell. Some years after this, when I was attending court at Augusta, Mr. Dillingham came to me and said, "McCausland wants to see you." I was much surprised, and went forthwith to the jail. As soon as he learned I was there, he put out his hand with some bank bills in it, saying to me, "Take this." I declined, and asked him what he wanted. He replied, "You are going to Washington soon, and I want you to go and see General Jackson, and get him to order them to pay me my pension" [he had been a soldier in the war of the Revolution]; he added: "The county now take my pension to pay for my board, but I think if they keep me here they ought to pay my board." I told him that General Jackson could not help him, that the law directed how his pension should be disposed of. He replied: "General Jackson is above the law, and if you go to him he will order them to pay me my pension."

This was the last interview I had with him. I soon afterwards removed from the State.—Boston Advertiser, May 12, 1879.

DEATH OF DR. J. T. BLAKENEY.

[AN UNKNOWN friend in Dunkirk, N.Y., sends the following extract from the Dunkirk Herald of May 10, noticing the death of Dr. John T. Blakeney, of that city, who not infrequently contributed to THE INDEX in its early years, and whose letters were always genial, thoughtful, and well written.—Ed.]

Our fellow-citizen, J. T. Blakeney, M.D., departed this life on the afternoon of Tuesday, May 6, 1879, at a quarter to three o'clock, aged seventy-seven years. His disease was dropsy of the heart, from which he had been suffering for the past three years.

The deceased was born in the town of Galway, County Galway, Ireland, and was the descendant of a family of the highest respectability and social and public position. A grand-uncle, Field-Marshal Sir Edward Blakeney, who died but a few years ago, was one of the most distinguished men in the military annals of England during the early part of the present century, having received from his government the very highest honors. He entered the army in 1794 as cornet, and successively held the ranks of lieutenant, captain, major, lieutenant-colonel, colonel, major-general, lieutenant-general, general, and finally, in 1862, was made a field-marshal. Others of the Doctor's family, more nearly related to him, have held high positions of honor in the service of their country.

The Doctor's parents having died when he was quite young, he was cared for by an uncle, John Henry Blakeney, to whom had descended the family estate, called Abbert, near the village of Castle Blakeney, also in the County Galway.

At about the age of thirty he came to this country, bringing with him a young family. He lived for a short time in Canada, when he came to this State, residing for some years at Rome and Utica. In 1842 his first wife died, and in 1844 he married again. In 1846 he left this State and became a resident of Pittsburgh, Pa., and from there, after a few years, he removed to New York city. From there, in 1853, he went to Ohio, and from that State came to Dunkirk in 1859, where he has ever since resided, following successfully his profession, and enjoying the confidence and esteem of his fellow-citizens.

In all the relations of life the Doctor proved himself to be a kind, indulgent, and truthful husband, father, and friend. As a citizen he was always patriotic and true; as a physician he was capable and attentive. He was noted for his clear intellect and powers of logic, and though strongly impressed with a belief in the truth of what he professed, he always showed deference to the opinions of others, though they differed greatly from his own. He gave much thought to religious subjects, and was an earnest and conscientious investigator. He was a member of the Catholic Church until nearly sixty years of age, when, becoming convinced of the unsoundness of Christian theology, he at once forsook a system he deemed untruthful, narrow, and illiberal. Subsequently he became a Spiritualist, and remained such till his death.

The Doctor's character was in every way above reproach. He was truly what the poet calls the noblest work of God—AN HONEST MAN.

He retained his mental powers in unimpaired vigor until the very last, being fully conscious of his approaching dissolution, which he welcomed as a glad release from the sufferings of this life. He entertained no fears as to the future, believing firmly that he, in common with all the children of his Heavenly Father, would be properly cared for, and that no disturbing influence could thwart or turn aside the beneficent laws of an all-wise Creator.

The Doctor's funeral took place on Thursday afternoon, 8th inst., and was conducted by the family as nearly as might be in accordance with what they knew to be his wishes. There was a total absence of all elements of mourning. Instead of black crape, a bouquet and white ribbon were placed upon the door, and flowers profusely decorated the casket and room in which the remains lay. The services were simple and informal. A few remarks upon the life and character of the deceased were made by Judge Sheward. He was followed by Mrs. A. H. Colby, a prominent Spiritualist, who delivered a short discourse, which is spoken of as very beautiful and appropriate to the occasion. The remains were taken to Forest Hill Cemetery, Fredonia, for burial, and were followed to the grave by a large concourse of our citizens, as well as by many from surrounding towns. At the grave Mrs. Colby said a few parting words, when the earthly remains of our late esteemed fellow-citizen were left to quietly sleep in their last resting-place.

The general expression of our people is that no purer or better man ever lived or died among us. He left a wife and seven children.

"WHAT," said an interviewer to an unpledged candidate, "do you intend to do if you are elected?" "My goodness!" said the poor fellow, "what shall I do if I am not elected?"

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

TRUTH.

O Truth, a form of virgin loveliness
Fitting might thee incarnate, even such
As old Athenal's Maid of Wisdom wore.

Her eyes of deep celestial blue might well
Be thine, but not her Gorgon shield and helm.
The panoply thou wear'st is light alone,
Wherewith thou deal'st immediate wounds,
Through Error's buckler driving shaft on shaft,— Ethereal archery no mail can fend.

Like dawn thou com'st dispersing gloom;
About thy radiant feet, the harbingers
Of day, cower gods and demons old, the brood
Of night shrieking in terror from thy face,
By conflict dashed to loveliness austere.

They velled and templed thee of yore, but thou
The function, name, of deity dost shun,
Deaf unto selfish prayer and beaded knee.
Thy priesthood are the sons of knowledge, light,
Who ever served thee 'neath the blue of heaven,
Leaving to Sacerdotes dark altars
And frankincense and prayers and gilded shrines.

Eternal Verity, thee reason knew
In its ideal realm; thee knew and loved,
And made thee linger in seclusion long,
Not hastening thy descent where passion raved,
And force barbaric swayed the tribes of men,
With superstition for its dark ally.

At length with joy thine Avatar we see;
The few alone no longer thee behold
In bright, ideal elevation throned,
Beyond the ken of the low-thoughted throng.
Thy shining sandals flash along the ways
Of common life in field and market-place.

Thou draw'st the servile multitude away
From mouldering shrines, worm-eaten symbols old,
And slavish attitudes of adoration,
To gaze erect with lifted front upon
Thy charms, that win with purest loveliness
Of roseate cheek and azure eye and brow serene,
Not crowned, but wreath'd with many an auburn tress.

Beauty and Justice are thy sisters bright;
And Grace and Muse will minister to thee
With lither motions, sweeter melodies,
Than fabled Error ever could command.

Thou giv'st to sage and bard not petty span
Of this small orb for inspiration, but Immeasurable space and time wherein
Eternal might works ever without haste
Or rest, hanging with worlds like wreaths of flowers
Unnumbered firmaments, whereof Urania,
The mythic, olden queen of astral lore,
In her most rapt and loftiest mood ne'er dreamed.

Long-time illusions reign by thy sufferance.
At last thou turn'st a bright iconoclast,
Rousing the mind from torpor and content,
To put away its crumbling idols foul.
Then springs enraged Reaction to the rescue,
Taunting thee with vile epithets, till thine eye
Emits a flash that slays without a wound,
Shrivelling thy haughty foe to nothingness.

B. W. BALL.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 24.

Nath'l Little, $3; Mrs. L. B. Sayles, $1; T. J. Atwood, $3.50; J. Irvine, 10 cents; James Hull, $6; M. E. Martin, $1; American News Co., $4.50; Max Nathan, $1.50; Jefferson Cary, $3.20; W. H. Williams, $1.50; Free Religious Association, $100.00; Emil Annke, $1; T. B. Skinner, $2; Ira D. Foot, $3.20; W. H. Boughton, $3.25; T. W. Harrison, 10 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 29, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. *Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. O'BRYEN, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SURUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Eighth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held at their office, No. 35 Monroe Street, Toledo, Ohio, on Saturday, June 7, 1879, at 2:30 P.M., for the hearing of the annual reports, the election of Directors for the ensuing year, and the transaction of any other business that may come before the meeting.

F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The twelfth annual meeting of the Free Religious Association will be held in Boston on the 29th and 30th of May.

The Association will hold its opening session for business (election of officers, hearing of reports, etc.) at Union Hall, in the Young Men's Christian Union Building, on Boylston Street, at 7.45 o'clock, Thursday evening, the 29th.

The Convention on Friday, the 30th, will be held in Parker Memorial Hall, corner of Berkeley and Appleton Streets, with sessions at 10.30 A.M. and 8 P.M.

The new President, Prof. Adler, is to preside, and at one of the sessions will make a special address giving his views of the "Practical Needs of Free Religion." An essay is to be given by John W. Chadwick, on "Theological and Rational Ethics." Among other speakers expected are M. J. Savage and F. E. Abbot, of Boston, G. E. Gordon, of Milwaukee, C. D. B. Mills, of Syracuse, and F. A. Hinckley, of Providence.

On Friday evening, the Association will have its Social Festival in Union Hall, at which Col. T. W. Higginson will preside.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

IN Unity for March, there was this brief editorial paragraph, doubtless intended as a pithy and crushing refutation of Joseph Cook's charge: "The Free Religious Association, which Joseph Cook charged with supporting immorality, numbers among its officers Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Octavius B. Frothingham, Lydia Maria Child, George William Curtis, Prof. E. L. Youmans, and Thomas Wentworth Higginson." It would be easy to select seven men and women every whit as pure and noble as these in their personal characters, who yet a few years ago defended slavery as a moral and divine institution; did they, or did they not, "support immorality"? Cannot radicals, at least, see that immorality may be supported with the most moral intentions? If the persons above named should say that they favored "repeal" of the postal law of 1873, which is what Joseph Cook charged the Association with doing, we should say without hesitation that Joseph Cook was right in saying that they thereby "supported immorality." It is not for radicals to imagine that they can settle moral questions by simply quoting names. Nobody knows whether, on this issue, the Free Religious Association would or would not "support immorality"; it has not yet spoken on the subject, and, until it has spoken, nobody can speak for it. Joseph Cook's slander lay in saying that it had, when it had not, spoken. For one, we think it is indeed time for it to speak.

SEVEN ETHICAL LAWS OF RATIONALISM.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. This is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. Rationalism has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual National Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.

2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.

3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases: i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

THE FUTURE OF RATIONALISM.

The liberal movement in America has evidently reached a stage of progress in which it is coming to consciousness of a radical revolution in its philosophy—a revolution of ideas more profound, and ultimately more fruitful, than was the original Protestant abandonment of ecclesiastical authority for private judgment in the interpretation of the Scriptures. The Protestant principle has reached its logical ultimatum in Individualism, which now asserts the final and supreme authority of "private judgment," not only in "faith," but equally in "morals." This is to assert the responsibility of the individual to himself alone for his belief and conduct—his absolute irresponsibility to any and every intellectual or moral standard that it may not suit his sovereign pleasure to set up; and this is to deny the existence of all universal laws of truth and morality. Beyond this the principle of private judgment is logically incapable of development or extension. The "Catholic" or universal Church, shattered by centuries of successive schisms and split up into innumerable sects, has at last shrunk to the "Church of one member," as Mr. Alcott has not inaptly described the individual; and civil society has shrunk to what might be similarly described as the "State of one citizen." There is no further progress possible in the direction of social disintegration. The single principle of "private judgment," if unbalanced by the principle of universal reason, leads irresistibly, both in thought and in history, to pure Individualism; and Individualism, in the sight of the whole world, is betraying its true nature to-day as the philosophy of upreason, licentiousness, and moral irresponsibility. Is that to be the goal of free thought? If not, what shall be its goal? The story of the past may throw some light upon this question.

1. In 1815, the long-suppressed controversy in the New England church broke into open separation, and Unitarianism was born out of the irrepressible demand for "free inquiry." In 1819, Dr. Channing preached his famous sermon at the ordination of Jared Sparks, defining the new liberalism. In this he said: "Whatever doctrines seem to us to be already taught in the Scriptures, we receive without reserve or exception. . . . Jesus Christ is the only Master of Christians, and whatever he taught, either during his personal ministry or by his inspired Apostles, we regard as of Divine authority, and profess to make the rule of our lives. . . . We reason about the Bible precisely as civilians do about the Constitution under which we live; who, you know, are accustomed to limit one provision of that venerable instrument by others, and to fix the precise import of its parts by inquiring into its general spirit, into the intentions of its authors, and into the prevalent feelings, impressions, and circumstances of the time when it was framed. Without these principles of interpretation, we frankly acknowledge that we cannot defend the Divine authority of the Scriptures."

This position only expressed one side of the elder Unitarianism, even as held by its acknowledged chief representative. It conceded to Orthodoxy the supernatural revelation, and differs mainly in denying the authority of Orthodox interpretations of this revelation. In his letter on "Creeds," Dr. Channing exclaims to the "creed-makers": "Is it possible that you are unaided men like myself, having no more right to interpret the New Testament than myself, and that you yet exalt your interpretations as infallible standards of truth, and the necessary conditions of salvation? Stand out of my path. I wish to go to the Master."

But there was another side of the elder Unitarianism which Dr. Channing himself expressed thus in his discourse on "Spiritual Freedom": "I call that mind free which jealously guards its intellectual rights and powers, which calls no man master, which does not content itself with a passive or hereditary faith, which opens itself to light whencesoever it may come, which receives new truth as an angel from heaven, which, whilst consulting others, inquires still more of the oracle within itself, and uses instructions from abroad not to supersede but to quicken and exalt its own energies. . . . I call that mind free which protects itself against the usurpations of society, which does not cower to human opinion. . . . I call that mind free which is jealous of its own freedom, which guards itself from being merged in others, which guards its empire over itself as nobler than the empire of the world."

Thus in its very origin Unitarianism acknowledged Jesus as its "Master," yet vigorously professed to "call no man master." It protested against arbitrary interference with reason, arbitrary restriction of "free inquiry," arbitrary limitation of private judgment by the authority of human creeds; yet it submitted without protest to the creed articulated by the "Master," whom it believed to be more than a man. It carried its rationalism to his feet, and there laid it in the dust. Out of this original contradiction within itself sprang an internal conflict of tendencies.

The elder Unitarianism remained steadfastly faithful to the traditional side of Channing, and clung to his "Master"; the younger Unitarianism was equally faithful to his individualistic side, and pushed "free inquiry" to criticism and even rejection of this "Master."

2. Transcendentalism seized, emphasized, and developed the noble jealousy for individual independence which is so clearly apparent in the above extracts. It pressed the primitive Unitarian principle of "free inquiry" far beyond the limits which Dr. Channing had originally set for it, carried out with enthusiasm his magnificent faith in the "dignity of human nature," and at last influenced even Dr. Channing himself to declare: "The truth is, and it ought not to be denied, that our ultimate reliance is and must be on our own reason. I am sure that my rational nature is from God than that any book is an expression of his will." The speculations of Kant, Schelling, Jacobi, Schleiermacher, Cousin, Coleridge, Carlyle, and other European thinkers, came to quicken, though not to initiate, the Transcendental movement in New England, exalting the estimate of the individual soul, and making its personal "intuition" the basis of the new faith.

In 1838, Ralph Waldo Emerson made his famous "Address" at the Harvard Divinity School, proclaiming that the remedy for the decrepit religion of the Church was—"first, Soul, and second, Soul, and evermore, Soul." He frankly declared, when called upon to sustain his views by arguments: "I could not possibly give you one of the arguments you cruelly hint at, on which any doctrine of mine stands. For I do not know what arguments mean in reference to the expression of a thought. I delight in telling what I think; but, if you ask me how I dare say so, or why it is so, I am the most helpless of mortals." Thought was its own evidence; individual "intuition" was itself proof; there was no need of experience or demonstration. More systematically developed and expounded by Theodore Parker, Transcendentalism planted itself on the individual's immediate vision of God, Immortality, and Duty, and denied the right of the critical, argumentative understanding to question these primal affirmations of the intuitive reason.

The elder Unitarianism had wrested from Orthodoxy the right of "free inquiry," but had never dreamed of disputing the necessity of conducting its inquiries according to the laws of logic and the logical faculty; the Transcendental school found these laws an embarrassment, and, turning a well-known distinction of Kant's to purposes directly opposed to his, boldly undertook to abolish them by subordinating the logical understanding itself to a superior and special faculty of knowledge which it called the "higher reason" or "intuition." Hence Transcendentalism claimed for the individual, not only the right to inquire freely into matters which Orthodoxy had reserved exclusively for "faith," but also exemption from all obligation to conduct his inquiries and govern his results by the well-established laws of evidence. There was no cause to wonder, therefore, at the swarm of eccentricities, vagaries, and even absurdities which followed in the wake of such a claim, and which drew no little ridicule upon the whole Transcendental movement in its early days.

But this great exaggeration of the individualizing tendency, running into ludicrous excesses as it did in some cases, was nevertheless held in check at the beginning by the profound veneration for the moral idea which characterized the leading spirits of the movement. In the writings of Mr. Emerson himself, the doctrines of the universality of Mind and the sovereignty of the Moral Sentiment stand out sublimely on almost every page; they are the great, permanent landmarks of his thought, always visible, never obscured; they tower like ever-present mountain peaks, impossible to be lost sight of and touched at their summits with the glory of the heavens themselves. It is needless to quote; every reader of his knows how fathomless and boundless is that ocean of reverence for the moral law over which the ship of his worshipping thought ploughs its way in stately solitude. In such hands as his, Transcendentalism is inexpressibly grand and vivifying through the constant recognition of the truth that reason is not merely individual, but universal. This truth saved Transcendentalism from lapsing into the theory of individual irresponsibility to universal standards. But Transcendentalism itself contained the seed of this very theory in its subordination of the "understanding" to the personal "intuition." It despised logic, proof, demonstration, evidence, and all the processes of dialectical reasoning; it exalted personal "vision" at its expense, as a quasi-divine faculty far surpassing or transcending experience as a guide to the highest truth. Without intending it, the early giants of Transcendentalism thus prepared the way for the pigmy fanatics of Individualism, who, losing sight completely of the essential universality of reason, belittle and degrade reason into the mere "private judgment" of the individual, and fancy they have thereby founded an impregnable fortress for theories which are logically as defenceless and idiotic as they are morally disgusting. The Individualistic tendencies which lurked in the Transcendental elevation of "intuition" to supreme rank, as the great discoverer of truth, have only revealed themselves historically in the crop of moral excesses and extravagances which now seek to shield themselves from execration under the plea of "private judgment." Transcendentalism and Individualism are by no means the same thing, and cannot be used as synonymous terms without gross confusion and injustice; yet it remains true that the latter has seized and exaggerated certain tendencies inherent in the former, and thus in a certain sense revealed philosophical weaknesses in it which are making evident the necessity of a further advance in thought.

3. Science offers the nucleus of the moral and religious philosophy of the future in her own well-developed and well-trying method. This method is simply pure Rationalism—the use of Reason according to its own natural laws. The universality of these laws, their inviolability, their supremacy over mere "private judgment," furnish the sufficient corrective of all the defiant childishness of Individualism. The method of Science appeals to no individual as such, but to the common intelligence of the race, with which the individual must reconcile himself on his own peril; it appeals to the necessary relations and laws of thought, and takes no account whatever of individual ignorance or caprice. Without owing its origin in any sense to religion, but coming forward as the eldest child and heir of the human intellect, Rationalism now claims supreme jurisdiction over the entire domain of human thinking, and proclaims the method of truth-discovery which she has matured under the name of "science" to be universally valid and supreme. Frank and unreserved adoption of this method is the next great step to be taken by moral and religious philosophy. It cannot be long evaded. The "Master" of Unitarianism, the "intuition" of Transcendentalism, the "private judgment" of Individualism, as ultimate authorities, will inevitably yield and disappear before the Scientific Method as the test of truth in whatsoever sphere. The future of Science is, in other words, the future of Rationalism.

LIFE.

A thoughtful and earnest contributor to THE INDEX—H. Clay Neville—says: "If unconscious matter has produced life, then it has evolved something more than itself, something that was not in itself; which, if not supernatural, is yet supermaterial." The idea is that an effect must be like its cause, or must be in the cause; and as matter is seen to be without life, it never could have given rise to it. Once there was no life on the earth. Life exists now. Whence came it?

We know that new properties or qualities are the result of every chemical synthesis. Oxygen and hydrogen gas united in certain proportions give us water,—a transparent liquid which extinguishes combustion; yet oxygen enables bodies to burn with great brilliancy, while hydrogen is one of the most inflammable substances in Nature. Carbon and hydrogen are odorless, but when united they produce our choicest perfumes. Hydrogen and nitrogen, although mild and scentless, form ammonia, which is extremely pungent. Chlorine, a poisonous, suffocating gas, combined with a brilliant metal gives rise to the salt we use on the table. These examples are sufficient to illustrate that there may be in the resultant, qualities not manifested by any of its components; or, in other words, a substance composed of two or more elements may possess properties not exhibited by any of those elements separately.

Now why deny that carbon, hydrogen, nitrogen, oxygen, and sulphur, when brought into juxtaposition, under favorable conditions unite by virtue of their inherent properties and produce living protoplasm? What if it does manifest properties not seen in its constituent elements uncombined? Inexplicable it may be, but not more so than the fact that other compounds manifest properties not displayed by their constituents. Nor is this position affected by the question whether we have been or shall be able to produce in the laboratory the group of conditions requisite for the formation of living matter from the elements with which we are familiar. When we see there is no disparity whatever between the properties of the components and the properties of the resultant in those syntheses which are known to us, why urge the absence of such parity between living matter and the non-living elementary bodies of which it is composed, as proof that in the evolution of life there must be something more than the material elements, and something essentially different from them?

If we divest ourselves of the conception of life as an entity and consider it an activity, we will have as little reason for saying it is more than matter as we have for affirming this of the phenomenon of crystallization, which is quite as inexplicable as is the process of organic formation. Although we know not why gold and copper crystallize in a cubical, and iodine and sulphur in a rhombic, form of crystal, we do not for that reason declare they cannot have been formed from matter which was once in a nebulous condition. "The simplest form of life," says Lewes, "is not, as commonly stated, a cell, but a microscopic lump of jelly-like substance, or protoplasm, which has been named sarcode by Dujardin, cytode by Haeckel, and germinal matter by Lionel Beale. This protoplasm, although entirely destitute of organs, is nevertheless considered to be living, because it manifests the cardinal phenomena of life—assimilation, evolution, reproduction, mobility, and decay." (The Physical Basis of Mind, p. 43.) This low form of life did not exist when the earth was a fiery globe, but shall we say there was not in the elements of that fiery globe the power to produce this "jelly-like substance" as well as the crystals of cubical, rhombic, or hexagonal form? The "potential" power of matter in the nebulous state was its capability of producing certain results under the conditions that have existed through inconceivable periods of time. It is in this sense only that a cause contains all that is contained in its effects. It is not true that a cause contains in reality all that its effects may afterwards contain. When we say the effect is in the cause, we "foresee the result and personify our prevision."

If we say that we are unable to conceive how life can have come from nebulous matter, we no doubt express the truth; but conceivability is not the measure or the test of possibility. Can we conceive how mind can have produced, or how it can act upon, matter? Can we conceive of mind without organism and environment, without genesis and growth?

Do we know enough about matter to warrant us in saying that it is incapable of producing forms that have feeling, forms of activity that we call life? Is it not true that the term matter represents something of which we know very little, which we know only as it is related to us,—beings composed of matter, with certain powers and susceptibilities that distinguish us from other material forms,—that it is something which we can think of only as it is modified or colored by the conditions of the living organism, and of which, in itself, we can have no possible conception? If it be said that we are conscious of something besides matter, something different from it, of mind, we reply in the language of Dugald Stewart, "We are conscious of sensation, thought, desire, volition, but are not conscious of the existence of the mind itself." That the mental operations are not dependent upon a material basis, that intelligence is not a product of material organization, and that there is an immaterial or spiritual substance which is the real basis of our thoughts and emotions, are not facts of consciousness, and cannot therefore be logically assumed. Since we know of but one substance, that which is called matter, and since we know too little of its powers and capabilities to warrant us in saying it is unable to produce the results which we observe, we have no reason for assuming another unknown and unimaginable existence to account for natural phenomena.

I will conclude this article with a sentence from Mill: "Because among the infinite variety of the phenomena of Nature there is one, namely, a particular mode of action of certain nerves which has for its cause, and, as we are now supposing, for its efficient cause, a state of our mind; and because this is the only efficient cause of which we are conscious, being the only one of which, in the nature of the case, we can be conscious, since it is the only one which exists within ourselves; does this justify us in concluding that all other phenomena must have the same kind of efficient cause with that one eminently special, narrow, and peculiarly human or animal phenomena?" More reasonable, it seems to us, to regard "that particular mode of action" as one of an "infinite variety," all due ultimately to an eternal existence which presents itself to the living organism in a certain manner, which depends as much upon the organism as upon the absolute reality, and which, as it appears to us, we call matter. B. F. U.

PARABLE OF ABRAHAM.

I notice that THE INDEX in its issue of May 1st quotes from the Boston Home Journal, a parable in reference to Abraham, which the Journal calls "Franklin's Parable," ascribing the authorship, apparently without any doubt or question, to him. But it is much older than Franklin. How much of it, and in what form or from what source he may have obtained it, is, I presume, now impossible to learn. But the parable is found in Saadi, a Persian poet of the thirteenth century, and it is undoubtedly much older than his time, having come down, as did so much else, in the Mohammedan or rather old Arabic tradition.

In the little volume of selections from the Boston

("Fruit-garden") of Saadi, which I have (Strong's translation), it is given thus:—

I've heard, a whole week, no son of the road
Came to the door of Abram's blest abode;
So kind was he, he would not break his fast,
Lest, by the way, some hungry traveller passed.
He went without, and look'd on every side
And cast his gaze around the desert wide.
A man he saw, like willow bending low;
His hair and head were white with age's snow.
Then Abraham a hearty welcome gave,
As is the way of gen'rous men and brave.
"O pupil of mine eyes," to him he said,
"Be pleas'd to share with me my salt and bread."
The man said "Yes," and quickly made to start;
He knew the qualities of Abram's heart.
From Abram's house came forth each humble slave,
And to the wretch a seat of honor gave.
He then commanded, and the cloth they spread,
And all around they sat to share the bread.
When each "Bismillah"† said in accents clear,
The guest spoke not, a sound reached no one's ear.
"I see, old man," he said, "thou dost not feel,
As old-men do, sincerity and zeal.
Is it not right, when thou thy food dost eat,
That thou should'st at first the Maker's name repeat?"
He said, "No rule have I, and no belief,
But what I hear from the old Geber chief."
Then understood the seer of Fortune bright,
That he a Geber was, this ruined wight.
He drove him off a stranger in disgrace:
Pure and impure should not sit face to face.
From the Creator then an angel came,
Who thus, in awful tones, did Abram blame:
"A hundred years, to him life, bread, I gave,
But in one moment, thou dost shun my slave.
If he to fire in prayer his hands doth fold,
Why should'st thou thy bounty's hand withhold?"

We have here plainly the Franklin story. As given by him it has some additions and embellishments, which may very possibly have come in the form in which he received it, to Franklin. The reader will find it also in Mr. Conway's Anthology.

I adduce the above to illustrate the fact which is coming home to us from so many sources and in such various connections nowadays, that the new is old, and that the private contribution of any individual mind to the world's stock of thought and wisdom is, in any age, as Mr. Emerson has well illustrated in one of his papers, very small indeed. "The originals are not original."

Lau-Tze, the Chinese sage, 600 years B.C. speaks of the ancients, those "wise, circumspect souls," that "held mystic communication with the abyss," and were to him fountains of wisdom and inspiration. So we all draw at the bosom of that immense and immemorial past, and far as we go there is always a farther; deep and deeper rest upon a deeper. We shall find this true as regards the sacred books among ourselves, Old Testament and New, as well as all others.

C. D. B. M.

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Garibaldi has six children.

King Humbert likes Garibaldi.

Trees grow by addition, not expansion.

A cow consumes her weight every fifty days.

London streets measure seven thousand miles.

California has ratified Kearney by a large majority.

Gov. Talbot is in favor of a more puritanical Sabbath.

London jails contain seventy-five thousand prisoners.

The Presbyterians began to come to America as early as 1689.

The Civil Damage Bill provokes a great many uncivil remarks.

There are seventeen women practising law in the United States.

A woman in London has paid two hundred fines for drunkenness.

Minneapolis, Minnesota, is having a feast of Pentecost and Stebbins.

B. F. Underwood will speak at East Dennis the first Sunday in June.

The State Hospital for the Insane at Danvers has four hundred patients.

*Traveller.

†"In the name of God," spoken as a grace before meals.

‡Fire-worshipper.

Eight hundred thousand base balls are made in this country each year.

The cost of the railroads in the United States is about five billion dollars.

Bricks are said to have been used in England by the Romans about A.D. 44.

Mr. Gladstone read the lessons at the Church of Shire-oaks, Easter morning.

A Boston minister thinks with Paul that it is a gain to die. A gain to whom?

Switzerland has voted to reestablish capital punishment by about thirty thousand majority.

Bishop Ames did not leave a dollar of his wealth to any religious or charitable institution.

It is said that modern pottery boiled in oil and buried in wood-ashes soon becomes very old.

A man has been fined $250 for personating Jesus Christ in the Passion Play at San Francisco.

Three-quarters of a million of men will be called out this year to do military service in France.

In California it is a felony for a man to employ a Chinaman to labor in his shop or on his farm.

The Mormons have three churches in Mississippi, and three missionaries in the field in that State.

The largest pearl in the world is in Russia, and the largest known ruby belongs to the King of Burmah.

Four hundred and ninety-four persons have committed suicide in San Francisco in the last six years.

Talmage goes to Europe for three months. It is not stated whether he takes a policeman and a lantern.

It would be interesting to know how many inmates of our lunatic asylums are victims of religious fanaticism.

Mt. Aetna is to have an observatory nine thousand six hundred and fifty-two feet above the level of the sea.

The Traveller calls Professor Sumner, of Yale College, "one of the most erudite ignoramuses in the country."

The London Athenæum admits that the public-library system in the United States is far superior to anything of the kind in Europe.

Renan depicts St. Paul with a high, bold forehead, a strong, aquiline nose, and a long, narrow face, ending in a dark beard. Very like a Jew.

Woman's rights are cropping out in Japan. A woman in that country has entered her emphatic protest against taxation without representation.

The Transcript says: "The Pocasset 'sacrifice' is only a fair sample of the crimes that have been committed in the name of religion since history began."

The ancient Jewish year began on the twenty-fifth day of March. In England, the first of January was established as the initial day of the legal year in 1752.

The number of varieties of fishes will reach ten thousand; of reptiles, two thousand; of birds, six thousand; of vertebrated animals, twenty thousand.

Phosphorescent paper is reported to be one of the latest novelties. Writing done upon it can be read in the dark. This will increase the demand for "light reading."

A new volume by Phillips Brooks is to be issued next fall, on The Influence of Jesus. There will be but little rational progress in religion until the name of Jesus is heard less.

Church-members have little influence in Springfield. They urged that there should be fewer licenses granted this year, but the city government has increased the number.

They are the most successful preachers who preach about patriarchs, angels, Canaan, Jordan, etc. It is death to a minister to preach about anything of vital consequence to mankind.

The books which attain the largest circulation are religious books. One of the books of the popular Scotch divine, Dr. J. R. Macduff, is in its four hundred and second thousand.

In two large Connecticut manufactories, two of the most successful in the State, the mill-owners have provided books, papers, and general reading-matter and reading-rooms for their help.

It is said that "George Elliot" will give up the name of Mrs. Lewes, which she bore while Mr. Lewes was alive, and resume her maiden name, Miss Evans. The first Mrs. Lewes is still living.

In the fourteenth century Parliament fixed the price of a fat ox at forty-eight shillings; a shorn sheep at five shillings; two dozen eggs at three-pence; and the best wine at twenty shillings per tun.

Among the most interesting features of New Mexico are the old Spanish churches which are to be found in almost every village. Many of them are three hundred years old, and contain some fine old Spanish paintings sent over in the sixteenth century.

Rev. Dr. Burchard, for forty years pastor of the Thirteenth Street Presbyterian Church, New York, has resigned. On accepting his resignation, the church presented him with $15,000. A great many ministers in this vicinity would be resigned on half that amount.

Rev. M. J. Savage in a recent sermon, on "The Religion of the Future," dismissed Christianity in its many forms as not meeting the requirements of modern times, and declared that the faith of scientific men furnished the creed of the future. This creed, reduced to a line, was—faith in truth.

Rev. Mr. Warfield made war upon amusements in a late sermon, but thought it wrong to condemn all amusements. He would not have people dance or go to the theatre or opera, or play billiards or cards, checkers or dominoes; but they might do almost anything else in the way of amusing themselves. There is nothing left but the prayer meeting.

Speaking of a volume called Spiritual Communications which Mr. Henry Kiddle, Superintendent of Schools in New York city, edits and publishes, the Boston Journal says: "The book is so gullelessly idiotic that it affronts the intelligence of the most careless reader, and is more likely to cure people of Spiritualism than to convert them to it."

Polygamy has got into the courts. The Mormons are indignant that one of their number should be arrested for marrying according to the teachings of their holy religion, and in imitation of the Bible patriarchs, and are full of threatenings; but with a dozen or two of their leaders in prison they will find that the government means business, and will wisely submit.

The Universalist ministers at their meeting a fortnight ago resolved—"That we favor the continuance of the use of the Bible in the common schools, not for sectarian uses, but as the standard of that natural morality which is essential to safe citizenship." This resolve, read in the light of the recent homicide at Pocasset, seems like irony. These Universalist ministers have resolved too much this time.

The "Friendly Inn" on Harrison Avenue owed one year ago $1000. To-day it has seventy-five dollars in the treasury, and it piously says: "Truly, it is of the Lord." But between the two dates it says: "Noble men and women have donated money and many things of money value; clergymen, lecturers, and musical artists have lent their valuable services; and others have assisted in the work." But "the Lord," who has done nothing, gets all the praise.

There is a rising rebellion in England against the compulsory vaccination law. Dr. J. W. Collins, for twenty years vaccine physician in London and Edinburgh, says; "If I had the desire to describe one-third of the victims ruined by vaccination, the blood would stand still in your veins." Many other physicians say it is a curse to humanity, and that hundreds of children have been killed by it. Of course there are not wanting those who sustain the other side of the question.

The Church deals with the hard times as it deals with the grasshoppers and the drouth. It asks God to put a stop to them. But God does not feel the hard times. We all know that a human being is fed, clothed, and housed by his own hand, and that our dependence is upon ourselves in matters of this kind. If we could get our work done by praying for it to be done, our industries would be stopped. Every man's hands would be lifted to heaven instead of being bent to earth; but work is not convertible into prayer. In every crisis, man has to do the best he can for himself.

Ritualism has crept into the Episcopal Church in Maryland and Pennsylvania. Among the Romish doctrines which are inculcated by the offending churches in these two States are the following: The real presence, auricular confession, priestly absolution, and that the immediate effect of baptism is to form within the person baptized the human nature of Christ. In one church, masses are regularly sung. Bishop Stevens has admonished the rectors of these recalcitrant churches of their sin in encouraging such doctrines, and the Convention has reported resolutions of censure, but to no purpose. The vestries sustain the rectors, and there promises to be dissension in the Episcopal Church.

The American Cable Company of New York has just closed a contract which guarantees to send ten messages of twenty words each per minute through the conducting wire between Paris or London and New York. This is the minimum speed stated in the contract, but it is said that, at a maximum speed, what could be sent in thirty minutes would be equal to the number of words contained in one number of the New York Herald. It is also asserted that by this process an entire number of the London Times could be dispatched through the cable from London to New York and be reproduced in fac simile, on a stereotyped block or plate, complete and ready to be printed from in thirty minutes, and at a trifling expense. A great reduction in the rates will follow.

Nearly ten years ago three half-grown children at Marpingen, a small place in Rhenish Prussia, announced that they had seen God's mother, the Holy Virgin; and a report of what the Virgin had said and done was taken down in an assembly of priests and bishops. The miracle was then duly advertised in all the local papers, and hundreds upon hundreds flocked to see the blessed children, who, however, were now locked up in a cloister, where they could not be seen without a handsome fee being paid. It was of course not withheld, and a very profitable business was carried on for a long time. But the Prussian government has interfered, and five priests have been convicted of having perpetrated fraud for the purpose of making money. This manner of dealing with miracles will drive superstition out of the world.

People go to church on winter days with the feeling that the theatre or the concert would be a great deal more enjoyable, and in summer days, with the impious wish, coming out all over their faces like a moral rash, that the woods and fields and shores were the church. People are divided between false respect and truth. They hate to desert the old meeting-house where their fathers and mothers have worshipped, yet they don't quite like its jail appearance. In short, there is something missing in worship which Nature possesses—that is, freshness, air, sunshine, life. Have you not heard sermons that sounded like unloading a dray of stones or dumping a load of coal? There was something falling in the tones, something that made you wonder whether they were not intended to bury up the green grass and flowers in your natures. A sermon should not be all dry sticks, all dead leaves. It should be a bouquet of evergreen, of many-hued flowers, with divine forget-me-nots all over the bunch. There would be better sermons preached in our churches if the ministers cared less for money and the people cared more for truth.

Communications.

MOLECULAR POTENCIES.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Loving the truth, as we hope we do, we should be ready to accept the conclusions of materialists if we could see that those conclusions explained anything or were free from difficulties. But when we try to get out of mere material potencies, all that this universe has contained in the past, all that it contains in the present, and all its possibilities in the future, we find it next to impossible to believe that such results should come from such beginnings. Our philosophy has taught us that effects cannot be greater than their causes. And after we have invested the ultimate atoms of matter with all the potencies which can possibly be claimed for them, we feel that not one ray of light has been gained to dispel the awful mystery which overhangs this vast universe, teeming as it does with wonder and life. We would look beyond the veil if we could, but we find no light in materialism which serves our purpose. We find no satisfactory answer to our questioning. We still ask, Whence and what?—the old, old question which we think never has and never will be answered. Materialism, we know, talks learnedly about laws, and potencies, and forces, and phenomena, and evolution, and the impossibility of either creation or destruction of matter and force, etc., etc. Its claims, we admit, look very plausible. It has a scientific aspect. We cannot answer its arguments. We cannot affirm positively this or that in opposition to it. But when it becomes dogmatic we turn from it with contempt. It appears to us as shallow as it is irreverent and presumptuous.

Every theory of the origin of things has its difficulties, and the popular mechanical one, linked with a personal God, has more perhaps than any other. But the pure materialistic theory can certainly lay claim to no special clearness and simplicity as an explanation of the infinitely diversified and wonderful life and phenomena of this universe. We are as much puzzled by this theory as by any other.

On the nebular hypothesis we must begin of course with a gas two hundred million times less dense than hydrogen, and from the molecular potencies of this gas we must get sun, planets, satellites, plants, animals, and finally man. From these same potencies, too, must come not only consciousness, but intelligence, reason, poetry, music, love, science, law, religion, and everything which makes this life beautiful or grand. Now if these are the works of mere molecular potencies, if they and they alone have not only made, but inspired, the world's sublime singers and law-givers and teachers and martyrs, and filled us with these hearts to love and this moral sense and these noble ideals to guide,—if this is their work, if they and they alone have given to the world all these grand ideas of time and space, of finite and infinite, of God and eternity, then help us, oh, help us, all ye Unseen Forces to bare the head and bend the knee before these molecular potencies. They have created us. They have endowed us with these faculties divine. They have given us this deep and earnest love of the true, the beautiful, and the good. They have taught us philosophy to speculate even upon themselves. They have given us, too, all the sciences, all the inventions, all the arts of modern civilization. Nay, they have lifted us infinitely above that which we call mere matter, and filled us with purest spiritual aspirations, with divinest enthusiasms, with an all-absorbing sense of justice and beneficence and purity. Yes, these molecular potencies have made us weep and pray and sing and adore, with the feeling that an infinite beauty and presence and love were all around us. And shall we be restrained from pouring out our gratitude to such potencies, if they exist? And shall we be blamed if we doubt whether such potencies can produce such results? Let it be borne in mind that the potencies themselves make us doubt. For they do all the thinking, hoping, fearing, doubting, sorrowing, and rejoicing. There is no soul, no individual. The potencies are the beginning and the end. Do not blame us, then, or praise us. We are merely an organized mass of potent molecules.

Now our molecules are most decidedly disinclined to place so much faith in their own potencies. They are sceptical enough as a general thing, but they are mystified and bewildered by the exaggerated claims put forth in their behalf, and they are unwilling to endorse the view that they and they alone and their like are the Alpha and Omega, the source, the life, the heart, the intellect, the moral sense, and the God of this universe. The molecules in some men, however, seem to our molecules to be decidedly arrogant in their atheism. Of course they are not to blame. They did not make themselves or their own forces, and if they are atheistic here and theistic there, modest here and arrogant there, it is only the differentiation of the potencies. But think of it, modest molecules! arrogant molecules! believing and doubting molecules! hoping, fearing, adoring, loving, and aspiring molecules! What divine things! What spiritual matter! Be it so. It is too wonderful for us.

R. H.

THE RAT AND THE CAT.

TOWANDA, Pa., May 17, 1879.

MR. ABBOT:—

Individualism insists on your recognition of private judgment, the voice of conscience, the intuition of the individual Deities. "Crusoe" found a place for the free exercise of his individuality, and, as he contributed nothing to the public good, he could not participate in nor draw from the aggregate riches stored in the archives and institutions of the civilized world. The unshorn individual boasts of his aspiration or his inspiration; these words are his all-sufficient authority. These are grand words. To the thinking mind, they are thought-monuments. But in the best moments of the average individual, there is need of the many restraints of social institutions, and of these the best. There is in the noblest aspiration, the purest inspiration among men, the element of animalism, selfishness—that beast of prey that will not down on call. The troublesome, gnawing, disturbing "rat," the enemy in every household, asserts its individualism in every aspiration, and threatens the validity of every so-called inspiration. It demands exclusiveness—wishes to be let alone, that it may work its will and pleasure among men. The good of society demands that this misused and much abused power be controlled, guided, disciplined, and so utilized as to contribute to the general good of mankind, and no longer be the enemy and destroyer of purity and peace.

The wisdom of many minds united has declared that, in every district in our fair land and in every family, this "rat" shall be placed under the ever-watchful eye of a competent cat, so that this pest of civilization may cease to injure, to vitiate, to destroy life around it. The State must protect itself, and its strength lies in intelligent citizens. Society must protect itself, and demands intelligent moral citizens. Hence, compulsory education, universal culture, and enlightenment. Education supplies the cat that catches the rat that afflicts and demoralizes many of our most promising minds. The rat leaves its foul nest, its hole in the earth,—only to prey on our best fruits. The cat leaves the hearth of our household only to catch and destroy this thief of the night.

L. F. GARDNER.

FANATICISM.

MR. ABBOT:—

I suppose that delusion, fanaticism of any kind, may be traced ultimately back to the root of individualism. But even in this country the kind of delusion that manifested itself in the case of Charles F. Freeman, resulting in the atrocious killing of his innocent child, is not new. In the criminal records of the State of Maine will be found a case nearly identical fifty or more years ago. The name of the miserable fanatic I do not recall, if I ever knew. When quite young I saw him in Augusta, where he had been incarcerated for a long time, and was still laboring under the delusion that another human sacrifice was required of him.

He was a large, handsome man, with the peculiar expression of eye that attends an unsound mind. He was relating his experience with much animation, devoid of a single misgiving as to the nature of his crime, and averring that the sacrifice was incomplete, when his keeper, observing the intensity of his expression, prudently withdrew me from proximity to the bars that alone guarded the lower part of the window. He was perfectly sane upon all subjects except this religious requirement.

His first act was the burning of a church, which he called his Burnt Offering. He said he carried the fire in the heel of an old shoe, "but the Lord helped him to kindle the flame." His sacrifice, after the Abrahamic example, was, I think, a young girl of the vicinity. He was bright and cheerful, but considered insane, and kept out of harm's way.

The delusion of the Adventists certainly gave rise to many eccentricities in morals in those places where Advent tabernacles were built, and believers flocked to them week after week in their ascension robes, as in Cleveland, Ohio; and many a remorseful story has been related to me by sufferers in that wide-spread fanaticism.

Erroneous as are the dogmas against which you put your lance in rest, the churches certainly do at least this good, that they hold their erratic members in check, and discriminate when insanity supervenes; while these terrible tragedies are wrought by persons who are full of an ignorant conceit, and profess to have a new understanding of Bible doctrines from special revelations. I have strong doubts as to their insanity.

The cultured liberal thinker is not subject to delusion, but there is an evil growing out of his career. Weak minds and ignorant minds are fortified by his rejection of generally accepted opinions, and, casting aside all beliefs in generally expounded views, they start hopelessly out to find explanations of their own. Mr. Frothingham's timely rejection of individualism and call for organization will awaken liberals to a sense of the responsibility that rests upon them, and the need of so sifting opinions that we shall be able to define views, and say manfully what we do believe. This battling with dogmas that are already death-struck is growing wearisome. Mr. Frothingham intimated what we are in danger of being designated, when he cautioned us against being "spiritual tramps."

ELIZABETH OAKES SMITH.

PATCHOGUE, N. Y., May 12, 1879.

THE EVIL REAL.

BOSTON, May 18, 1879.

MR. ABBOT:—

Dear Sir,—As so large a number of the Liberal Leaguers want to have the United States postal law against indecent literature wholly repealed instead of being properly modified, as you and I and others think it ought to be; and as many of them seem to think there is no such thing as obscene literature in America, and, consequently, no need of law for its suppression and prevention, I desire through your columns to speak a few words from my own experience.

My business has taken me a good deal among the lower classes of society, and I have known of others being, and have been myself, solicited, right here in Boston, by peddlers, to buy "fancy books" and pictures of the most indecent description, both as regards illustration and reading matter.

These things are sold and hawked about, in a quiet way, in our large cities, and from thence carried and sent out through the country to an extent little imagined by some people. Surely law, as well as moral suasion, is needed against such dangerous, debasing, and unnecessary literature. I have seen several kinds of such books going under their proper and descriptive titles. But to crown the infamy, I have seen a book ostensibly a history of the cruel abduction of Charley Ross, and having a fine portrait of the poor little fellow on its cover, but really a novel of a very licentious nature. This was sold in book-stores all over the country, for ten cents a copy, attaining an immense circulation among our young folks, and doing in my opinion a vast amount of harm.

If such debasing and dangerous books were necessary in order to maintain intact the free discussion of all opinions, I would most heartily stand up for their right to exist, just as I do now for Heywood's Cupid's Yokes, although I condemn and denounce the main ideas in that book, and, in fact, the whole free-love doctrine. But as the "right preservative of rights" called free discussion of all opinions—or free speech, for short—would be struck down if that debasing and dangerous book were suppressed (it being only a work arguing for and teaching, in decent language, the system called free love, and of course having the same right to do so that I have to argue for and teach the opposite), therefore I say it is necessary that it and all others of its class should be permitted to work for their cause, under only the one restriction that we of the love-under-contract faith and doctrine are holden to; namely, that no expressions or illustrations that are indecent shall be allowable, unless the opinion of the writer can be fully expressed in no other way.

Under the glorious rule of free discussion of all opinions, a writer or speaker is entitled, of course, to give his or her full opinion on any subject, even if it takes indecency to do so, but must never use it at all, unless really necessary, in order to give his or her opinion a full expression, under a penalty of fine or imprisonment.

Respectfully yours,
GEORGE NATHAN HILL.

IT TAKES the sun's light about eight minutes and a quarter to reach the earth, and we do not see the sun until about eight minutes after it has risen, while we see it apparently above the horizon for the same time after sunset. If we imagine ourselves transported to Neptune, the most distant planet of the system, we shall find that it takes light four hours and ten minutes to traverse the space intervening between the sun and this planet. Therefore this long period must elapse between the real and apparent sunrise on this far-away member of the family. As the sun on the boundary of his domain only gives out a thousandth part of the heat and light we enjoy, it is not probable that the rush of emigrants to Neptune will be very great, at least of beings constituted like those living on this planet. But it gives an idea of the amazing extent of the solar system, when it is known that it takes light, moving with a velocity of over one hundred and eighty-five thousand miles per second, more than four hours to reach its extreme verge. This, too, is but half the breadth of planetary space as known at present, and light would require over eight hours to cross the orbit of Neptune.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 to 25 " " 8 " "
 " 26 to 51 " " 6 " "
 " 52 " " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:-

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers. Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:-

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenafly, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $2.50 for one year, including postage, or $6 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keeshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by O. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna O. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenafly, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House of the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BAOON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science; A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science; A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.99
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Pallance. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Pallance.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	3.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	2.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Oldenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Etched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts, Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The New Library Edition. 2 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch, 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of the Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity. Book of Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker.....	1.00
3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by E. V. Rieu. 3 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. B.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Hits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mornings of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skolles.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hour.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.25
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.50
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerobionautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KEKE (ORPHEUS O.). Vermittler, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	5.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	2.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
6.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports.....	2.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	2.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the San Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	6.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAI, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	1.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Psychology. Tradition, Customs, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organisation of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trosby Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Sonnet, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	4.00
The Expansion of Heaven.....	2.50
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	4.50
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	12.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology: Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Room Taines. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip.....	1.25
Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Remond, and Love the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	2.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Sketches, Sketches, Dials Dural, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humourists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unpublished Pieces.....	2.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. ORLIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise to the Alps.....	1.25
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TITTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterburg.....	1.00
Back-Log Studies.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pantries. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

231 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

CHEAP, HEALTHFUL HOMES

in Tennessee. Address WARREN SMITH, Flat Rock, Lewis Co., Tenn.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 8,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SPIRITUAL COMMUNICATIONS,

BY

HENRY KIDDLE, A.M.,

Superintendent of Schools, New York City.
MESSAGES FROM THE ETERNAL WORLD:
REVEALING AWFUL MYSTERIES OF HEAVEN AND HELL.

350 pp. Price $1.50.

AUTHORS' PUB. CO., Publishers,
27 Bond Street, New York.

UNITY.

A FORTNIGHTLY ORGAN OF

Freedom, Fellowship, and Character in Religion.

Editor.—H. M. SIMMONS. Publishing Committee.—ROBERT COLLYER, J. LL. JONES, O. W. WENDT, J. C. LEARNED, W. C. GANNETT.

Vol. III., beginning March 1, 1879, will contain Robert Collyer's "Table Talk"; two series of articles on "The Liberal Preachers of America out of the Pulpit" (our Poets and Essayists), and "The Growth of Doctrine, or the Old-New Creed"; Unity Sunday-school Lessons, etc.

Price $1.50 a year. Clubs of 10 at $1.25.

ROOM 57, 75 MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWOPENCE.*THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

MARSTON'S DINING ROOMS.

FOR

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,
23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX*IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

M. J. SAVAGE'S NEW NOVEL,*Bluffton,

Describing in a very interesting way the processes of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical. 12mo. Price $1.50.

Also, by the same author,

The Religion of Evolution:

"An exposition of religion in the light of the most advanced science. A brave and reverent thinker."—London Inquirer. Price $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

NORTHERN LITERATURE AND ART ROOMS

will immediately be opened in Boston by Miss Marie A. Brown, for the purpose of giving due prominence to the many beautiful productions of Sweden, Norway, Finland, and Denmark, comprising the literature, English translations and originals, illustrated works, views, photographs, portraits, and paintings and statuary of the most celebrated Northern artists. The "Rooms" will be elegant in all their appointments, an attractive resort for all art-loving people and purchasers.

That it may become an international affair, Miss Brown invites all Americans and Scandinavians who are interested in the enterprise, and wish it success, to aid her efforts by subscribing the requisite fund. One thousand persons are desired who will each subscribe $10.00, for which Nadeshda, a poem by Runeberg, and a full set of The Surgeon's Stories, six historical novels by Topelius, as translated and published by her, will be sent them in return, as they are issued.

MARIE A. BROWN,
P.O. Box 900, BOSTON, MASS.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1878.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING*NEW BOOKS*For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament (in preparation). Price $2.10 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 233 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.25.

THE GHOSTS; Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. E. G. Ingersoll (his latest lectures). 232 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 253 pages. Price $1.25.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with Index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition, 3 volumes 12mo. Cloth, $4.50. "By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half calf, $6.00. Will be ready March 30.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $15.00, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME, ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By N. F. Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN*ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N. B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. ... It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 5, 1879.

WHOLE NO. 493.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

"I FIGHT," said Cato, "not for my own liberty, but for my country's,—not to live free, but to live among freemen."

BUDDHA did not confound mere emotionalism with religion: "All that we are is the result of what we have thought; it is founded on our thoughts, it is made up of our thoughts."

THE LONDON Secular Review of May 17 says: "Thalassoplektos writes that he has seen cause to modify his opinion of the Free Religionists of the United States. A recent paper in THE INDEX, written by F. A. Hinckley, has convinced our contributor that Free Religion is free from the narrowness of spirit and theologic affirmation which Thalassoplektos had imputed to it." THE INDEX of April 24 contained both the essay of Mr. Hinckley and the article of "Thalassoplektos" alluded to. The Secular Review, edited by Mr. Charles Watts, is an excellent journal, and shows a very candid and friendly spirit towards American liberals. We wish it great and ever increasing success.

THE FUNERAL of William Lloyd Garrison was attended by a very large audience in the Unitarian church at Roxbury, May 28, and was one of the most impressive occasions we ever attended. Addresses were made by Samuel May, Lucy Stone, Samuel Johnson, Theodore D. Weld, and Wendell Phillips; and John G. Whittier contributed a poem. It would be impossible to convey an adequate impression of the moral power and solemnity of such a scene; those who were present will never forget it, and those who were absent can never repair the loss. No greater soul than Garrison's has arisen in the nineteenth century, or played a grander part in its history. His life is an imperishable treasure of the world.

THE TWELFTH Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association was a very successful occasion, all things considered. Measures were taken in the direction of a more earnest and energetic furtherance of the movement, and the prevailing tone was one of increased vitality, hopefulness, and devotion. To the regret of all, Mr. Hallowell declined to be re-elected as Treasurer; Mr. John C. Haynes gratified all by consenting to take the vacant place. Messrs. R. P. Hallowell, F. A. Hinckley, and C. D. B. Mills were added to the Board of Directors, and Dr. B. Felsenthal took the place of Dr. Isaac M. Wise in the list of Vice-Presidents. Otherwise the list of officers remains unchanged. The essays and speeches were strong and well received. Dr. Adler presided with great acceptance, and made a deep impression by the elevated spirit and fervor of his addresses. The reports of the convention by the local press were so meagre and misleading that no good purpose would be subserved by reprinting them, and nothing is left but to wait for the Association's own pamphlet report.

THE BOSTON Sunday Herald of May 25, in an editorial article on "The May Anniversaries," after describing the great contrast between these meetings as held a generation ago and as held now, well says: "To-day has almost nothing in common with twenty-five years ago. All the old issues are changed, improved, transformed. The scientific method has been applied to society; there has come to be a recognition of social laws and facts which our fathers never dreamed of. They never got beyond personal opinion; we have reached the truths which are behind the social organism. Social science to-day absorbs the thought of the best minds among us. The same is true of religion. We tolerate opinions to-day within the same religious body which formerly divided men into cliques and parties. We see where each may be right, where both may be possibly wrong. There is a broader, healthier, more wholesome interpretation of spiritual facts. Men are not expected to agree as they once did. Common-sense in religion has risen above the old shibboleths, and no one thinks of despising his neighbor, or of refusing to associate with him, because he does not happen to go to the same place of worship. This is a great advance upon the spirit of the old May meetings. It is the outreach to a higher life. It is the recognition of what is fundamental in society and religion. The individual has come to be less and less. It was only the other day that Mr. Frothingham delivered in New York the funeral oration over individualism, and declared that it could never again run riot as it had done before. To-day we have reached the constructive period in American society and religion. The man who tears down is not listened to. It is builders who are wanted, builders who construct foundations upon something broader than themselves. These May anniversaries sing the praises of societies which were gotten up to meet temporary issues, and which are chiefly antiquarian to-day. The new age needs new men, and has new issues."

A CORRESPONDENT of the London Standard writes from Rome: "The poor war-worn old hero was carried past us into the waiting-room, and I saw many an eye suffused with tears, and heard many a mournful ejaculation when the door was closed. One man cried 'Dio mio! To remember the charges of cavalry I have seen him at the head of!' Another, 'The first time I saw him was at Naples, when he made his entry with King Victor Emmanuel and held a kingdom in the hollow of his hand!' Another, 'I was with him in France.' Another, 'Do you remember the day he took the oath in the Parliament here? What enthusiasm! and now—he lies there!' The emotion was thoroughly genuine and thoroughly natural. To the vast majority of the men there, he had been the hero of their youth, the incarnation of Italian independence, the captain who led them to victory or to defeat which involved victory. As I have said, I was among the favored few admitted into the waiting-room. The litter was placed on the floor, and surrounded eagerly by all who had gained admission. The general's face had gained a little color and animation since the first moment of his arrival. His eye was bright, his expression cheerful, and his voice,—that marvellous voice which has always formed one of his chief personal attractions,—although feebler than usual, had not lost its deep musical tone. He spoke cheerfully with one and another. Asked how he had borne the journey, he replied that he had felt better on board the boat between Capraia and Civita Vecchia than he had felt for some time before. He had had a sharp rheumatic attack four or five days before leaving his island. The railway journey had fatigued him. Catching sight of Alberto Mario, he called him to him and thanked him for a copy of a biography of himself, which Mario had just completed, and had sent to Capraia. The general had previously written a letter of thanks with his own hand, and he said twice over, with a cordial smile, 'Grazie, caro, grazie.' Then he recognized an English lady present, and remembered having been at her house in Florence. After a second or two he inquired for the director of a well-known journal of Rome, and when the gentleman, who was present, stepped forward, Garibaldi inquired, with some emphasis, whether he had received his letter of welcome to the Queen of England, and being assured that it had not only been printed, but copied into most of the principal journals of Europe, he seemed pleased. One veteran coming behind him, bent to kiss his forehead, and Garibaldi, looking up and recognizing him, said smilingly, 'Per dio! Mi prendete per la retroguardia!' (you come upon me in the rear!) In a word, if his body was prostrated, his mind and his memory appeared to be quite clear."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N.Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZABETH WRIGHT.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....Providence, R.I.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Boston, Mass.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Chicago, Ill.
 RABBI S. FELSHTAL.....Sparta, Wis.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEEVER.....Editor of the "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 RABBI ISAAK WISE.....Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....Editor of the "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Birmingham, N.Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS.....Mount Lebanon, N.Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST.....Rochester, N.Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.....Tenafly, N.J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburg, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N.Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N.Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....O. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN A. HENRY, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Kankakee.
 Iowa.....J. O. MICHELS, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARMWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Louisville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTELL, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMIDT, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....O. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL GOLE, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRION, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....E. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Jackson.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....187 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence B. Brown.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
 SYRACUSE, N.Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
 ALBANY, N.Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 PASSAIC CITY, N.J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, J. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
 JACKSONVILLE, FLA.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.
 ROCHESTER, N.Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Noted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the action, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. MOSER HAYS, Rochester, N.Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Corti, N.Y. URBINO, West Newton, Mass.
 Z. T. WATKINS, Syracuse, N.Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N.Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, Syracuse, N.Y. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, Mass.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mil-M. N. LADY, Albany, N.Y.
 HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N.J.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
 T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N.Y. D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
 B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Charles Ellis, Boston, Mass.
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N.Y.
 ERNEST TURE, Chelsea, Mass. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N.Y.
 JOHN NILL, Watertown, N.Y. W. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N.Y.
 THOS. DEGAN, Albany, N.Y. JOHN FREET, Albany, N.Y.
 JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N.Y. O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

The Failure of Transcendentalism and Individualism.

A SERMON PREACHED IN BROOKLYN, MAY 18, 1879.

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

The retirement of my friend Octavius Frothingham from active service as a public speaker, though clearly the result of a persistent habit of over-work and only with a view to gathering up his energies for new endeavors, has furnished occasion for a considerable amount of moralizing, more or less significant, in regard to the failure of transcendentalism and individualism and so on. For the most part, the wish has been the father of the thought. The inspiration has been similar to that which twenty years ago led pious men to pray that God "would put a hook in the jaws of Theodore Parker," and, when he too fell sick from over-tasking, that he might never come back from Europe to resume his work. He never did; and who shall doubt that it was because the prayers of the faithful were heard and granted? Whether Mr. Frothingham's ministry of twenty years in New York was a failure is not a question I am anxious to consider, thinking it quite unnecessary that I should. We are told that he confessed it to be so in his farewell address. If he had, it would not be strange, for he has always had a foolish habit of depreciating the value of his work; but no more would it be true. If he has failed, how delighted some of his fellow-ministers would be—some hundreds of them—to fall in the same way. He has increased while they have decreased. I would not insist much on the numbers of his congregation, one of the largest in these cities. Solid merit can attract many hearers, but not so many as the antics of a mountebank. We must count not only heads, but brains.

"The times have been
 That, when the brains were out, the man would die,
 And there an end."

Such times are past. The people whom Mr. Frothingham attracted were not like the general population of the world in Carlyle's estimation, "mostly fools," but the intelligent and cultured, the men of character and force and use, the women whom such men admire and love. But Mr. Frothingham's congregation had no cohesiveness. It dissolves with his departure. Yes, such is the penalty of great abilities; such the compliment men naturally pay to them. Weiss had just gone upon a longer voyage, or he might have filled the vacant place and drawn about him friends after his own genius. But Mr. Frothingham's society had no organization for benevolent activity. Here was a real defect, and so far as Mr. Frothingham acknowledged failure it was in this particular, promising amendment on his return. But it was a "defect of his excellence,"—he was so much beside, that for him to have been a man of organizing genius would have been over-weight. And it is not as if benevolent organization were exclusively ecclesiastical. The preaching of Mr. Frothingham has inspired men to be social and sanitary reformers, not of the professional type, but practical. But the success of a preacher hardly admits of measurement. Who shall tell of what has been effected by the spoken and printed sermons of my noble friend? of how the whole world has been transfigured for men and women in the light of his thought, their homes made more sacred, their business more divine, their sorrows more endurable, and death itself a monitor and friend? I can prove nothing here, but I am well assured that if we could follow home the thoughts of this eloquent preacher into his hearers' lives we should find there was no failure but of the stupid and malicious to comprehend a talent and a consecration infinitely greater than their own.

But even if Mr. Frothingham had failed, I do not see how this would prove the failure of transcendentalism. Transcendentalism is more than any one man, even if that one man happens to be a transcendentalist, as Mr. Frothingham was not. And how the failure of transcendentalism can be inferred from the failure of one who was not a transcendentalist is more than I can see. Mr. Frothingham was once a transcendentalist, but he has not been one for the last dozen years. I remember well that nearly fourteen years ago he wrote a review of Mill's review of Hamilton in which he sided with the former against the latter, with sensationalism against transcendentalism; and ever since the average tendency of his thought and speech has been in these directions. The masters whom he has served for the last dozen years have not been Kant and Fichte, but Mill and Spencer and Comte. You have his Life of Theodore Parker and his History of Transcendentalism to witness that he definitely broke with transcendentalism and became an experientialist, an evolutionist. In view of these facts, it is a pitiful commentary on the journalistic wisdom of the time that his pretended failure should be set down as the failure of transcendentalism. The failure of Martin Luther (if he had failed) might with equal justice have been taken as a sign of the failure of the Roman Catholic Church.

I am no transcendentalist, any more than Mr. Frothingham. As the negro-pilot said, "I have got past that star." But my recollection is too vivid of the light which it once shed upon my way over to hear it spoken of contemptuously without a pang. It is an amusing commentary on the regimen which has been chaunted over the remains of transcendentalism, that, while Mr. Frothingham himself is not a transcendentalist, going away he leaves behind him Mr. Felix Adler, who is a transcendentalist pure and simple, an enthusiastic disciple of Immanuel Kant, the greatest of all transcendentalists. And the kingdom of Mr. Adler's transcendentalism suffers violence, and the violent take it by force. The increasing multitude of his hearers has obliged him to seek a larger place of meeting. And while transcendentalism has been held up to special scorn as inimical to organization, Mr. Adler evinces a genius for organization that compels the admiration of the most orthodox. The truth is, that organizing force is not a matter of philosophy, but a matter of temperament. There is nothing in transcendentalism as such that precludes constructive, organizing ability. In withholding from any serious attempts at organization heretofore, Mr. Frothingham has but respected the limits of his genius. Let him come back and attempt to transcend these limits, and then he may be charged with failure with some show of truth.

Is transcendentalism a failure? You may think that I am bound to say so because I do not count myself a transcendentalist any longer. But I am not, any more than the voyager to Europe is bound to account his voyage a failure because he is no longer on the sea; any more than I am bound to account my childhood a failure because I am no longer a child. A form of thought, an institution, need not be a finality in order not to be a failure. If it is a necessary step, no matter how provisional it is, to predicate failure of it is absurd. And transcendentalism was a necessary step in the advance of human thought. Compared with the sensational philosophy which it superseded, it was a great advance. Transcendentalism is so-called because its leading doctrine is that there are ideas in the mind that transcend experience. According to the philosophers before Kant, the individual mind was, to begin with, a tabula rasa, a sheet of white paper. It must rely upon sensation and reflection for every idea. Then came Kant and demonstrated that there are certain ideas in the mind (of space and time and cause and so on) which seem to have a deeper root than individual sensation and reflection, ideas transcending experience. Here was no final truth, but an error nearer to the truth than the blank-paper theory of Locke and Condillac. It is true that we have ideas transcending individual experience; it is not true that these ideas transcend all experience; that they are inseparable from mind as mind, as transcendentalism affirmed. How then account for these ideas? The philosophy of experience answers, By hereditary experience; by the experience of innumerable generations of ancestors organized in us. This is the dominant philosophy of the present time, the philosophy of evolution. As a necessary half-way house between this and the old sensationalism, wherein the human mind took rest and comfort for a little time, transcendentalism was far enough from being a failure.

But this abstract account of transcendentalism fails to do any sort of justice to the movement of thought and life to which this name has been applied. "Labels," says John Morley, "are devices for saving talkative persons the trouble of thinking." Systems of philosophy have their typical character, but the type is seldom perfectly realized in any individual exponent. The transcendentalism of Kant is not that of Fichte, and that of Fichte is not that of Hegel, and that of Emerson is not that of Parker. Kant is the transcendentalist par excellence, but there is no warrant in his system for Theodore Parker's positive assertion of the intuitional certainty of God and immortality and the moral law. Systems are plastic in the hands of different men, so that to say that a man is a transcendentalist is to give very little valuable information concerning him. Schelling and Feuerbach were both transcendentalists; and while the former found in transcendentalism a satisfactory basis for the whole orthodox, supernatural system, the latter found in it an equally satisfactory basis for the most destructive radicalism that has yet been broached. But take examples nearer home. What two men seeking and finding public audience at the present time differ more widely than Felix Adler and Joseph Cook, the Boston "lectureship"? And yet not only are they both ardent transcendentalists, but they both appeal to Kant as the great typical transcendentalist who furnishes the norm or rule by which all pretended or imagined transcendentalism is to be measured and proved true or false. But while Felix Adler is a radical of the radicals, Joseph Cook finds vicarious atonement and everlasting punishment "in the nature of things." Could we have any better proof of the absurdity of thinking that we have told all about a man when we have labelled him a transcendentalist?

The Ptolemaic system of astronomy, which regarded the earth as the centre of the sidereal universe, was radically false, and yet it was a good working-system, and upon it, as a basis, an immense amount of astronomical truth was discovered. The case of transcendentalism has been similar. The comparative falseness of its fundamental ideas—truths in the mind transcending all experience—has not prevented its often proving a good working-system. The literature of transcendentalism is a mine of great ideas, of inspiring thoughts. Many of its deliverances, although not literally true, have a symbolic truth which is beyond all praise. It has been the fortune of transcendentalism to be illustrated by a much greater set of men than experientialism can so far boast,—men of the poetic temperament, who have given to thought that stamp of beauty which endears it to our hearts. Few men, even the greatest, are entirely consistent in their thought. Plato had always been regarded as a pure idealist until Mr. Grote arrived and argued with some plausibility that he was nothing of the sort. And very likely much of the value of transcendentalism is in its inconsistency. What is likelier, however, is that the greatest minds are always vital syntheses of truths expressed by different and opposing systems of philosophy. It is a notable fact that Prof. Tyndall, who is as far as possible from being a transcendentalist in his avowed philosophy, can find a text in Mr. Emerson for anything he wants to say. He is always quoting him. Is it because Emerson is inconsistent? Nay, rather it is because the orbit of his mind is wider than the paths of all the philosophical systems. As Grote has claimed Plato for positive science, so I doubt not some future Grote will make a similar claim for Emerson. But what is true is that the man is more than either system, positive or transcendental, and more than both of them together.

The charge of failure against transcendentalism, even if it had nothing more to do, might well be met by an enumeration of the names which have illustrated its history in the past. Failure is surely not the fitting epitaph for a system which has fed the hopes and stirred the enthusiasm and inspired the wills of such men as Kant and Fichte, Goethe and Carlyle, Parker and Emerson. It may be superseded, but to be superseded is not to fail. How soon are these spring days to be superseded by the refulgent summer! But does this mean they are to fail? "First the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear."

But transcendentalism has not yet done all its work. It is a remarkable commentary on the howl of satisfaction over its decline and fall, in certain quarters, that transcendentalism is to-day the philosophy of the higher orthodoxy everywhere. Thirty and forty years ago, orthodoxy heaped its head with curses black and foul. That was when it was the policy of orthodoxy to affirm the natural imbecility of the human mind, in order that the supernatural revelation might be glorified the more. But now it is the policy of orthodoxy to affirm that man is naturally religious, that Christianity is a republication of natural religion. And so transcendentalism, which is itself a sort of private revelation, comes in for all the cake and kisses; and sensationalism, which was the fortress of orthodoxy forty years ago, comes in for all the kicks and cuffs. Even Dr. McCosh of Princeton, imported from Scotland on purpose to do battle with American infidelity, is one of the doughtiest of transcendentalists. Do I regret or blame this tendency? I do neither. I rejoice in it. It is a tendency; and while it tends to something better, it tends from something not so good. Doubtless the experientialism of the present time is an imperfect system of philosophy. Doubtless it will be superseded by a more perfect, in course of time. When this has come to pass, orthodoxy will be experiential as it is now transcendental. For it has always been the habit of orthodoxy to conform itself to each new system of philosophy in turn, always however waiting till the best thought of the time has made some new advance, and then embracing that from which it is receding.

So much for the failure of transcendentalism. In the past it has inspired a splendid literature, a noble life; it has been illustrated by a host of glorious names; it has prepared the way for a system of philosophy which takes up into itself all that was best in it; and it is still the vivifying, purifying principle of the highest orthodox thinking of the present time. If this is failure, what would be success?

In connection with the charge that transcendentalism is a failure, we have heard the doom and death of individualism much insisted on. Of this, also, Mr. Frothingham has been held up as a terrible example. And in his farewell address there were some words which bigotry and malice have easily construed into a confession of the failure of individualism and his own individualistic position. But, rightly interpreted, these words were no confession of failure, but a song of triumph. The speaker said substantially, Individualism, like transcendentalism, has done its work,—a necessary work, a work of destruction, of disintegration, of separation man from man. But now the time has come for a new integration of which science shall be the controlling principle. Individualism has made "churches of two, churches of one," in Emerson's memorable phrase. But now upon the basis of social science men will come together into new societies, or churches if you will, and work together for their mutual and for the common good. Here certainly was no confession of failure. Here was, if anything, a too confident estimate of the work already done. I wish I could believe with Mr. Frothingham that supernaturalism is as good as dead. But when he comes back to us I fear that he will find his former occupation is not gone; that there is still fighting as well as building to be done, and that, like the rebuilders of Jerusalem's walls, with the trowel in one hand we must hold the spear in the other.

But, quite apart from anything that Mr. Frothingham has done or failed to do, is individualism a failure? Like transcendentalism, it is more than any man. Its failure or success does not depend on the failure or success of any one person, however gifted. Is individualism a failure? Alas, what is individualism? If we could all agree upon a definition, it would be a good deal easier to determine whether it is a failure or not. But as I read the various discourses that have been written on this head, I find that individualism does not mean the same thing to A and B and C. Some writers speak of it as equivalent to transcendentalism; but this is certainly misleading. There is abroad a spurious transcendentalism the presence of which is indicated by an enormous egotism, the victim of which denies the infallibility of the pope only to assert his own. He talks a great deal about his intuitions, and by his intuitions he is very apt to mean his notions, his whims, his idiosyncrasies. He is never so sure of anything as when he can give no reason for it, but simply "thinks it so because he thinks it so." If this is what is meant by individualism, it is undoubtedly a failure. Not that it fails of finding representatives, or is likely to at any early day, but that it fails of producing any good of personal character or social use. Do not waste your time upon people who can only tell you about this and that, that "it seems so to them," or that they "have a kind of feeling" that it is so or so. This sort of individualism will be more and more a failure, as it deserves to be, as we pay it less and less attention.

Another and much higher meaning of individualism, as the word is frequently used, is individuality. By individuality I mean that which differences man from man, which makes you you and me me. Transcendentalism has indeed been the prophet of individuality. It has been this naturally enough. The tendency of institutions has been to dwarf the individual, to make all men alike. The Church and the political party have always been averse to men and women thinking for themselves. But to the transcendentalist, a man's own soul has been his private organ of the Holy Spirit. He has opposed himself to imitation and conformity. Emerson has returned a thousand times to the assault, and not once too often. But the transcendentalist has not monopolized the defence of individuality. John Stuart Mill's book On Liberty is one of the most eloquent pleas for individuality that was ever written, and he was as far as possible from being a transcendentalist. He shows that any community which does not encourage individuality of thought and life tends to "fixity of type" and to stagnation. Individuality or China: take your choice.

If individualism were individuality, I should be tempted to say of it as some one said of the failure of Christianity, affirmed by Mr. Abbot, "It has not been tried." We have had plenty of imitation, plenty of conformity; we have not had much individuality. Not many people think and act from themselves—after their own genius. They go with their church, their party, their set. They obey the tyranny of fashion. If this orders that women shall give up a comfortable and healthy style of dress for an uncomfortable and unhealthy style, not one woman in a thousand has the courage to refuse obedience. But when the failure of individualism is spoken of, the failure of individuality is not intended. So far as tried, this has not failed of producing a more excellent society. "The gods divided man into men," the saying is, "that he might be more helpful to himself."

By individualism, as frequently spoken of, is meant a tendency to isolation, to withdrawal from churches and parties, to distrust of institutions and of organizations. When the failure of individualism is spoken of, it is most commonly in the sense which I now indicate. It is not strange that individualism of this sort should be associated with transcendentalism. Mr. Emerson is our great American transcendentalist, and this sort of individualism has been eminently characteristic of his thought and purpose. He has said many hard things of institutions, of parties and churches, in his quiet way. Have they been any too hard? I think not. He has said that society is a conspiracy against the manhood of every one of its members. There is a good deal of truth in that.

One gets tired in the political sphere of choosing the less of two evils. I would choose that which is good. I was told that I must vote for Grant or Greeley. I preferred not voting at all. If God cannot get along without some moral indirection on my part I am sorry for him, but I cannot help him out. But I do not believe he has to fetch the pump with dirty water.

Has individualism in this sense of aloofness, of distrust of institutions, been a failure? It has failed in many individual cases. Not long ago I met in social-wise one of the most tremendous protestants of thirty years ago. And lo, his shirt-front was the most expansive in the company; his manner, that of the most inveterate diner-out. "Can it be possible," I asked my friend, "that that is So-and-So?" "Yes," said he; "that volcano has burned out." And so has many another. Men get tired of protesting. It is easier to go with the crowd than to make head against it. But has this protesting individualism been a failure on the whole? It has built up neither churches nor parties. It has made "churches of two, churches of one." This goes without the saying. But this does not necessarily mean failure. Has not this protesting, isolating individualism brought forth a plentiful crop of noble individual lives, such as have been tonic to the communities which have imbibed their wholesome bitterness? I believe that it has done so.

It does not mean failure, if now the time for this protesting, isolating individualism has gone by. It means that it has done its work, so that men and women can come together into honest fellowship; come together without surrendering their rights of individual thought, their force of individual life; come together without being anything less than their best selves. If we have come to such a pass as this, I am as glad as anybody. But I am not so sure as Mr. Frothingham that we have done so. We have to some extent. But in many a town and village it is still more religious to stay at home on Sunday morning, or even to go a-fishing, than to go to church. You will remember the saying I have often read to you, "To worship in a temple not your own is mere flattery."

But man is a gregarious animal. He does not like to isolate himself. And he need not. The "churches of two, churches of one," will become churches of many, if men will stand on their own ground, and invite others to come and stand with them. Be not a partisan, but use the political party as you use a train, to take you as far as you choose to go. Then leave it for another.

Protesting individualism is not a finality. The unchurched must be churched again. But not in the old churches. Not, at any rate, till they make their entrance doors so high that a man can walk into them erect. Individualism has liberated the atoms. Now for the electric current whose vibrations shall unite them in a new order and leave every man as much a man after the organizing impulse as before.

A selfish individualism—how often do we hear of this! And not without reason. We are members one of another. We belong to each other. But we can sometimes be most helpful by withdrawing from the crowd, by living our own life.

"He that feeds men serves but few;
He serves all who dares be true."

We have not yet exhausted the meanings of the word individualism. My friend Francis Abbot has for a long time had the reputation of being the most individualistic of men. He has stood almost alone in his position of direct, unqualified antagonism to Christianity as he understands it. But latterly, individualism seems to have taken the place of Christianity in his distrustful and disparaging regards. Week after week he returns to the assault with unabated vigor. But the individualism against which he wages such relentless war has no necessary relation, so far as I can see, with any particular philosophical system. For this individualism is simply antinomianism, the denial of all moral responsibility, the dethronement of conscience, and the setting-up of the God wish-and-whim upon the vacant seat. To be a little more concrete, the individualists whom Mr. Abbot is opposing are the people who would repeal the law prohibiting the sending of indecent matter through the mails, and who are found claiming for themselves the right to marry and unmarried and remarry as often and as many as they please. The existence of such people is offered to us as a proof of the failure of individualism and of transcendentalism. As for the last, it is my personal conviction that so far as this moral gangrene has any special philosophical affinities, they are with materialism rather than with transcendentalism. But I do not believe that any philosophical system can be held responsible for these miserable vagaries, and I believe that it is treating them far too respectfully to allow them any such warrant. The devil can quote Scripture to his purpose, and if a man wants to "have his fling," as a certain noisy pietist said he would if there wasn't any future life, he will find justification in one system of philosophy as well as in another.

The individualism of Mr. Abbot's hatred and contempt is the right of private judgment in morality. But I do not believe that the trouble with Mr. Abbot's antinomians is that they rely too exclusively upon their private judgment and not enough on what he calls the consensus of the competent. I believe it is that, instead of asking, "What ought I to do?" they ask, "What may I do?" Or that having, with those first thoughts which in morality are always best, perceived that certain things are right and others wrong, they have begun to argue about them, and have, of course, come to the conclusion that they were at first mistaken. Jesus said, "Why even of yourselves judge ye not what is right?" Let a man endeavor to do this, and I am not afraid that he will ever go far away from the right path. There is no egotism here. Pure individualism is out of the question. Whether or not conscience is the voice of our Father God, it is certainly, as Prof. Clifford said, the voice of our father Man, the voice of innumerable generations. It is not we that speak, but these that speak in us. Our own inner voice is itself a consensus of the competent. True, in doubtful cases we must correct this inner voice by the best helps that we can get in the community. But seldom, I imagine, will the inner voice be shamed by any from without. Jesus said, "Unless your righteousness exceed that of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in nowise enter the kingdom of heaven." The Scribes and Pharisees were "the competent" of that day and generation. Really exercise your "right of private judgment," really ask, "What ought I to do?" not, "What may I do?" and you will not find the command of your own heart any less exigent than that of the most competent in the community. I do not believe that any sane person ever sent indecent matter through the mails or committed adultery from a sense of duty, from exercising the right of private judgment in morality. Emerson says, "The populace think that your rejection of popular standards is a rejection of all standards, and mere antinomianism; and the bold sensualist will use the name of philosophy to gild his crimes. But the law of consciousness abides. . . . It denies the name of duty to many offices that are called duties. . . . But if any one imagines that this law is lax, let him keep its commandment one day."

I am, then, bound to say that while fully sympathizing with Mr. Abbot in his distrust of those who are disposed to make their whims and lusts the measure of their liberty, I have no sympathy with him in his attempt to fasten the odium of their conduct upon either transcendentalism or individualism. The philosophy of Kant, of Fichte, of Emerson, of Parker, cannot be held responsible for any criminal offence. It may be made the excuse for an ignoble deed, but it has never been the inspiration. I believe not only in the right of private judgment in morality, but in the duty of such private judgment. It may not be the highest judgment possible, but it is the best for you and me. Actions become immoral when they are done for any other reason than because we see them to be right. From every outward testimony, let us appeal to this still small voice, this oracle in the breast. It will not lead astray. It will not be soft with us. Sometimes it will be very stern and rough. It is the clarified result of half a million years of moral energy. Clarify it still further by all present helps, but in the last event obey it absolutely, though you should die for it. If this is moral individualism, it never yet has failed. It never will. Let us invite each other to the uttermost obedience to this inward law.

"O God within, so close to me
That every thought is plain,
Be judge, be friend, be father still,
And in thy heaven reign.
Thy heaven is mine, my very soul;
Thy words are sweet and strong;
They fill my inward silences
With music and with song.

"They send me challenges to right,
And loud rebuke my ill;
They ring my bells of victory,
They breathe my 'Peace, be still';
They ever seem to say 'My child,
Why seek we so all day?
Now journey inward to thyself,
And listen by the way.'"

WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON.

SKETCH OF HIS LIFE AND REMARKABLE CAREER.—HIS LONG AND HARD FIGHT AGAINST SLAVERY.—HIS WORK AS AN EDITOR AND AN AGITATOR.—EXCITING TIMES RECALLED.

William Lloyd Garrison was born in Newburyport, Mass., Dec. 12, 1804, in the house, now standing on School Street, next the chapel of the Old South Church. He was of provincial parentage, poor in worldly goods, but possessing ambition and great natural energy of mind. At the age of thirteen years he was apprenticed by Mr. Ezekiel Bartlett, with whom he boarded, to a cabinet maker, Moses Short, in Haverhill; but so thoroughly homesick did he become that his kind-hearted employer allowed him to leave and return to his home in Newburyport. Here he noticed an advertisement for a boy wanted, and entered the office of the Herald of that city as an apprentice, graduating therefrom in December, 1825, when he had reached the age of twenty-one years. He then began his editorial career on the Free Press of Newburyport, which he endeavored to make true to its name—entirely free and independent in its utterances; but as the paper's constituency was mainly a partisan one, the subscription list rapidly fell off, and Mr. Garrison's first journalistic effort proved a financial failure. He was next connected with The Philanthropist, a temperance paper published in Boston, but soon left to engage in the publication and editorship of the Journal of the Times in Bennington, Vt. This was in 1828. In assuming the editorial control of the paper, Mr. Garrison in his first issue announced that the paper would be independent in the broadest and stoutest signification of the term; that it should be trammelled by no interest, biased by no sect, awed by no power. He distinctly avowed that he had those objects in view which he should pursue through life, whether in that place or elsewhere. Those three objects were—"the suppression of intemperance and its associate vices, the gradual emancipation of every slave in the republic, and the perpetuity of national peace." He pledged himself that what might be wanting in vigor should be made up in zeal. It was about that time that Mr. Garrison had met in Boston Mr. Benjamin Lundy, of Baltimore, then on his first tour to the Eastern States in the service of the slave, and had been moved by the cogent reasonings and tender appeals of that tireless and disinterested champion of the oppressed race in a manner that, as Mr. Garrison himself acknowledged, had great influence in early directing his thoughts and energies to the cause of emancipation. The fearless utterances of Mr. Garrison in his paper elicited the warmest commendations from Mr. Lundy, who urged him to go to Baltimore, assuring him that he could wield a wider influence there; and in the latter part of 1829 Mr. Garrison abandoned the Journal of the Times, and became associated with Mr. Lundy in the publication of the Genius of Universal Emancipation in Baltimore.

In this new field Mr. Garrison was brought into more immediate contact with slavery; and yet his utterances were no less decided and strong, still proclaiming his unrelenting hostility to slavery, intemperance, and war. Although at first he had looked with favor on the colonization scheme as "an auxiliary to abolition" deserving encouragement, yet utterly inadequate alone, a short residence in Baltimore and a fuller acquaintance with the spirit and purposes of its advocates soon led him to discard and denounce it, and from that time onward to become one of its most uncompromising foes. He claimed that slaves were entitled to complete and immediate emancipation. The outrages of the slave system, which Mr. Garrison had the opportunity of witnessing with his own eyes after taking up his residence in Baltimore, doubtless quickened his mind and heart to its wickedness, and his denunciation of it was all the more unequivocal and scathing. The subject, however, which more particularly stirred his soul and fired his indignation, and which called forth his fiercest anathemas, was the inter-state slave trade. In the prosecution of this general traffic, an incident and illustration soon occurred which especially excited his feelings and called forth his sternest rebukes. The captain of a vessel owned by Captain Todd, of his own native town of Newburyport, took, with the owner's consent, a cargo of slaves for the New Orleans market. In consequence of Mr. Garrison's unmeasured words of condemnation of this act, both a civil and a criminal suit were instituted against him. He was tried, convicted, and his sentence embraced both imprisonment and fine. The knowledge of this excited a good deal of feeling among the philanthropists of the time. The munificent and earnest friend of the slave, Mr. Arthur Tappan of New York, at once came to Mr. Garrison's rescue and paid the fine, but Mr. Garrison suffered an incarceration of seven weeks, when he was set free. Thereafter Mr. Garrison became the uncompromising foe, not only to slavery, but to everything that opposed itself between him and the object of his determined hostility. Nothing was too high or too low, nothing too strong or too sacred, to escape his fierce denunciations. Even from the Baltimore jail he sent forth a letter in which he arraigned the law and the arbitrary conduct of the court. "Is it," he asked, "supposed by Judge Brice that his frowns can intimidate me, or his sentence stifle my voice on the subject of oppression? He does not know me. So long as a good Providence gives me strength and intellect, I will not cease to declare that the existence of slavery in this country is a foul reproach to the American name; nor will I hesitate to proclaim the guilt of kidnappers, slavery abettors, or slave owners, wherever they may reside or however high they may be exalted. I am only the alphabet of my task; time shall perfect a useful work. It is my shame that I have done so little for the people of color; yea, before God I feel humbled that my feelings are so cold and my language so weak. A free white victim must be sacrificed to open the eyes of the nation, and to show the tyranny of our laws. I expect and am willing to be persecuted, imprisoned, and bound for advocating the rights of my colored countrymen, and I should deserve to be a slave if I shrank from that danger."

This violent individual demonstration was, however, but significant of the general feeling and policy toward this anti-slavery sheet and its heroic conductors; and the opposition which they met had the effect of drawing from their support many who at first professed themselves their friends. The result was that they had finally to succumb so far to the popular pressure as to dissolve partnership; and the paper was changed from a weekly to a monthly journal. They parted, however, the firmest of friends, though differing in some respects in their opinions. After his liberation from prison, in June, 1830, Mr. Garrison proceeded north, delivering a course of anti-slavery lectures in New York, Philadelphia, New Haven, Hartford, Boston, and other cities and towns in New England. In these lectures he severely arraigned the colonization scheme, which had obtained a strong hold on the confidence and support of the churches and benevolent societies of the North, and appealed to all churches to engage at once in the work of immediate emancipation, as a duty of the people and the right of the slave. These views gained comparatively few sympathizers, and in many cases he was positively refused the use of churches for the delivery of his lectures. In August of the same year, he issued proposals for the publication of a journal to be called The Liberator, in the city of Washington; but he afterward decided to publish the paper in Boston, because he believed that a greater revolution in public sentiment was to be effected in the free States, and particularly in New England, than in the South. He says: "I found contempt more bitter, detraction more relentless, prejudice more stubborn, and apathy more frozen [in the North] than among slave-owners themselves." In establishing The Liberator, Mr. Garrison announced that he should not array himself as the political partisan of any man, and that in defending the great cause of human rights he wished "to derive the assistance of all religions and of all parties." Many, however, who had become deeply interested in his efforts deemed his language too severe and vituperative, and some of his most intimate friends often remonstrated with him. But he replied, in his paper: "But is there not cause for severity? I will be as harsh as truth, and as uncompromising as justice. On this subject I do not wish to speak or write with moderation. I will not equivocate—I will not excuse—I will not retract a single inch—AND I WILL BE HEARD. The apathy of the people is enough to make every statue leap from its pedestal, and to hasten the resurrection of the dead."

Mr. Garrison's partner in the publication of The Liberator was Mr. Isaac Knapp, a printer, like himself, and also a native of the same town. The paper was started without a single subscriber. Appealing, as it did, to no party, sect, or interest for recognition or support, it was a marvel that the journal lived at all. Both editor and printer labored hard and fared meagrely. The very audacity and evident earnestness of the young agitator's undertaking, at a time when almost the whole people had come to acquiesce in the triumphs of the slave power, while from his attic he told the nation that he was in earnest and would be heard, aroused attention and caused the paper to sell. The slaveholders of the South, even, were reached by the power of his words, and were stung to madness. Before the close of the first year of the publication of the paper, the Vigilance Association of Columbia, S.C., offered a reward of $1500 for the conviction of any one detected in selling the paper in that State. The corporation of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, made it a penal offence for any free person to take the paper from the post-office, the offender, in case of not being able to pay the fine, to be sold into slavery for four months. The legislature of Georgia offered a reward of $5000 for the arrest and conviction of the publisher. The influence of The Liberator in the North, however, continued to grow and spread rapidly. Nine years after its establishment, there were nearly two thousand anti-slavery societies, with a membership of some two hundred thousand. The Garrison party, however, not finding the hearty coöperation and ready acquiescence in their more extreme sentiments and methods, either in Church or in State, soon arrayed themselves in antagonism to the leading influences of both. The result was a final disruption of the National Anti-Slavery Society, Garrison and his small body of followers forming one division. Those who followed Garrison did not comprise more than one-fifth of the anti-slavery societies then existing, and these were confined wholly to New England, and mostly to Eastern Massachusetts. Nor did their numbers increase during the conflicts of the subsequent twenty years; and it is doubtful whether, in 1860, when Mr. Lincoln was elected by a vote of nearly two millions, on a clearly-defined and distinct issue with the slave power, there were more abolitionists of that school than at the time the American Anti-Slavery Society was rent in twain.

In the spring of 1833, the New England Anti-Slavery Society deputed Mr. Garrison to visit England, to disabuse the British mind of the favorable impressions that had been formed of the Colonization Society. Elliot Cresson had already been there three years in the interest of the latter society, and upon Mr. Garrison's arrival he at once challenged Cresson to meet him for public discussion. The colonization champion, however, discreetly declined the challenge. Mr. Garrison delivered several addresses, and succeeded in so turning the current of anti-slavery sentiment there, that, although a Colonization Society was formed there, it existed only in name, and exerted but little influence. Before Mr. Garrison's return, a number of the most eminent English anti-slavery advocates issued a vigorous protest against the aims and methods of the Colonization Society. Mr. Garrison's success in England only intensified the feeling against him and his followers, on the part of the colonizationists here, which included many eminent public men, like Clay, and many sincere opponents of slavery; and the feeling grew so bitter that many lawless deeds were committed as a consequence of the excitement. It was in the heat of this excitement that the now historical scene of mob violence occurred in Boston, when Mr. Garrison was made its victim. The story has been often told, and is familiar to all. The occasion was the announcement that on the 21st of October, 1835, the Boston Female Anti-Slavery Society would hold a meeting at their hall on Washington Street. On the morning of that day, inflammatory handbills were circulated and threats freely uttered. Appeals were made to the city authorities for protection. Instead of that, these women were reminded that they gave the city officials a great deal of trouble. It was announced that George Thompson, the distinguished English abolitionist, would be present, and a plot was formed to seize him and treat him to a suit of tar and feathers. The meeting assembled amidst the howling of the mob outside, and during its progress the mayor entered the room and requested the meeting to dissolve, as he could not otherwise preserve the peace. The meeting was induced to adjourn, and immediately the mob entered the room and fiercely demanded Mr. Garrison. At the earnest solicitation of the mayor, Mr. Garrison attempted to retire quietly by a back passage; but he was discovered, seized, a rope put round him, his hat knocked off and cut to pieces and his clothes torn from his body, dragged through Wilson's Lane into State Street, where he was rescued by the mayor, his posse, and several respectable citizens, and taken to the mayor's room in the Old State House. From this place he was taken to the Leverett Street Jail, to save him from the fury of the mob. Upon the walls of that prison he inscribed these words: "William Lloyd Garrison was put into this cell, October 21, 1835, to save him from the violence of a respectable and influential mob, who sought to destroy him for preaching the abominable and dangerous doctrine that all men are created equal, and that all oppression is odious in the sight of God." He was discharged the next day "as a blameless citizen," and left the city for a few days, at the earnest request of the authorities. From that time onward to the accomplishment of emancipation by the civil war, Mr. Garrison continued to work zealously for the cause, and consistently with the sentiments which he had proclaimed from the first. The logical position of the Garrisonian party in the subsequent party campaigns was that of rejection of the principle of political action, and, adopting the doctrine of "no union with slaveholders" as the fundamental idea, the corner-stone of their policy and plans, the Garrisonians directed their teachings and appeals to the establishment of the necessity, and inculcation of the duty, of disunion. They proclaimed it to be their unalterable purpose to labor for the dissolution of the present Union by all lawful, though bloodless and pacific, means, and for the formation of a new republic, founded on what they considered pure justice and equality.

The history of Mr. Garrison from this time onward is mainly the history of this party, which forms a part of the country's history for the last twenty-five years. The most notable event in which Mr. Garrison figures in the history of the rebellion was in connection with the political convention held at Cleveland, Ohio, May 31, 1864. The call for the convention was directed "To the Radical Men of the Nation," and it was intended to form a union of that portion of the Republican party which was dissatisfied with President Lincoln's administration and his so-called hesitating attitude on the matter of slavery. It was at this time that Wendell Phillips wrote a long and severe letter, in which he charged that Mr. Lincoln's administration had been a "civil and military failure," and severely impugning the President's motives. Later in the canvass, as many well remember, he returned to the charge, and in a notable speech in Boston gave, with even more than his usual felicity and force of language, his reasons why he "dare not trust him with our future." It is important to remember in this connection that Mr. Garrison, in the very paper in which Mr. Phillips' speech was first printed, came out with a vigorous protest against its leading sentiment and point. With the purposes of the Cleveland convention, which nominated General Fremont and General Cochrane for President and Vice-President, Mr. Garrison had no sympathy, and in this protest he closed with the expression of his belief that "there never was a more abortive and ludicrous gathering, politically speaking, than the Cleveland convention."

Since the war, Mr. Garrison has led a comparatively retired life; but he has kept up an unceasing interest in everything that pertains to the welfare of the freedmen, and, indeed, of all that pertains to the maintenance of human rights. On many questions which have arisen and events that have transpired involving sentiments of humanity, Mr. Garrison's voice has been heard, either through the press or from the public platform, advocating with vigor and earnestness the cause of the unfortunate or oppressed. Since the agitation of the woman-suffrage question, he has espoused the cause of the reformers. His position with reference to the Chinese immigration was unequivocally set forth in his ringing letter in reply to Senator Blaine's anti-Chinese speech in Congress. He has naturally had his interest aroused to a high degree by the exodus of the negroes from the South, and wrote a letter of sympathy to the meeting in Faneuil Hall in aid of the movement to aid the immigrants. He was appointed treasurer of the fund, but has since turned the money over to Mr. Henry P. Klidder.

When he regarded his mission accomplished and his work done, Mr. Garrison found himself comparatively poor in this world's goods. This fact being known by some of his warmest admirers, a subscription was started in this city, several years ago, to place him beyond the reach of danger of want for the rest of his days, and something like $50,000 was presented to him. Thus his declining years have been rendered smooth and free from care.—Boston Advertiser, May 26.

FREEMAN'S SACRIFICE.

That a hitherto respectable and rational father should murder his own child is sufficiently horrible. But were the rash act the result of a sudden insane impulse, produced no one knew how, the act might be regretted, but it could not be condemned. The father would not have murdered his child, he would have been only the instrument made use of in effecting the slaughter.

The Freeman "sacrifice" is a murder produced by insanity. But Freeman's insanity is not the sudden criminal impulse. It is religious mania, produced by long reflection on obscure religious problems. Freeman appears to have been a Methodist, and probably of an enthusiastic temperament. A couple of years ago he joined the Second Adventists. He thought he had a call to preach, and he exhorted with great uncton. He has been a close reader of the Bible. Being a comparatively uneducated person, he ignored the distinction between figures of speech and statements of fact. Unacquainted with history, he made no allowance for development in religious history. It appeared a heresy to him in his religious narrowness to assert that a course of action might be perfectly proper in the circumstances under which Abraham, David, or Solomon were placed, and entirely wrong under the conditions of modern life in Europe or America. In meditating on "sacrifice," he fell into the same error that the Mormons have in meditating on marriage, though the results, as might be expected, have been much more horrible in the one case than in the other.

Freeman's mania, from which has flowed his unnatural crime, is, in a sense, self-produced. He concluded some time ago that God had a great work for him to do. Many men have held this opinion, and in consequence have lived upright and blameless, though it may be far from brilliant, lives. Freeman's meditations on this point seem to have unsettled his mental balance. He came to the conclusion—and it is a clear conclusion of crazy logic—that the way to get him and his sect before the people was through the performance of some great sacrifice. What should this sacrifice be? He prays and dreams over it, and finally he receives a "revelation" that he must "offer up" his youngest and best beloved child. This revelation he thinks in his ignorance is from God, when it is but the natural and necessary result of his delusion. He prays that he may be spared the trial. But he is not. And he nerves himself for the performance of the dreadful sacrifice. He endeavors to convert the mother by appeals to her not "to stand in God's way," and unfortunately the poor woman is unable to resist his appeals. She acquiesces in the commission of the terrible deed.

This insane act carries us back to the days of barbarism. Human sacrifices were once common among all races of men. The early Romans sacrificed human victims. So did the early Greeks. The instance of Iphigenia is well known to all readers of the classics. The Carthaginians indulged in human sacrifices in the era of their greatest prosperity. They have always been common in Africa. They exist to-day in Dahomey and among the Caffres and all the inland tribes. The early Asiatics practised it. The Semitic tribes sacrificed human victims. "They made their children to pass through the fire to Moloch." Human sacrifices were practised on a great scale in Mexico, and more or less among the aborigines of this continent. And Freeman's crime demonstrates that criminal insanity, when brought about by what would ordinarily be commendable motives, leads to retrogradation. In hopes of attaining to a higher religious plane, men commit acts that sink them far below the level of the most debased of their contemporaries.

It is worth noting that "revelations" rarely ask their subjects to offer up themselves as sacrifices. Religious mania does not often produce the suicidal impulse. Usually it chooses some one else as a sacrifice. The "revelation" preserves its "medium" for "the great work"; for these insane wretches usually imagine that their existence is necessary to the performance of God's plans in relation to the world.

Freeman's horrible and unnatural crime shows the danger of uncontrolled meditations on religious topics. Freeman had little learning. He was thrown on a book to be interpreted by his "intentions." In his own estimation he needed no guidance but what came from himself. His own impulses—many of them insane—he attributed to divine revelation. He lived in a cold, barren country where man is thrown back on himself. He inherited those abstract dogmas which declare that man must in certain conditions forget all his duties to his family, his church, his State, if he would follow God truly. Fatal and anti-social error! Man cannot better follow God than in discharging all his social duties.—N. Y. Graphic, May 5.

TRUE INWARDNESS OF PROTESTANTISM.

It has always been the habit of the Catholic Review to illustrate and strengthen its own view of the value and tendency of Protestantism by occasional references to similar ones held by intelligent people of other creeds or of no creed. When men like Huxley and Mallock and Matthew Arnold—men like Frothingham and Abbot, who differ among themselves almost as widely as they one and all differ from the Catholic view of the great questions of life—unite, not only in considering Catholicity a real force, to be met and dealt with on its own ground, but in dismissing Protestantism as a thing whose vitality is exhausted and whose intellectual basis is beneath contempt, their unanimity is worthy of notice as betraying the drift of the better non-Catholic thought and cultivation of the day. They indicate, however, an attitude of mind which is as distinctly non-Protestant as non-Catholic, and what they have to say cannot be regarded as damaging admissions of weakness from within the hostile religious camp, but simply as the criticism of those who hold themselves aloof from Christianity, under whatever form. The sincere, devout, and intelligent Protestant, when once his faith in the soundness of his religious creed has been undermined, has generally started on the road which, beginning with a firm belief in God, ends logically in Rome. His criticism finds, most often, its only expression in the fact that he applies for admission into the Catholic Church. His way into that harbor is likely to be long or short in proportion to the depth of his sincerity and the quickness of his intelligence. If, however, he be more devout than clear-headed, and if he live where the reports of trials like that just concluded by the Brooklyn Presbytery do not trouble his conscience and his mental quiet, he may live and die in a state of invincible and inculpable ignorance concerning the implicit truths of Christianity, while yet claiming and rightly claiming the name of Christian. But as ignorance of this sort is necessarily combined with a good deal of ignorance of quite another sort, the opinions which those whose minds are clouded by it hold concerning the worth of Protestantism have no importance and deserve no attention.

As a matter of fact, the self-criticism of Protestantism proper is mostly unconscious. It washes a good deal of dirty linen in full view of the public, without seeming to know that it has left its own precincts, or recognizing that the contrast between what it holds to be unclean and what it claims to be immaculate is not palpable to the eyes of dispassionate observers. This month of May is not very far gone as yet, but it has already recorded two heavy condemnations of the theory and practice of Protestantism from within its own borders. The weightiest, the most respected and respectable of the Protestant bodies in this country is undoubtedly the Presbyterian community. For forty days that community has been engaged in demonstrating to the general public that it has entirely lost sight of the fact that there either is or should be any essential difference between Christian morality and the ways and manners of the world outside the Church. Upon the floor of its court room, the best-known ministers of the sect have wrangled and fought, called each other opprobrious names, displayed an utter disregard, not only of what they call "Christian charity," but common courtesy, and finally by distinct vote have affirmed that so long as a man is sound on the main question of Orthodoxy, and can attract a paying audience, it matters not whether he is truthful, sober-minded, and upright in his dealings with other men. The Presbyterian religious press has almost uniformly adopted the views expressed by the majority in this trial, and, in so doing, the Brooklyn Presbytery, upheld by the sect throughout the country, has demonstrated the truth of the affirmation that Protestantism as represented by them is intellectually dead and morally dying.

A more shocking, but not a more conclusive, proof of what must be the inevitable end of the "private-judgment" theory, as well in morals as in faith, was given in Massachusetts lately. The shoemaker Freeman, when he stabbed his little daughter to the heart and offered her in sacrifice, in obedience to what he believed to be sound Scriptural doctrine reinforced by a private revelation, was as consistent and logical a man as Luther himself. He broke the laws of God and man because he took it into a weak and crazy head that he was called to be the leader of a new reform. What more or less did Luther do? Far more, indeed, in the consequences which ensued from that revolt of the mind and rebellion of the flesh of which Freeman's crime is only an isolated and barren fruit. But in principle the acts of both are as justifiable as is that of either. St. Peter warns the Christian world that no prophecy of Scripture is made by private interpretation, but against that divinely inspired caution Luther utters a protest which all Protestantism reschoes. It has pinned its faith on the dead letter of a book, and relegated to every soul the obligation of finding out what it teaches, prohibits, and commands. The inward impulse which Luther and his latest priestly imitators followed when they broke their vows in order to gratify their passions was not one whit more respectable in origin, more justifiable in logic, or less criminal in act than that which Freeman obeyed when he recognized in himself a new Abraham and slaughtered his sleeping child. We understate the case in making that assertion. For Luther and his modern imitators who have broken the Catholic ranks have sinned against light, as the leaders of the Protestant revolt to-day are sinning against experience and reason. As for Freeman, he probably came honestly by his mental obliquity, and was only a little later in compassing the death of his offspring in accordance with his private views concerning his rights and duties than the majority of his Massachusetts compatriots. "Individualism," says Mr. Abbot, who understands by that word the prevailing tendency which is leading men to be their own standards of right and wrong, irrespective of what he calls "the common conscience of mankind," is only "Protestantism gone to seed." Freeman's crime is simply one example of the truth of that saying. The action of the Brooklyn Presbytery in practically denying that the Christian name emphatically demands truthfulness, common honesty, and straightforwardness in money matters is another. And both of them are inside testimonies of the worthlessness of Protestantism as an intellectual guide or a moral support which have more practical weight than all that can be said against it by outsiders.—Brooklyn Catholic Review, May 18.

TWO HIBERNIANS were passing a stable which had a rooster on it for a weather-vane, when one addressed the other thus: "Pat, what's the reason they didn't put a hin up there, instid of a rooster?" "An' sure," replied Pat, "that's aisy enough. Don't ye see it would be inconvenient to go for the eggs?"

CASH RECEIPTS.

N. B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 31.

W. H. Ovington, $3.25; Mrs. F. M. Petty, $2.25; Mrs. Lucretia Mott, $5; Sam'l Lyon, $2.05; Allan Greeley, $3.20; Darius Lyman, $3.50; Jas. McTear, $1.25; Chas. F. Tenney, $3.20; Thos. Bradley, $1.50; R. J. Moffitt, 50 cents; A. Dunbar, $3.55; C. Dumas, $1.50; A. B. Bradford, $1; New England News Co., $3.02; D. B. Harris, $3.20; Harvey Brown, $1; Louis Ash, $3.20; John Mackey, $1.50; F. B. Coleman, $1.50; W. E. Koscoe, $1.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 5, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street; J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIEUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. L. SUREUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases; i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Eighth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held at their office, No. 35 Monroe Street, Toledo, Ohio, on Saturday, June 7, 1879, at 2:30 P.M., for the hearing of the annual reports, the election of Directors for the ensuing year, and the transaction of any other business that may come before the meeting.

EDITORIAL NOTICE.

About the middle of June I shall be obliged to sail for the Azores, in order to accompany an invalid member of my family, and shall probably be absent three months. During that time my friend, Mr. David H. Clark, will edit THE INDEX. All literary communications should be addressed to him, and all business letters to Mr. H. P. Hyde, at this office. Letters addressed to me personally must remain unopened till my return. Attention to these directions will save annoyance to correspondents.

June 3, 1879.

F. E. ABBOT.

"THROUGH ROME ON."

Mr. N. R. Waters, of Baltimore, has recently given to the world one of the most interesting analyses ever made of the process by which a naturally clear intellect combined with a tenderly sensitive conscience, even though educated in Christianity, inevitably finds its way to thorough-going rationalism, whenever it opens itself ingenuously to the influences of modern knowledge and the modern spirit. We allude to a volume published by Charles P. Somerby, of New York, under the title, Through Rome On. By natural consanguinity this book must take its place by the side of Professor Newman's celebrated Phases of Faith and Mr. Holyoake's Trial of Theism. Its peculiar title was suggested by Rev. J. M. Capes' To Rome and Back, published in London in 1873, and tells the story of a most sincere and earnest pursuit of truth from Protestantism through Catholicism to free-thought. It is, as the author describes it on the title-page, a "memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian experience." In his own words:—

"I started with Christian premises at thirteen. Following the traditional element, under the impulse of my religiosity, I was a Roman Catholic at fifteen. Looking back now that I have arrived at middle age, I see that I was right. The Christian premises really lead to the Roman Catholic conclusion. Such an institution as The Church, in the Roman Catholic sense, is necessary to the fulfilment of the idea of an Infallible Oracle on earth to instruct us in religion, and to furnish and apply at all times a supernatural rule to the conscience." [p. 37.]

This position is very ably and logically expounded at length in the subsequent pages, and shown to lead to the final rejection of Catholicism itself. Mr. Waters evinces great clearness of thought in his analysis of the Protestant principle, which, he says [p. 41], "being the dynamic aspect of individualism, extends of course to other spheres besides the sphere of religion," and in fact is reducible to the statement italicized by the author himself [p. 43]: "Every man is by nature the rightful judge for himself of every subject presented to his mind." This is precisely the ground taken explicitly by the consistent Individualists who are now vociferating for "private judgment in morals." The "Luther of morals" certainly deserves the epithet which so pleases him, when he claims that he represents faithfully the logical outcome of Protestantism in its application to morality. But the complete logical development of it only brings out most plainly the essential halfness and one-sidedness of Protestantism itself. The perception that the individual is obliged to accept the decisions of his own private judgment on all subjects as final for himself, constitutes the side of Protestantism which is true; but non-perception that the individual's decisions are only provisional for society, and not final at all in the settlement of the question—"What shall be raised to the rank of ESTABLISHED TRUTHS OF SCIENCE?" constitutes its weak side. It takes the Consensus of the Competent to answer that question.

We do not discover that Mr. Waters, in the present book, has carried his thought quite so far as this. He very unqualifiedly expresses his dissent from the theory of Transcendental Intuitionism:—

"Nor could I discover in myself the 'intuitions' insisted on by the Liberal Theists. The theory of the latter I saw to be at bottom that of the churches, from which I had recoiled with an immitigable disgust already. . . . So, with all my spiritual sympathy with such men as Theodore Parker and F. W. Newman, I could not anchor my mind at last in their theistic doctrines, embracing an asserted Divine Person, to be invoked by us; the sense of Individual Immortality; and Free Will as I understood them to hold it." [pp. 153, 155.]

"It is right, however, that I should say that the name [atheist] does not seem to me suited to my case. While I cannot join theists, in or out of the churches, in affirming a specific Deity behind Nature, neither can I join atheists in denying the possibility of such a Being; still less do I deny what Parker calls the quality of God. This I find and reverence in Nature, without pretending to know of any source for it beyond," etc. [pp. 188, 189.]

"Let me not be judged by Shibboleths. If by 'God' they mean not a magnified Man, but the Goodness that cheers and hallows life, or the inscrutable Power manifested in us and in all things, then I believe in God as firmly as they. If by 'heaven' they mean not an oriental city, but the blessedness of the pure in heart, I believe with them in that too. Moral obligation is as indefeasible and sacred in my eyes as in theirs. I no more require a supernatural sanction for its validity than for the truth of mathematics. While I am not able by any kind of searching to find out God, in the sense of the religious; while I get no glimpse whatever of any Source of Nature, and refuse to beguile myself or others with any ingannation or pretence on the subject, I have nevertheless as deep and as constraining a faith as any theist can possibly have, in the holiness and power which are in Nature as solar life is in the air. The sense of Duty and the moral habit of righteousness are dearer to me than words can tell; and I draw nigh in spirit to all who love and cherish them and show them forth in their lives. This principle and this habit make a precious spiritual quality, which is distributed, though in very unequal degrees, among mankind, and is the true light which enlighteneth every man that cometh into the world. I know that many have a much larger measure of the quality than I have, and I worship it in them, and would fain live with such persons, that their shadow might fall upon me every day." [pp. 190, 200.]

That which has charmed us in the above extracts will also charm others; and that this very remarkable (though somewhat desultory) book, if widely known, would be widely and nobly influential, we cannot doubt. Its greatest usefulness, in our judgment, lies in the proof it affords that the most radical religious thought is precisely that which most clearly recognizes, and most earnestly upholds, the supreme authority of moral law over the individual. Liberty and morality are equally dear to this true prophet of the age we live in. There is no subtle moral poison lurking under his radicalism. He is no Individualist, though the fact that Individualism is the treacherous Mephistopheles now tempting liberalism to its ruin had not become manifest when these pages were written. We cannot refrain from making further extracts here (we wish our limits permitted even more) which have excited our own liveliest sympathy and admiration, and which furnish warning and instruction of the wisest kind, loudly called for by the present condition of the liberal cause:—

"There is a high obligation to prefer light to darkness; but it is important to beware of the perils which are incidental to coming out of darkness into light. We should not, after the manner and advice of some, hug darkness because of perils in the change; but we should be on our guard against the perils, and watch ourselves closely, that we fall not, to the injury of ourselves and others and the scandal of a noble cause. . . . Free-thinking is not yet Orthodox; and so the failings and vices of its professed followers furnish a greatly enjoyed triumph to its enemies, who loudly proclaim such things as demonstrating the iniquity of Free-thinking; which cannot in its turn fall back upon the sanctity of a close corporation, and is unprotected by approved maxims of indemnity, like those of the monarchists and Christians. Clearly, this state of affairs imposes an additional and a very special obligation on free-thinkers to lead virtuous and exemplary lives, as happily so many of them do. Let conscientious liberals lay this thought to heart, and extend its influence among their fellows as widely as possible. The best part of Christianity is its continual appeal to conscience. This it was that gave it so great an ultimate advantage in its early struggles with less effective spiritual agencies; and this it is which prolongs its life and sway in spite of its obsolescent dogmas and of its cramping and wounding of conscience itself with the pressure of bonds which never give way till they are broken. . . . That Christianity is to pass away and to be superseded by the higher teachings of science and regenerated natural morality, and that this régime is to constitute the Orthodoxy of the future, is an assurance vouchered for by the earnest that we hold in our hands. . . . Genuine Free-thought is a product of the growth and training of moral and intellectual constitution together. There are, in relation to this highest sense of the term, comparatively few genuine free-thinkers yet in the world; though a vast and continually increasing multitude are in the training-schools of Free-thought. The rejection of religion does not make a genuine free-thinker. He is not free in his thoughts who is in bondage to the idea of opposing religion, or to the misleading impulses of his own coarseness, his ignorance, bigotry, disposition to force his own will and opinions down other people's throats, or to be profane and licentious, in the abandon of his fancied freedom, to show his contempt for religion which condemns profaneness and licentiousness. . . . The free-thinker, who has undertaken to be the keeper of his own conscience, is of all men the most obliged to have a true conscience, to follow its light, and to set a good example. It is one of his special duties to correct the widespread conceit that morality is the property of religion, that an unreligious man must be a bad man; and he falls in this duty signally when he lends himself to immoral courses. He, more than all men besides, should abhor such things. In avoiding and abhorring them, he is not pandering to the false prejudices of believers; to respect and practise morality and decorum is not false prejudice; and we are not to go wrong in our conduct in order to be different from people whose errors of opinion we condemn. To do so is to indulge bad feeling, not to follow truth. It is shameful for such scandal to be brought by any one on the name of liberal." [pp. 173-179.]

Never was such teaching more needed than now. Mr. Waters belongs to the few whose eminent natural fitness for the task of mental and moral illumination is the modern substitute for a "Divine call" to the office of public teacher; and he will certainly be recognized as such by all who read his book. With such an estimate of the man, his worth, and his work, our readers will readily understand with what uncommon pleasure we have recently received from

Mr. Waters (whom we never met but once, and that several years ago) the following letter:—

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Though I have just now very poor eyesight for either reading or writing, it has been my happy task for some weeks to follow your able and timely efforts in THE INDEX to relieve Liberalism from the false position in which some who call themselves its friends have united with its avowed enemies to place it; and I am moved to hold out my hand to you and heartily wish you goodspeed. There is nothing, it seems to me, on which liberals should be more careful to be right, and to avoid even the appearance of evil, than on the vital question of morality; and there is perhaps no other on which warm imagination and the combative instinct so often mislead well intentioned ones in the formation and utterance of their opinions. As to those persons who are by nature opposed rather to the decencies of church religion than to its actual errors and mischiefs, argument may be expected to have little effect upon them; but the large better class I have mentioned cannot fail to be edified by a free and fit discussion of the subject such as you are pursuing. That they may be so, and that many religionists may by the same means be purged of their conceit that their fables are necessary to sanctify morality and make it firm, is the earnest wish of

Yours truly,

N. R. WATERS.

BALTIMORE, 11 May, 1879.

It is right that such weighty testimony as this should not be withheld from the liberal public; for it cannot fail to show that the present exigency is enlisting more and more the attention of those who are most keenly alive to the highest interests of the liberal cause, and who certainly in the end will create the public opinion that shall prevail. After reading what has been quoted above from Mr. Waters' book, we suspect that no intelligent liberal will question his right to be reckoned among the "competent" whose "consensus" is indispensable to the final settlement of moral issues. If any one doubts his competency, we can only say: "Read his book, for that is his certificate of election."

MARRIAGE.

There is evidence convincing to those who have given the most attention to the subject, that the relation of marriage commenced in capture—in force on one side and submission on the other. "The males of gregarious mammals," says Spencer, "usually fight for the possession of the females; and primitive men do not in this respect differ from other gregarious animals." "In the loose groups of men first formed there is no established order of any kind; everything is indefinite, unsettled. As the relations of men to one another are undetermined, so are the relations of men to women. In either case, there are no guides save the passions of the moment, checked only by fears of consequences." Many able writers think that the earliest phase of the sexual state was one of pure hetaerism, and that private ownership of woman was established by the members of one tribe stealing women from other tribes. This is a condition that prevails to-day very extensively among tribes in those low stages through which advanced races must have passed. Mr. McLennan is of the opinion that wife-capture "has been practised at a certain stage by every race of mankind."

From the community, barbarians, according to this view, went out on marauding expeditions. They killed members of other tribes, and captured their women whenever an opportunity offered itself. How natural for the capturer to claim a peculiar right to the female captive! Had he chosen, he could have killed her. Claiming her exclusively for himself involved no clear, direct infringement of the rights of his tribe, like taking for himself alone, one of the women of his own community.

One of the proofs that marriage had such an origin is the fact that marriage by capture, as a stern reality, prevails widely in uncivilized portions of the world, while the symbol of capture can be seen in marriage ceremonies of nearly, if not all, the great nations of ancient and modern times.

Either as a reality or a ceremony, it "prevails," says Sir John Lubbock, "in Australia and among the Malays, in Hindostan, Central Asia, Siberia, and Kamtschatka, among the Esquimaux, the Northern Red-Skins, the Aborigines of Brazil, in Chili and Terra del Fuego, in the Pacific Islands, both among the Polynesians and Fijians, in the Philippines, among the Arabs and Negroes, in Circassia, and until recently throughout a greater part of Europe."

In Babylonia, according to Herodotus, every woman was required to offer herself once in the temple of Venus before she was at liberty to marry. The same custom, according to other ancient writers, prevailed in Armenia, Cyprus, at Carthage, in several parts of Greece, and in various portions of the ancient world. Among tribes that have advanced beyond this communal system, the same practice substantially prevails to-day. Lubbock, among others who have taken pains to collect facts and who have given much thought to this subject, regards this custom as the clear recognition of preëxistent tribal or "communal" rights. It is not improbable, as Spencer maintains, that, in some localities and under some circumstances, "even in prehistoric times, promiscuity was checked by the establishment of individual connections, prompted by men's likings and maintained against other men by force." The same writer concludes "that monogamy is the natural form of sexual relation for the human race," and that "it is manifest that monogamy has long been growing innate in the civilized man; all the ideas and sentiments that have become associated with marriage having, as their necessary implication, the singleness of the union."

The view that marriage originated in barbarism and even in violent capture furnishes no argument against the institution as it exists to-day, when it is still a sort of capture, though woman is not always the captured party! It is not pleasant to contemplate all the stages through which we have passed from savage to civilized life; but the results of this slow and painful development are none the less valuable. Marriage, it is true, has been evolved through centuries of wrong and brutality to woman, from the effects of which, by reaction, man has suffered hardly less than his companion; but now, in enlightened countries, divested of its essentially barbarous features, giving us the home circle with all its refining and elevating influences, developing and intensifying the affections, and securing to infancy and youth the nurture and care they need, marriage has come to be an institution indispensable to the intellectual and moral culture of the race. True, there are yet evils connected with it; but they are no necessary part of it. They are mere excrescences, which are destined to disappear as others have in the past.

With us to-day, marriage is a civil contract, by which a man and woman agree to live together. Its object is to secure justice to both parties; to prevent promiscuous intercourse between those whose only aim is the gratification of the passions; and the protection, support, and culture of offspring. True marriage presupposes mutual attachment, affection between the parties united, acquaintance and familiarity with each other's prominent traits of character, intellectual, moral, and physical condition, social standing, prospect in life, etc.

Yet in view of the liability of the parties to be deceived, and to practise deception in selecting companions, and to afford means of escape from life long companionship with persons who are found incapable of performing the duties and meeting the obligations of the compact, a provision is made in every State of the Union whereby the aggrieved party can apply for and obtain a divorce. In my opinion all the causes for which applications for divorce should be granted are recognized by but few of the States. This fact, however, instead of furnishing an argument against the institution of marriage, points to the necessity simply of additional (or less) legislation to guard against evils and abuses that are liable to be connected with the marriage contract.

A vast amount of licentiousness and much wrong no doubt coexist with our marriage relation; but are the opponents of marriage prepared to affirm that these evils would cease with the abolition of the institution? It seems to me in the absence of this compact, recognized by the State and secured by the forms of law, men and women would cohabit as passion or immediate convenience should dictate. Many, without doubt, under the guidance of reason and conscientious forethought, would subordinate their passions to the welfare of those with whom they associated, and would be "a law unto themselves"; but multitudes, regardless of the public good, would make everything else secondary to their own lust and selfishness. Women, who would be the greatest sufferers directly, would find themselves without any legal protection, of which now they have none too much. And homes and family circles, paternal obligations, brotherly and sisterly ties, and the ennobling, elevating, and refining influences which spring from the permanent home,—would these be increased by the abolition of all legal enactments pertaining to the relation of the sexes? It is clear to me that the zeal of those who, in their attempts at reform, direct their opposition to marriage, is sadly misdirected.

B. F. U.

FREEMAN'S CASE.

ST. PAUL, May 22, 1879.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

In THE INDEX of the 8th you pointedly put to any "Individualist" the question: "Did not Freeman, on your own principle, have an undoubted right to murder his child in obedience to his own 'private judgment in morals'?"

In asking this question you seem to me to assume that the murder was committed in obedience to his private judgment. To me it seems clear that it was not. I cannot doubt that it was committed against his own private judgment in obedience to the teachings of Paul and the dignitaries of the Christian Church in all ages since, including especially Dwight L. Moody, Joseph Cook, and Dr. Pentecost. They all teach that Abraham's faith in offering to slay his "only begotten son" was a better thing than any works he ever did. They have instigated the murder by imposing upon poor deluded Freeman, his wife and neighbors, the creed that the Bible is from God, and not man; that the Holy Ghost communicates personally and directly with the human mind, miraculously converting the naturally depraved man from sin to holiness. Now if we admit the inspiration of the Bible, in the sense of all the Orthodox Christian creeds, the Adventists are certainly right. They are the only logical or rational sect. And it seems Freeman's act was justified by the whole body of that sect at Pocasset (which was to him a "Consensus of the Competent"), to say nothing of Dr. Tyng and his recent convention of high scholarly Adventists.

It is quite time to recognize that the Bible, besides its commendation of Abraham's faith, contains the bold commandment, "Thou shalt not kill," just as it contains other commandments which appear flatly contradictory to practices which it appears to justify. The truth is, that by exercising his own private judgment a man can pick a great deal of good sound morality out of the Bible, and make its bad morals useful by shunning them. It is by this individualism of judgment that the world has grown better, even in the Church, in spite of the Orthodox creeds. All the competent, each by virtue of his own individual judicial freedom, have discovered these creeds to be simple lies, not for one moment to be regarded otherwise in their own individual conduct. But the incompetent have discovered no such thing. They go on doing one of two things. They either rebel naturally against the horrible God of the creeds, and cast off all self-restraint, hoping for salvation by grace by and by, or they succumb to the evangelists, get modified, accept the inspired Bible as their final guide, and allow it to domineer over their common-sense or private judgment.

If that portion of the Christian priesthood which has come to know that the Christian creeds are simple lies would but openly and manfully confess the fact, such fanaticism as that of Freeman would not last a day. It seldom breaks out in murder, for there is always a natural force of individualism working against it; but it darkens and sickens the lives of millions. The horrid gloom invoked from another unknowable world every Sunday and some week-days in ten thousands of pulpits poisons the innocent joys of this, and makes people believe that really good morals are of no account.

So far as I can understand the case from the newspaper publications I have seen, Freeman's guilt consists in his not following his own private judgment, which was decidedly coincident with the secular law, but in accepting as true the fundamental propositions of corporate Christianity.

Yours truly, ELIZUR WRIGHT.

[Freeman himself, as was shown by last week's INDEX, defends the murder as commanded by his own "conscientious convictions" of duty,—his own private judgment in morals; and his testimony cannot be disputed, if the individual is his own judge. We do not see the consistency of setting aside his testimony as is done above. Our question is not answered, but arbitrarily changed. If private judgment is supreme in all cases, its supremacy covers Freeman's case completely. No individualist can say a word against his act without destroying his own principle. It was not whether Freeman's private judgment dictated the murder, but whether he had not an undoubted right to commit the murder if it did. With the utmost respect, we must point out that this change of the question is the very "evolution" which we deprecated in advance. Our question remains unanswered still.—ED.]

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

There is talk of a Prohibition party next fall.

The Hoosac tunnel promises to be a great bore to the State.

A letter is "dead" that lies a month in an office uncalled for.

In London the ritualists advertise a "three hours' Agony Service."

Rev. Joseph Cook has been lecturing to large audiences in the West.

A Sunday-school in Brooklyn numbers sixteen hundred and seventy.

The papers all unite in lamenting the departed glory of Anniversary Week.

The average salary of Methodist ministers in this country is about $500 per annum.

There were six hundred gallons of petroleum produced in the United States last year.

Michigan University has more students than Harvard, but not half as many instructors.

A monument to Abraham Lincoln is to be erected in the park at Allegheny, Pa., at a cost of $9000.

There were thirty-four snow-storms last season, and a total fall of five feet three and a half inches.

Practical materialism, whatever that may be, is said to be the prevailing religion in the State of California.

The recent graduating class in oratory from Boston University numbered forty, of which thirty-two were women.

The Presbyterian Board find it easier to secure ten young women than one young man for the African mission.

Trinity Church (Episcopal), San Francisco, has a Chinaman by the name of Ah Ching for one of its deacons.

It is calculated that the webs of seven hundred thousand spiders would be required for about forty yards of silk.

Clum Ling, a Chinese member of the graduating class at Yale, will deliver an oration on "The Chinese in America."

Young ladies in Paris are learning to read, and the amusement is more popular just now than learning to play on the piano.

The bath-room in Persia is the temple, the news-room, the drawing-room, the concert-room, and the smoking-room all in one.

Germany has the "hard times" as well as America. She claims about three hundred and fifty thousand workmen out of employment.

The Catholics are to be invited to pay up the three million dollars that Archbishop Purcell lost. Such an invitation will doubtless be declined.

Under the Ohio Sunday law, ferry-men, emigrants, toll-gate keepers, Seventh Day Baptists, and Jews are exempted from the observance of the Christian Sabbath.

The place of public executioner in Paris being vacant, no less than five hundred and sixty-eight applications have been made for it. Among this number were eighty-seven doctors.

Dr. Döllinger strenuously denies that he has returned to the Roman Catholic Church. He writes that he would sooner cut off his hand than put his name to the Vatican decrees.

The most popular newspaper in the City of Mexico, a city with a population of two hundred thousand, has a daily circulation of only two thousand copies. The Mexicans evidently do not care for news.

It has been suggested that the recent wars in Europe, which have cheapened the value of human life and familiarized men with stories of bloodshed, have had an influence in causing recent assassinations and attempts at assassination.

Massachusetts Christians are trying to have a Sunday on the New Mexico plan. The week there, so far as business, pleasure, and social intercourse are concerned, ends Saturday night, and has no commencement again until Monday morning.

The exhortation of the Christian Church to live a life of sacrifice is not to be heeded. Men have sacrificed too much. What man has been giving to the Church he should use for his own improvement. The world has been robbed in the name of sacrifice.

When men say the realm of morals is a private domain, and write over their actions, "All persons are forbidden to trespass upon these premises," they must beware that within that domain no deed is done that will not bear the eye of justice to look through it.

The British House of Commons has recently passed a resolution, by the rather astonishing vote of 103 to 65, abolishing the action for breach of promise of marriage, except in cases where actual pecuniary loss has been incurred by reason of the promise.

Christianity makes pain a sacrament and suffering the door of heaven. It paints the angels happiest when men weep. It offers a crown of thorns to human ambition. It holds up a cross for the world to work for. All this is contrary to the natural longings of the heart, and is false.

The Russian Nihilists say in so many words, through their accredited organ: "Our task is to work the most horror,—causing destruction, pitiless and complete. To centralize this present world into an insuperable, all-destroying power,—that is the aim of our organization, our sworn task."

In a temple in Bangkok, Siam, there is a heathen idol in human form one hundred and seventy-seven feet high, covered with gold from his crown to his toes, each of which is three feet long. There are hundreds of other temples in the city with costly images of enormous size. Even Heathenism costs money.

There was a largely attended meeting in Wesleyan Hall, Monday afternoon, May 28, "to devise a plan for the better observance of the Sabbath." The meeting was really for the purpose of devising some way to prevent people from enjoying themselves on Sunday. It was an Orthodox Christian attempt to foist its religion upon the world.

William Lloyd Garrison was born on the 10th of December, 1805, at Newburyport, in this State. He had a long and full life. Mr. Garrison belonged to no party and no sect. He held no office. He served mankind, and was of the highest type of philanthropists. He was a radical in politics and religion. His name will be written with those of Sumner, Parker, and Lincoln.

Portsmouth, N.H., has a would-be Freeman. His name is Charles Goodwin, and he is a victim of a recent revival held in that place. He insists that the Lord has commanded him to kill his children, and begged that they might be taken away from him before he committed the deed. Goodwin is the second person who has been sent to an Insane Asylum through religious excitement brought on at the late revival.

America may well be proud of her inventors, when she is credited with the cotton gin, the planing machine, the grass mower and grain reaper, the rotary printing-press, navigation by steam, the hot air or calorific engine, the sewing machine, the India-rubber industry, the machine manufacture of horse shoes, the sand blast for carving, the gauge lathe, the grain elevator, artificial ice-manufacture on a large scale, the electro-magnet and its practical application, and the composing machine for printers.

Talmage says: "All heaven will stop to listen to Jesus when he tells the story of his crucifixion, and every harp will be put down, and every lip closed, and all eyes fixed upon the Divine narrator until the story is done; and then, at the tap of the baton, the eternal orchestra will rise up, finger on string of harp and lips to the mouth of trumpet, and there shall roll forth the oratorio of the Messiah—'Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive blessing, and riches, and honor, and glory, and power, world without end.'" This eclipses the rural correspondent's description of "Pinafore" at the Boston Theatre.

It is a mistake to think that the good and beautiful are not at home on earth; that we are to entertain them as gods. No person ever walked the earth or lived in the homes of men who was too fair or too noble for his place. Goodness is not out of its element in this world. It is the very persons that we say are too good for the world that we need to make the world better. There was never yet kindness too kind for humanity, never goodness too good for mortals, never man or woman too high and pure for earth. Let us learn to say, "He is good enough to live." The world is for those who make it better.

Rev. Julius H. Ward, who gives Sunday afternoon lectures at Union Hall, took for the subject of his talk on Sunday, May 25, "Our Personal Knowledge of the Holy Ghost." In the course of his remarks he informed the world that "the Holy Ghost is a person, but he is a spiritual person. There are three ages of God's development. The first is the age of divine knowledge and worship; the second is the age of Immanuel—God among men; the third is the period of the Holy Ghost. The moment when the third age began was when the Holy Ghost descended on the great day of Pentecost. This third age crowns, but in no respect supersedes, the other two. God the Father is still the Creator, the object of all true worship, the Father of Christians, the Giver of the Holy Ghost. The Son is still our Redeemer, our Lord, our God. But now the most immediate, characteristic, and peculiar presence of God among us is His presence in the Holy Spirit."

The public conscience to-day is more ready to forgive departure from rectitude than to exact moral integrity from men and women. There is a feeling which runs both high and low, that anything is right that is not found out. We have taken a great deal of risk in morals lately. There is defiance of the old maxims of conduct, and a letting down of private ethics. There must be no longer this looking at things obliquely,—this defying the moral law and trusting to the doctrine of atonement for righting matters. We must learn that there is wrong in a wrong act, no matter what the consequences of the act; and not only learn this truth, but enforce it in our lives. There has been a great deal of moral luck in human actions, and far too much confidence placed in this good fortune. "All's well that ends well" is a very good motto, but it is best to proceed upon the ground that only what is right will end right. Some one has said that "Nature hates a fool." There is no greater fool than the person who imagines that Nature will change her laws or suspend their operation because he repents his folly. The truth that needs to be planted in the breast of this generation is that no magic or miracle will make up for man's neglect to do right, or repair his disobedience.

Communications.

"EMERSON'S SUNDAY."

The Twenty-eighth Congregational Sunday-school devoted part of its Sunday's session of May 25 to the consideration of portions of Ralph Waldo Emerson's writings, calling the occasion "Emerson Sunday." The day was Mr. Emerson's seventy-sixth birthday, although that fact was unknown to the school when the meeting was planned. A short sketch of the great man's life was given by the superintendent of the school, and some of the members delivered quotations from his works. After each of the latter was read, the members were free to express their opinion,—an opportunity which was improved, the comments showing acceptance of the views of the author. The following were the quotations presented:—

"The world is young: the former great men call to us affectionately. We, too, must write Bibles to unite again the heavens and the earthly world. The secret of genius is to suffer no fiction to exist for us; to realize all that we know, in the high refinement of modern life, in arts, in sciences, in books, in men; to exact good faith, reality, and a purpose; and first, last, midst, and without end, to honor every truth by use."

"The household is the home of the man, as well as of the child. The events that occur therein are more near and affecting to us than those which are sought in senates and academies. Domestic events are certainly our affair. What are called public events may or may not be ours. If a man wishes to acquaint himself with the real history of the world, with the spirit of the age, he must not first go to the State House or the court room. The subtle spirit of life must be sought in facts nearer. It is what is done and suffered in the house, in the constitution, in the temperament, in the personal history, that has the profoundest interest for us."

"Palestine is ever the more valuable as a chapter in universal history, and ever the less an available element in education. The genius of Swedenborg, largest of all modern souls in this department of thought, wasted itself in the endeavor to reanimate and conserve what had already arrived at its natural term, and, in the great secular Providence, was retiring from its prominence before western modes of thought and expression. Swedenborg and Behmen both failed by attaching themselves to the Christian symbol, instead of to the moral sentiment, which carries innumerable Christianities, humanities, divinities, in its bosom."

"O Iole! how did you know that Hercules was a god?" "Because," answered Iole, "I was content the moment my eyes fell on him. When I beheld Theseus, I desired that I might see him offer battle, or at least guide his horses in the chariot race; but Hercules did not wait for a contest; he conquered whether he stood, or walked, or sat, or whatever thing he did."

"We have no pleasure in thinking of a benevolence that is only measured by its works."

"To give money to a sufferer is only a come-off. It is only a postponement of the real payment, a bribe paid for silence,—a credit system in which a paper promise to pay answers for the time instead of liquidation. We owe to man higher succors than food and fire. We owe man to man. If he is sick, is unable, is mean-spirited and odious, it is because there is so much of his nature which is unlawfully withheld from him. He should be visited in this his prison with rebuke to the evil demons, with manly encouragement, with no mean-spirited offer of condolence because you have not money or mean offer of money as the utmost benefit, but by your heroism, your purity, and your faith. You are to bring with you that spirit which is understanding, health, and self-help. To offer him money in lieu of these, is to do him the same wrong as when the bridegroom offers his betrothed virgin a sum of money to release him from his engagements."

"Truth is our element of life; yet if a man fasten his attention on a single aspect of truth, and apply himself to that alone for a long time, the truth becomes distorted and not itself, but falsehood: herein resembling the air, which is our natural element, and the breath of our nostrils; but if a stream of the same be directed on the body for a time, it causes cold, fever, and even death."

"Very few of our race can be said to be yet finished men. We still carry sticking to us some remains of the preceding inferior quadruped organization. We call these millions men; but they are not yet men."

Half engaged in the soil, pawing to get free, man needs all the music that can be brought to disengage him. If love, red love with tears and joy; if want with his scourge; if war with his cannonade; if Christianity with its charity; if trade with its money; if art with its portfolios; if science with her telegraphs through the deeps of space and time, can set his dull nerves throbbing, and, by loud taps on the tough chrysalis, can break its walls and let the new creature emerge erect and free,—make way and sing psalm! The age of the quadruped is to go out,—the age of the brain and the heart is to come in. The time will come when, the evil forms we have known can no more be organized. Man's culture can spare nothing; wants all the material. He is to convert all impediments into instruments, all enemies into power."

"We are thrown back on rectitude forever and ever, only rectitude—to mend one; that is all we can do."

"Saying, What is excellent,
As God lives, is permanent;
Hearts are dust; hearts' loves remain:
Hearts' love shall meet thee again."

"Men talk of 'mere morality,'—which is much as if one should say, 'Poor God, with nobody to help him.'"

"The religion which is to guide and fulfil the present and coming ages, whatever else it be, must be intellectual. The scientific mind must have a faith which is science. 'There are two things,' said Mahomet, 'which I abhor, the learned in his infidelities and the fool in his devotions.' Our times are impatient of both, and specially of the last. There is surely enough for the heart and imagination in the religion itself. Let us not be pestered with assertions and half-truths, with emotions and snuffles."

"How a man's truth comes to mind long after we have forgotten all his words! How it comes to us in silent hours, that truth is our only armor in all passages of life and death! Wit is cheap, and anger is cheap; but if you cannot argue or explain yourself to the other party, cleave to the truth against me, against thee, and you gain a station from which you cannot be dislodged. The other party will forget the words that you spoke, but the part you took continues to plead for you."

MORALITY A WILL-O'-THE-WISP.

MR. ABBOT:—

An editorial article entitled "Three Schools of Ethics," in THE INDEX of Jan. 9, suggests to me the remark that what seems a capital error of all the "schools" whose theories regarding the test of right and wrong you there outline is the assumption that there is some ultimate test of right and wrong.

The act of Gen. Washington in writing a falsehood ostensibly to one of his subordinates in command, but designed to be intercepted and read by the British commander, for the purpose of misleading him respecting contemplated movements of Washington's army, was right.

But right for what? Right for obtaining American independence, and right for many other more or less remote results. But certainly not right for everything; therefore, not absolutely right. For equally true would it be to say that such act was wrong. But then, again, wrong for what? Why, wrong, of course, for perpetuating the rule of the Brunswick dynasty over the thirteen colonies.

Miss Taylor would very likely say—and perhaps correctly—that it was also wrong (by its example) for promoting candor; though, if it was, it was at the same time right for the opposite result—that of promoting the practice of deception.

But, except for the causing of some given result, such act was neither right nor wrong. To say that an action is absolutely right or absolutely wrong, is to say in effect that such action is right or wrong for producing some ultimate result; which involves the idea that there will be an ultimate result, or last effect, i.e., an effect which will not itself in turn be the cause of anything whatsoever; whereas, that there will be such an effect is not only not proved, but is inconceivable. Therefore, morality in the long run, no less than morality per se, is a will-o'-the-wisp.

Original and ingenious as your definition of right and wrong is, there is nevertheless, I conceive, a hiatus between it and the real bottom of the question. "Right is such a relation," you say, "between two or more intelligent and sensitive beings, or between two or more sensitive beings of whom one at least is intelligent, that each shall be secure in the fullest activity of its natural powers which is compatible with the equal activity of the other or others; and wrong is such a relation as partly or wholly destroys this natural equilibrium."

Therefore you would, of course, conversely say that "such a relation, etc., etc., is right." But right for what, and why right? The only reply I can imagine is: It is right (in the estimation of those who consider it right) simply because those who consider it right desire the existence of "such a relation, etc."

While to those who believe, as for instance the slave-owners of the South did, that "such a relation, etc., etc.," conduces not to the happiness of any, but to the unhappiness of all concerned, and who therefore (or for any other reason) do not desire "such a relation, etc., etc.," such relation is not right, but is wrong.

You further say: "Those actions, therefore, are right which conform to the natural conditions of this equilibrium; those actions are wrong which do not conform to them."

If this be true, then the refusal of a sick urchin, despite the highest medical authority and the persuasions of his parents, to swallow a dose of salts is right, and the holding of his nose and compelling him to swallow it is an altogether wrong action:

which it will scarcely be admitted (outside of urchin-dom) is the case.

Your definition of right (in its restricted sense) is a good one for those whose desire in general is that every sensitive being shall be secure in the fullest activity of all its natural powers which is compatible with the equal activity of every other sensitive being. But it is not a correct definition for others. That is to say, it does not express what others mean when they use the word right.

And now permit me to venture on the "perilous undertaking" of indicating what constitutes an action right—when it is right, and wrong when it is wrong.

An action is right in one or more communities, when it is of a kind which such community or communities generally desire to have performed, and it is wrong when it is of a kind which it or they generally desire to have left unperformed.

Doubtless most people would think I should have said: "An action is called right when it is, etc." But all who think so are closely allied in their mental constitution with the honest Teuton who, at the Paris Exposition, observed to a compatriot: "What strange beings these Frenchmen are! They call brod, PAIN!" and who, when the other rejoined: "Well, and we call pain, brod," exclaimed: "Oh, yes! but then it is brod, you know."

It requires an effort, at first, to realize that our vernacular is not THE vernacular, and a still greater effort to realize that our morality is not THE morality.

If it be said that my definition fails, also, of going to the bottom of the question, inasmuch as it takes no account of the WHY a community does desire one kind of actions to be performed and another kind left unperformed, I acknowledge this; but I maintain that it goes as near the bottom as any general statement can, because the reasons of our desires, being multifarious, complex, and variable, are incapable of being expressed in any general statement.

Granting that the formula of the greatest good to the greatest number is reducible to that of the greatest attainable good (in the long run) of number one, still there are some moral actions which seem unrelated to any considerations either of public policy or self-interest.

For instance, it is right for parents to nurture their deformed and idiotic children. And yet it would perhaps accord best with the interests, not only of the parents and of society, but of such children themselves, that the latter should (say in pursuance of a judicial sentence) be promptly chloroformed to death. Then why would a law requiring or permitting such children to be deprived of existence be immoral? A full and satisfying answer to this question would require a detailed explanation of how in the long past all such members of the human race as failed of inheriting and transmitting an immoderate love of offspring failed of permanently perpetuating their kind, except in climates so mild as to enable infants to survive a considerable degree of parental neglect; and that, therefore, elsewhere the love for one's offspring has become by natural selection so immoderate that infanticide under any circumstances is abhorrent to popular sentiment and therefore immoral. And equally detailed explanations would be required to show why obscenity, incest, suicide, etc., are respectively deprecated by society, and therefore immoral.

But I have said enough to indicate the nature, if not to establish the validity, of the excuse I would offer for the lack of exhaustive inclusiveness on the part of my formula of the distinction between right and wrong. Truly yours, S. J. MATTHEWS.

MONTICELLO, Ark.

THE CHRISTIAN FAITH.

There is something deeply affecting even to an unbeliever in the earnestness of the Orthodox faith. Some time ago I attended a Baptist "meeting" at which one of the old preachers of this denomination spoke with unusual enthusiasm on the comforts of the Christian religion. With this aged man, grown gray in "the service of the Lord," the religion of Christ was no lifeless form as it has become in many eloquent and fashionable pulpits of the city. He was preaching to sincere believers who like himself had often found the Christian hope a source of spiritual strength and comfort in life's severest trials. Well known and warmly loved by all his hearers, he had every claim on their sympathy that he could have desired. He had been their constant friend through all of the vicissitudes of many years. During the dark days of the late rebellion, which in Southwest Missouri was marked by the most barbarous atrocities, his benevolent heart had never grown harsh and vindictive, and many old friendships were preserved through those perilous times by his assiduous labors as peacemaker. He was now in the presence of a congregation whose life history he knew thoroughly. He had rejoiced with his audience at the marriage festival and wept with them at the grave; and now probably for the last time, on account of the feebleness of age, was speaking to them on the old theme of "salvation." He told in the modest yet earnest manner of a generous and pure heart what his faith had been to him during the many years of his "Christian warfare." The pleasures of health and action had now failed him; his earthly career was about to close; but one comfort had survived the devastation of time, and that was the Christian's hope. After closing his fervent blessing on the faithful brethren who had fought with him "the good fight," and were soon to be called home to enjoy the happiness of "the Church Triumphant," he walked down the aisle to speak one more word of warning to the "unregenerate." That he regarded with loving pity every "sinner" in the audience, and felt the worth of the soul to be inestimable, could not be doubted.

When the faith of our fathers is thus seen in its simplicity and beauty, the sternest scepticism is softened and humbled. The heart longs to worship where the reason will not permit. The shrine of Christianity is holy, though superstition has made it so. What other faith has so fully met the wants of the human heart! What other religion has inspired such benevolent enthusiasm for the eternal welfare of man! What other name has so swayed the hearts of the common millions as the name of Jesus! When will any system of rationalism afford the comfort and strength to the thousands of our race who toil and suffer from the cradle to the grave that the "religion of the Cross" has given! When will any purely intellectual ideal, without the soul of "faith," receive the loyal homage that Christianity has commanded! With what creed of reason will mankind learn to associate such noble sentiments of duty and practical goodness! Under the influence of what new philosophy will the ever-present ills of life be borne with the cheerful resignation that the religion of Jesus has inspired! The common lot of man is not much reward of itself. It has not the material for much philosophical dignity. The average human being has but little to boast of when he comes to sum up the achievements of his life. He has hoped for much, but accomplished almost nothing. Into such a life the hopes of religion enter graciously, smoothing its rough places, and imparting to it a sense of worth that the philosophy of materialism could not give. Outside of religion, the common man is of very little importance individually. That insignificant immortality that he may obtain through the survival of his life's force is not to be thought of. What is one little life deprived of its conscious existence and dissipated throughout the universe of being! Such an immortality will never seem so attractive to the humble thousands as the real future of the Christian faith. This is one of the crowning features of Christianity, the individual excellence with which it invests every human soul. The humblest believer in this faith forgets his obscurity, his relative littleness in this world, and feels for a time at least that he is a member of a great spiritual democracy in which there is no caste founded on accidental conditions. No wonder the Christian religion has always been dear to the common people, who have found but little glory in this world. It was in its primitive simplicity the religion of the poor. H. CLAY NEVILLE.

THE BRAHMO SOMAJ.

Of the rise and growth of this broad and free religious movement among the educated Hindus, the New York Independent gives an idea, as follows:—

The Brahmo Public Opinion, of India, has a review of the history of the Brahmo Somaj, the theistic church of India, from its beginning, forty-nine years ago. This history it divides into three epochs—the Vedantic, the Puranic, and the Eclectic. In the first period, which closed with the death of Ram Mohun Roy, there were "strong and earnest protests against idolatry, along with evident indications of a belief in the infallibility of the Vedas. In the hymns and songs, there were symptoms of a belief in the transmigration of souls, along with traces of a corresponding faith in the Vedantic doctrine of unification with the Divine essence." When the Vedas were given up, Babu Debendranath Tagore came forward with the great truth "that religion is based on the intuitions of the soul." He also "directed his attention to the construction of a new form of church service and a new and unidolatrous code of ceremonies. In doing this, he did not depart from the Hindu Shastras." He collected his texts from them alone, and published that remarkable book known as the Brahma Dharma. This is called the Puranic period, because the development of the Puranic idea of separate entity of the Godhead from the human soul, and also the development of the Puranic practice of worshipping that Godhead took place in it. "We are all debtors," says the Opinion, "to the venerable chief of the Adi Brahmo Somaj for the purity and sweetness of theistic worship that still characterize our church."

While Tagore was preaching his doctrines, another leader was growing up—Babu Keshub Chunder Sen. Mr. Sen and his friends "fretted, as it were, under the conventional barriers of the Shastras, and longed to proclaim a broader and more catholic faith to the world, and to inaugurate an era of nobler self-sacrifice. This growing spirit finally caused a split between the old and the new school. They separated, and from the day of the separation dates an unusual expansion of our church. From that day, Brahmoism has been presented to the world as a perfectly broad and catholic faith, eclectic in its principles and universal in its character. This we consider," adds the Opinion, "to be the greatest service that Babu Keshub Chunder Sen has done to our church." As to the present condition of the church, there has been in the past year "an unprecedented rival in every direction. . . . A separate and powerful organization has been formed [the Sadharan Brahmo Somaj, a schism caused by the early marriage of Mr. Sen's daughter]; one weekly English and a number of Bengali papers have come into existence; as many as six marriages according to theistic rites have taken place; two new houses of prayer have been consecrated and subscriptions opened for four or five more; and, above all, active and friendly correspondence has been opened with mofussil Somajes." Besides this, the Somaj "has sent its missionaries to the Punjab and to the remotest corners of Eastern Bengal. Its executive committee have regularly held meetings every week; have raised and expended money; have issued two journals; have secured a press; have purchased a piece of ground, for the purpose of building a house of prayer of their own."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10¢ per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEUBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 G. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keen-Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Laaser, Dr. J. L. Dindley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna O. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the Idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION. PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 25 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; a Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	2.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. G. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CABLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	6.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
COONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Manson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.00
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (E. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	1.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition, 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOTHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMBERTON (PHILIP S.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Door Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administration of Nullism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.25
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.50
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Constitution of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introduction by E. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	13.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 3 vols.....	3.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.....	2.00
Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	5.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1837 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	3.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MULLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	3.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eskoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. G. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHILIPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolly Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Ragged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours; the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Sonnet, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	1.50
The Expense of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Arnold Schott, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	1.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	1.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	13.00
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Old-Fashioned Tale. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 5 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip.....	1.25
Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmund, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Sketches and Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....	1.25
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....	1.25
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....	1.25
3. Snobs, Sketches, Drolls, &c.....	1.25
4. Four Georges, Humourists, &c.....	1.25
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unre-printed Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Lectures.....	2.00
A Week in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound in Canada.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Addresses before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	1.50
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	5.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

331 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

CHEAP, HEALTHFUL HOMES

in Tennessee. Address WARREN SMITH, Flat Rock, Lewis Co., Tenn.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

1878, 78, 8,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWOPENCE.*THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

MARSTON'S

DINING ROOMS.

FOR

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,
23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. R. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE ## Popular Science Monthly.

CONDUCTED BY

E. L. and W. J. YOUNG.

Containing instructive and interesting articles and abstracts of articles, original, selected, and illustrated, from the pens of the leading scientific men of different countries; accounts of important scientific discoveries; the application of science to the practical arts; the latest views put forth concerning natural phenomena, by savants of the highest authority.

It is an instructive and valuable monthly, and, as a consequence, is continually increasing in circulation and influence.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY is now a large octavo of 128 pages, and will be considerably enlarged, beginning with the issue for January, 1879. It is handsomely printed on clear type, and, when necessary to further convey the ideas of the writer, fully illustrated.

TERMS: Five dollars per annum; or, fifty cents per number.

A Club of five will be sent to any address for $25.00 per annum.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY and APPLETON'S JOURNAL, together, $7.00 per annum (full price, $8.00).

The volumes begin May and November of each year.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

We will be glad to send our Periodical Catalogue, free, upon application.

D. APPLETON & CO., PUBLISHERS,
549 & 551 Broadway, New York.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THIS INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

M. J. SAVAGE'S NEW NOVEL,

Bluffton,

Describing in a very interesting way the processes of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical. 12mo. Price $1.50.

Also, by the same author,

The Religion of Evolution:

"An exposition of religion in the light of the most advanced science. A brave and reverent thinker."—London Inquirer. Price $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

NORTHERN LITERATURE

AND ART ROOMS

will immediately be opened in Boston by Miss Marie A. Brown, for the purpose of giving due prominence to the many beautiful productions of Sweden, Norway, Finland, and Denmark, comprising the literature, English translations and originals, illustrated works, views, photographs, portraits, and paintings and statuary of the most celebrated Northern artists. The "Rooms" will be elegant in all their appointments, an attractive resort for all art-loving people and purchasers.

That it may become an international affair, Miss Brown invites all Americans and Scandinavians who are interested in the enterprise, and wish it success, to aid her efforts by subscribing the requisite fund. One thousand persons are desired who will each subscribe $10.00, for which Nadseida, a poem by Kneberg, and a full set of The Surgeon's Stories, six historical novels by Topelius, as translated and published by her, will be sent them in return, as they are issued.

MARIE A. BROWN,
P.O. Box 900, Boston, Mass.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?

11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.

23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidence for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1878.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1873, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING*NEW BOOKS*For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Koenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament (in preparation). Price $2.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 233 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.25.

THE GHOSTS; Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. E. G. Ingersoll (his latest lectures). 243 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 253 pages. Price $1.25.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with Index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition, 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume, Cloth, $4.00. Half calf, $6.00. Will be ready March 30.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $12.00, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME, ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By N. F. Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE

OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.

2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESSES

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 12, 1879.

WHOLE NO. 494.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.
- N.B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

PROF. C. D. B. MILLS, of Syracuse, will address a meeting of Liberalists at Oneida, Central N.Y., on Sunday next June 15, 1879.

B. F. UNDERWOOD will lecture at Pittsburgh, Pa., June 15; Alliance, O., June 18 and 19; Salem, O., June 20, 21, and 22; River Falls, Wis., June 25 to 29; Arcadia, Wis., July 1, 2, and 3; St. Charles, Minn., July 5 and 6.

HERE is a man who will never be counted in taking the opinion of the "competent": "The world will never fully know how much it owes to science. A 'scientific' man who has been investigating the coal-oil regions of Pennsylvania has come out with the alarming theory that the oil comes from the gearing of the earth's axis, and that the earth will cease to turn when the lubrication ceases. Therefore he holds the opinion that the government ought to interfere at once and put a stop to this pumping and boring for this gudgeon-grease of the universe."

THE LONDON Secular Review says: "THE INDEX describes the Sunday-school of the Free Religious Society of Providence in terms of deserved laudation. The school is divided into 'groups,' each of which has its special study,—among others, botany, mineralogy, and design. 'The busy hum of the room showed how much interest was taken in all these various studies, and the school was evidently prosperous, useful, and well-sustained. . . . The experiment of organization made by this excellent society in 1874 seems to have resulted in a success as assured as it is well-deserved; and the example thus set ought to encourage similar experiments elsewhere.' We sincerely trust that such schools will soon become numerous throughout the Union."

SIR JOHN HERSCHEL, in the Introduction to his Outlines of Astronomy, makes these admirable remarks on the purification of the intellect and the need of mental discipline: "In entering upon any scientific pursuit, one of the student's first endeavors ought to be to prepare his mind for the reception of truth by dismissing, or at least loosening his hold on, all such crude and hastily adopted notions respecting the objects and relations he is about to examine as may tend to embarrass or mislead him, and to strengthen himself, by something of an effort and a resolve, for the unprejudiced admission of any conclusion which shall appear to be supported by careful observation and logical argument,—even should it prove adverse to notions he may have previously formed for himself or taken up without examination on the credit of others. Such an effort is, in fact, a commencement of that intellectual discipline which forms one of the most important ends of all science. It is the first movement of approach towards that state of mental purity which alone can fit us for a full and steady perception of moral beauty as well as physical adaptation. It is the 'euphrasy and rue' with which we must purge our sight before we can receive and contemplate as they are the lineaments of truth and Nature."

THE Christian Register moralizes thus: "What does it mean? One cannot use some of the commonest words of the English language to-day without getting a response which often sounds like the crackling of thorns under a pot. Poe's 'Raven' has suddenly been transferred to comic literature. 'Never' used to be a terrible word; but there is no word which now excites such smiling incredulity. A Sunday-school superintendent who lately gave out a hymn which repeatedly contained the word, found that it had anything but a serious effect. If a minister sees the deacon's daughter lean over and whisper to the young gentleman in the next pew, accompanied by a general smirking and turning of heads throughout the congregation, he at once knows what is the matter. He has unfortunately said, 'Never,'

and the tacit response of the whole congregation is, 'What, never!' If a man happens to refer to his 'sisters, and his cousins, and his aunts,' everybody begins to giggle as if he were at a comic theatre. When the nervous old lady is frightened at snappish noises, and asks, 'What was that?' the small boy promptly responds, 'It was the cat,' and somebody is very likely to add, 'Yes, I know, that is so'; or 'He himself hath said it, and it's greatly to his credit.' Will not some one tell us what it all means? And is there nobody who can stop this prevailing and contagious insanity?"

IN A REVIEW of Hückel's reply to Virchow, the Nation makes these observations, which have a direct bearing upon the Consensus of the Competent: "The human mind knows no such thing as absolute truth. Even mathematical axioms, as Helmholtz correctly maintains, have only an infinite degree of probability for us. All knowledge, all science, is a matter of greater or less probability, and we must accept and teach that which to the best informed appears to be most probable. Provisionally we must adopt those theories which are most in harmony with facts. It is for this reason that our chemists teach the atomic theory, our physicists the undulatory theory of light, our astronomers the nebular hypothesis, although they are fully aware that the very existence of atoms and of an ethereal medium is as yet [experimentally] unproved. . . . What we do insist on is that as soon as natural science is taught, it must be taught on the basis which is now accepted by the best authorities. But it must always be taught, not as absolute truth, but, as in the case of the atoms and the ether, as the nearest approximation to the truth. Nothing is more injurious to the development and growth of the human brain than the overloading of it at an early age with dogmas, be they scientific or religious." "We must accept and teach that which to the best informed appears to be most probable." That principle is impregnable. Superficiality and charlatanry will alone dispute it. But it is the death-warrant of Individualism.

THERE is one sad heretic somewhere in the office of the Boston Herald; or it may be there is more than one of him there, for he is growing numerous in these days: "The Pocasset tragedy shows that the world has made some progress since the days of Abraham. As we read the story in the Bible, it is a valuable lesson of fidelity to a Divine command, which is the highest sense of duty at which we have arrived through our reason and intelligence. But when we are suddenly called to observe a real Abraham, willing to sacrifice a real Isaac, our moral sense revolts. We say at once: No, Abraham was deluded: he received no such command. Such a story told to-day, and located in Pocasset, would be denounced by the street boys as 'too thin.' This tragedy also shows us how much people have advanced beyond the limits of their creeds. In the last century the witchcraft delusion was not confined to a few ignorant fanatics, but was shared by the learned and the prudent of the community. This sharp presentation of a concrete illustration enables us to use our reason about the stories which have been believed because they were distant in time and space. All scientific investigation, enlarging the sphere of human knowledge, and explaining what was not before understood, constantly diminishes the domain of supernaturalism in the government of the world, and accumulates evidence to prove that it is a government of law,—permanent and regular,—never needing any interference on the part of the Creator. If we cannot trace all the operations of the Supreme law, it is simply because our knowledge is limited. If we admit that natural laws can be suspended, and are suspended, we see no reason why we should praise an Abraham and condemn a Freeman, unless it be that Abraham exhibited more reason."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT.	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. F. HURLBUT.	Albany, N.Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.	Irrington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.	Boston, Mass.
MR. WM. J. POTTER.	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. E. P. HALLOWELL.	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PABTON.	Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.	San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.	Providence, R. I.
MR. B. J. SAVAGE.	Boston, Mass.
MR. W. H. SPENCER.	Chicago, Ill.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.	Flora, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.	Detroit, Mich.
MR. HORACE SEEVER.	Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
MR. ISAAC M. WISE.	Editor of "American Israelites," Cincinnati.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.	Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
MR. J. R. HARGRAVE.	Editor of "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
MR. ROBERT COLLYER.	Chicago, Ill.
MR. ROBERT INGEBOLL.	Peoria, Ill.
MR. T. L. BROWN.	Binghamton, N.Y.
MR. R. S. MCCORMICK.	Franklin, Pa.
MR. F. W. EVANS.	Mount Lebanon, N.Y.
MR. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.	New York City.
MR. AMY POST.	Rochester, N.Y.
MR. ELIZABETH OADY STANTON.	Tenafly, N.Y.
MR. RALPH HOLLEY.	Lottsburgh, Va.
MR. JOSEPH MODOUGHE.	Albany, N.Y.
MR. MAX SCHLESINGER.	Albany, N.Y.
Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN.	221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.	142 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX.	3 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.
J. A. J. WILCOX.	W. H. HAMLEN.
F. E. ABBOT.	C. D. B. MILLS.
D. G. ORANDON.
Executive Committee.

Alabama	J. H. HALL, Selma.
Arkansas	JOHN A. HARRIS, Monticello.
California	L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado	DAVID T. BEALE, Granada.
Connecticut	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware	JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville.
Florida	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois	DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana	N. D. WATKINS, Lima.
Iowa	J. O. MICHEER, Adair.
Kansas	JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky	G. B. OLARK, Wilkesville.
Louisiana	EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine	DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts	E. A. SAWTELL, Boston.
Michigan	KARL SCHENKMAN, Detroit.
Minnesota	J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri	E. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Nebraska	W. E. CUFELAND, Lincoln.
Nevada	V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Jersey	FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New York	C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
North Carolina	J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio	E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon	SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt Basin.
Rhode Island	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina	P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee	DR. E. H. PRIOR, Chattanooga.
Texas	DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Vermont	E. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia	L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia	DR. A. M. DEET, Weston.
Wisconsin	ROBERT O. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Dakota	D. F. WILCOX, Yankton.
District of Columbia	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Idaho	W. FERGUSON, Pocatello.
Wyoming	NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. ORANDON, Chairman.	Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.	127 Warren Avenue, Boston.
MARLAN P. HYDE.	221 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
SYRACUSE, N.Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
ALBANY, N.Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
PASSAIC CITY, N.J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Mack.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.
ROCHESTER, N.Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Horace H. Cole.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester.
CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandall.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Resolved, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N.Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y.	MORRIS HAYS, Rochester, N.Y.
FRANKLIN GOODRICH, Cort-8 R. URBINO, West Newton, Mass.
Z. T. WATKINS, Syracuse, N.Y.	W. D. HUNT, Scott, N.Y.
NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, Syracuse, N.Y.	FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, Mass.
GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mt. N. N. LADY, Albany, N.Y.
HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.	J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N.J.
W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass.	SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N.Y.	D. G. ORANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.	CHARLES ELLIS, Boston, Mass.
CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y.	JOHN W. TRUESDELL, Syracuse, N.Y.
EDEN TURE, Chelsea, Mass.	H. P. STARK, Rochester, N.Y.
JOHN HILL, Watertown, N.Y.	JOSEPH MODOUGHE, Albany, N.Y.
E. A. SAWTELL, Boston, Mass.	M. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N.Y.
THOS. DUGAN, Albany, N.Y.	JOHN PEST, Albany, N.Y.
JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N.Y.	O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
DAVID H. OLARK, Florence, R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

Garrison's Funeral.

AN ELOQUENT TRIBUTE TO GARRISON'S CHARACTER BY WENDELL PHILLIPS.—A POEM BY JOHN O. WHITTIER.—ADDRESSES BY THE REV. SAMUEL MAY, SAMUEL JOHNSON, THEODORE D. WELD, AND LUCY STONE.—THE SINGING BY A COLORED QUARTETTE.

It was a sad company which yesterday afternoon filled the old church at Eliot Square in Roxbury, on the occasion of the funeral services of William Lloyd Garrison. The church was crowded to its utmost, and very few were there who were drawn merely from motives of curiosity. It was an assemblage of friends met to do the last earthly offices to one dearly beloved who had gone from their midst. One felt the affection and good-fellowship which had brought them together, and over all rested a calm that was like a benediction from the one departed. On all sides were seen the old familiar faces that have been known since the anti-slavery days, and side by side with these older men and women the younger ones who have come into the reformatory movements in these latter days. There were John G. Whittier, Bronson Alcott, Henry B. Blackwell, Samuel E. Sewall, Mrs. Sewall, Ednah D. Cheney, Mrs. Maria Chapman Weston, Miss Abbie W. May, the Hon. James N. Buffum, Colonel T. W. Higginson, ex-Governor Claflin, J. B. Smith, Robert Morris, the Rev. S. B. Bush, Mark Trafton, the Hon. H. B. Pierce, Mrs. Elizabeth Chase, Mrs. Armenia S. White, Frederick A. Hinckley, and the Hon. Thomas Russell. The remains were inclosed in a rosewood casket, the upper part of which was left open so that all might look once more upon the face which so soon would be but a memory. It had scarcely changed at all from the habitual serene expression which it wore in life, and there was no trace of the physical pains which have so tortured him during the last years of his life. The flowers were most exquisite, and were arranged with rare taste. On the foot of the casket was a wreath of lilies of the valley, and in the centre was a stand of beautiful white and lavender blossoms in a solid vase of panicles; back of the casket at the foot of the pulpit was a pillar heavy with flowers; on the front of the pulpit was a star and a solid circle of white and purple flowers, and on either side was a crescent made of purple pansies against a background of ferns.

It was a little after two o'clock when the funeral cortege entered the church, attended by the following gentlemen as pall-bearers: Wendell Phillips, Samuel Johnson, Charles L. Mitchell, Robert E. Wolcott, Samuel May, Theodore Weld, Samuel E. Sewall, and Lewis Hayden. The services, which were of the simplest, were opened by the Lord's Prayer, repeated by the Rev. Samuel May, followed by the singing of Haydn's "Christmas" by a colored choir, composed of Mrs. Nellie D. Mitchell, soprano; Miss Fanny A. Washington, contralto; Mr. W.

Walker, tenor; and Mr. L. Fisher, bass. Mr. John Howard presided at the organ. The Rev. Mr. May read portions of Scriptures, then paid a brief tribute to Mr. Garrison, who, he said, still lived, and would live, by his memory and his influence, for ages to come. Mrs. Lucy Stone then spoke for the women of America, glorifying the work he had done for the sex. The choir then sang the old hymn Amsterdam, which was a great favorite of Mr. Garrison's, and which was sung at his bedside the last night in which he was conscious. Samuel Johnson was the next speaker, and he spoke of him as a friend and a domestic man, apart from his public life, and called the occasion one of rejoicing rather than grief, and ended by reading a poem written for the occasion by John G. Whittier. Theodore D. Weld spoke briefly, but most feelingly, and ended abruptly, entirely overcome by his emotions. Mr. Phillips then reviewed his life and its chief incidents, and drew from it its lesson for the young men of the present day. He paid the most glowing tribute to his character, his singleness of purpose, his honesty, his scorn of all that was wrong or unworthy. He called him the noblest man of the age, the one who stood the longest in the history of the time. His farewell words were spoken amidst the profoundest hush. Another simple hymn was sung by the choir, and the services were ended. The chief characteristic was the absence of gloom. While it was sad, it was not sombre; there was nothing funeral about it: it was like a gathering of friends, met to give good-speed to one of their number who was about to go out from their midst on a journey, but there was no sense of loss. It was as one of the speakers said: he might be absent in the body, but he had left his spirit behind him. A large number of friends followed the body to its final home at Forest Hills; and just as the setting sun shot its rays across the open grave, all that remained of William Lloyd Garrison was lowered into the grave. There were no words spoken; the choir sang the hymn "God is love," and the services were over.

The Address of Wendell Phillips.

It has been well said and repeated, that we are not here to weep; and neither are we here to praise. No life closes without sadness. Death, after all, no matter what hope or usefulness surrounds it, is one terrible mystery. We never part hands that have been clasped life-long in loving tenderness that the hour is not sad; but we do not come here to weep. In other moments, under other roofs, we can clasp in tender and loving sympathy the hands whose roof-tree is so sadly bereaved. But in their wish, in the spirit of the great life which we contemplate, this hour is for the utterance of a lesson; this hour is given to contemplate a grand example, a rich inheritance, a noble life worthily ended. That is the reason that you come together, not to pay tribute, loving tribute merely, to the friend you have lost, whose features you will miss from daily life, but to remember the grand lesson of that career, to speak to each other, and to emphasize what that life teaches; to tell it in the hearing of those whose immature youth did not witness that untiring effort; in their hearing to construe the meaning of the great name which is borne world-wide, and tell them why, on both sides of the ocean, the news of his death is a matter of interest to every lover of his race. As my friend said, we have no right to be silent. Those of us who stood near him, even during a portion of his life, who witnessed the secret springs of his action, the consistent inward and outward essence of his life, have no right to be silent. The largest contribution that will ever be made by a single man's life to the knowledge of the working of our institutions will be the picture of his career. He sounded the depths of their weakness; he proved the ultimate strength of republican institutions; he gave us to know the perils that confronted us; he taught us to rally the strength that lies hid.

To my mind there are three peculiarly remarkable elements in this career: One is singular among great men. Out of his own unaided moral existence came the motive which consecrated himself to a great idea. It confronted him in very youth. We marvel at the words that my friend has quoted. Where were they uttered? By mature lips, on the Senate floor, by a man to whom the nation listened? Uttered by a stripling, twenty-three or twenty-four years old, in the very bloom of his youth! Other men ripen gradually. The youngest of the great names that will be compared with his was between thirty and forty when his first anti-slavery word was uttered. This man was in jail for his opinions when he was just twenty-three. He had confronted a nation in the very bloom of his youth. It could be said of him more than of any other American in our day, and more than of any other great leader that I chance now to remember in any epoch, that he did not need circumstances, outside influence, some great pregnant event, to press him into service, to provoke him into thought, to kindle him into enthusiasm. His moral nature is as marvellous as the intellect of Pascal. It seemed to be born fully equipped. When I think of the mere dates, when I think that at some twenty-five years old, while Christianity and statesmanship, the experience, the genius, of the land were wandering in the desert agitated, amazed, and confounded over a great evil, this boy sounded, found, invented the tallman, "Immediate, unconditional emancipation on the soil." You may say he borrowed it—true enough—from the lips of a woman on the other side of the Atlantic; but he was the only American, just on the edge of life, whose nature seemed so perfectly open to the truth that it answered to the far-off bugle note, and wrote it instantly as a guide to the people.

Young men, you have no conception of the miracle of the insight, for it is not given to you to remember with any vividness the blackness of the darkness of ignorance and indifference that brooded over what was called the moral element of the American people. When I think of him, as Melancthon said of Luther, "day by day grows the wonder fresh" at the largeness of the moral and intellectual life that God gave him at the very opening. Then you hear that boy's lips announcing the statesmanlike solution, written in words of light that absolutely blinded the people,—the great God-given solution of what had confounded the people, blinded the churches, and made statesmen dumb. With equal single-hearted devotion, in words that have been so often quoted, a few years afterward, with those dungeon doors behind him, he entered on his career. I marvel again at the instinctive sagacity. Archimedes said: "Give me something, and I will move the world." O'Connell leaned back on three millions of Irishmen, all aflame with sympathy. Cobden's hands were held up by the whole manufacturing interest of Great Britain; his hands were full of the wealth of the middle classes of the country, and behind him, in fair proportions, stood the religious convictions of England. Marvellous as was their agitation, as you gaze upon it in its successive stages and analyze it, you are astonished at what they invented for tools. And yet this boy stood alone, utterly alone, at first. There was no sympathy anywhere; his hands were empty. No matter if he starved on bread and water, he could command the use of types; that was all. Trade endeavored to crush him; the intellectual life of America disowned him.

My friend Weld has said the Church was one thick cloud looming over him in the darkness. Out of it thundered and lightened a malignity that could not find words to express its hate. At that moment, a boy, with neither training nor experience! Whence came that instinctive knowledge? Where did he get that sound common-sense? Whence did he summon that almost unerring sagacity which started agitation on an unknown field,—never committing an error, provoking year by year additional enthusiasm, gathering as he advanced helper after helper to his side? I marvel at the miraculous boy. You must remember that all these years it was an immature youth, who never had had training, any administrative experience, never had anything but ambition to launch him into the columns of the press. He had no means. Where he got, whence he summoned, how he created, the elements which changed 1824 into 1835, that even made America mob him in every great city, is a marvel which none but older men than I can adequately analyze and explain. He said to a friend who remonstrated with him on the energy of his utterances, "Look! I am surrounded and overwhelmed with icebergs. What language can I choose sufficiently hot to melt a single soul into sympathy?" Well, that dungeon of 1824, that universal apathy, that deadness of soul, that contempt of intellect, in ten years he changed into the whole country aflame. He made every single home, press, pulpit, and senate chamber a debating society, with his right and wrong for his subject. Fastened on that daily life was a malignant attention and criticism, such as no American has ever endured. I will not call it a criticism of hate; that is not strong enough. Malignity searched him with candles from the moment that he uttered that God-given solution of the problem to the moment when he took the hand of the nation and wrote out the statute that made it law. Malignity searched those forty years with candles, and yet it is on record that even that never lapsed a suspicion, much less a charge,—never lapsed a suspicion of anything mean, dishonorable, dishonest. No man, however mad with hate, however impetuous in assault, ever dared to hint that there could be a touch on his escutcheon, unutterably bright without a stain.

Now, if you will contemplate this boy entering the arena, confronting a nation and all its forces, utterly poor, with no sympathy from any quarter, conducting a wide-spread and profound agitation for ten, twenty, thirty years, amid the hate of everything strong in American life and the contempt otherwise of everything influential, and no stain, not the slightest shadow of one, rests on his escutcheon! Summon me the public men, the men who have put their hands to the helm of the vessel of State since 1789, and of whom can that be said, although love and admiration, that almost culminated in worship, attended the steps of some of them? Then look at the work he did. My friends have spoken of his influence. What American ever held his hand so long and so powerfully on the helm of social, intellectual, and moral America? There have been giants in our day. Great men God has granted in widely different spheres; earnest men, men whom public admiration lifted early into glad power. I shall venture to name some of them. Perhaps you will say it is not usual on an occasion like this; but long-waiting truth needs to be uttered in an hour when this great example is still absolutely indispensable to inspire the effort, to guide the motive, to cheer the hope of the nation not yet in the promised land. I want to show you the vast breadth and depth that this man's name signifies. We have had Webster in the Senate; we have had Lyman Beecher in the pulpit; we have had Calhoun at the head of a section; we have had a great philosopher at Concord, with his inspiration that penetrated the young mind of the Northern States. They are the four men that history perhaps will mention somewhere near the great force whose closing in this scene we commemorate to-day. And yet, if any one remembers, not the inadequate means merely at this man's control, not the bitter hate simply that he confronted, not the vast work that he must be allowed to have done, measured by the opposition he encountered and the strength he held in his hands, but dismissing all those considerations, measuring nothing but the breadth and depth of his hold, his grasp on American character, social change, general progress, what man's signet has been set so deep, planted so forever on the thoughts of his epoch? Trace home intelligently, trace home to their sources, the changes that have come over us in fifty years, social, political, intellectual, and religious, and you will find close at the sources of the Mississippi this boy with his proclamation!

The great party that put on record the statute of freedom was made up of the men whose conscience he quickened and whose intellect he inspired, and they stood so long the tools of a public opinion that he manufactured. The grandest name beside his in American history is that of John Brown. Brown stood on the platform that Garrison had built; and Mrs. Stowe herself charmed the audience that he gathered for her with words which he inspired, with a heart that he kindled. Sitting at his feet are the leaders born of the Liberator, who are the guides of public sentiment. I know whereof I affirm. It was a boast of Charles Sumner that he read the Liberator four years before I did; and, among the great men that followed his lead and held up his hands in Massachusetts, where is the intellect, where is the heart, that does not trace to this printer boy the first pulse that bid him serve the slave?

Well, he is only another instance, only one, added to the great roll of the Washingtons and the Hampdens, whose root is not ability, but character; that influence which, like the great Master's of Judea, spreading through the centuries, exhibits the great truth that the world suffers its grandest changes, not by genius, but by the more potent control of character. It was an earnestness that would take no denial, that consumed opposition in the intensity of its convictions, that knew nothing but right. As friend after friend gathered slowly, one by one, to his side, in that very meeting of a dozen it was his compelling hand, his utter unwillingness to temper or qualify the utterance that finally dedicated the first organized movement, the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society, to the doctrine of immediate emancipation. He seems to have understood,—that boy without experience,—he seems to have understood by instinct that righteousness is the only thing that will finally compel submission; that one is always a majority with God. He seems to have known it at the very outset, taught of God, the herald and champion, God-endowed and God-sent to arouse a nation.

And then look at the unquailing courage with which he faced the successive obstacles that confronted him! Modest, believing at the outset that America could not be as corrupt as she seemed to exhibit herself, he waits at the door of the churches, kneels to leading clergymen, beseeches a voice from the sanctuary, a consecrated protest from the pulpit. To his utter amazement, confounded, he learns, by probing it, that the Church can give him no help, but, on the contrary, surges into the movement in opposition. Serene, this boy in his youth and conviction, astounded, perhaps, by the unexpected revelation, simply turns his footsteps, and announces, "A Church, a Christianity, that keeps peace with the oppressor is no Christianity," and goes on his way to supplement the religious element which the Church had gotten into an alliance with sin by a deeper religious faith, by a grander Christian education. Sets himself to work, that solitary evangelist, to make Christians of fifteen millions of people!

I am not exaggerating. You know, older men, who can go back to that period, I know, that when one, kindred to a voice that you have heard to-day, whose pathway Garrison's bloody feet had made easier for his treading, in the few years that preceded his coalition, when he uttered in a pulpit in Boston a few strong words, injected in the course of a sermon, his venerable father, between seventy and eighty years, was met the next morning and his hand shaken by a sympathizing friend. "Colonel, you have my sympathy. I cannot tell you how much I pity you." "What," said the brusque old man, "what is your pity?" "Well, I hear your son went crazy at King's Chapel yesterday." Such was the utter indifference. Bloody steps had then smoothed the pathway for years for other men to tread; but insanity was the only kind-hearted excuse that partial friends could find for sympathy with such a madman!

Well, if anything strikes one more prominently than another in this career, to your astonishment, younger men, you may say, it is the plain, sober, un-mixed common-sense, the robust English element which underlies Cromwell, which explains Hampden, which gives the color that distinguishes 1640 in England from 1790 in France,—plain, robust, well-balanced common-sense. No erratic mistake; no enthusiasm that got beyond the feeling of earth, rising unsupported in the air; no mistake of method; no miscalculation of time; no unmeasured confidence in forces; no miscalculation of opposition. Whoever mistook, Garrison seldom mistook. Fewer mistakes in that long agitation of fifty years can be charged to his account than to any American. Erratic as men supposed him, intemperate in utterance, mad in judgment, an enthusiast gone crazy,—the moment you sat down at his side, patient in explanation, clear in statement, sound in judgment, measuring carefully every step, calculating every assault, measuring the force to meet it, never anticipating events, always patient, waiting until the time ripened. Fit for a great leader. Cull, if you please, from the statesmen who obeyed him, whom he either whipped into submission or summoned into existence,—cull from among them the man whose career, fairly examined, exhibits fewer miscalculations and fewer mistakes than that career which is just ended!

I know what I claim. As Mr. Weld has said, I am speaking to-day to men that judge by their ears, by the reports heard, by the rumors that they have gathered. History, fifty years hence, dispelling your prejudices, will do justice to the grand sweep of the orbit which, as my friend said, to-day we are hardly in a condition to measure. As Coleridge avers: "The true haters of to-morrow will give the right name to the true haters of to-day, for even such men the stream of time bears onward." I do not fear that if my words are remembered by the next generation they will be thought unsupported or extravagant. When history touches the sources of New England character and Northern life, when men begin to open up and examine the hidden springs that make the foundation and have effected the changes in American life within the last half-century, they will remember Parker, that Jupiter of the pulpit; they will remember the grand, potent, unmeasured influence that came to us from the seclusion of Concord; they will do justice to the mastery statesmanship which presided for a part of his life over the effort of Webster; but they will recognize that there was only one man north of Mason and Dixon's line who met squarely, with an absolute logic, the impregnable position of John C. Calhoun, only one brave, far-sighted, keen, logical intellect that discerned that there were two moral tools in the universe, right and wrong; that when one was asserted, intellectual subterfuge and evasion would be sure to confront nothing but defeat.

Here lie the brain and the heart; here lies the godly-gifted, statesmanlike intellect, logical as Jonathan Edwards, brave as Luther, who confronted the logic of South Carolina with an assertion direct and broad enough to make an issue and necessitate a conflict of two civilizations. It is true, as New Orleans complains to-day in her journals, that that man brought upon America everything that can be called the disaster of the last twenty years; and it is equally true that if you seek through the hidden causes and unheeded events for the hand that wrote EMANCIPATION on the statute book and on the flag, it lies still there to-day.

I dare not enter that home. There is only one other marked, and, as it seems to me, unprecedented, element in this catalogue of qualities. His was the happiest life that I ever witnessed. No need for pity. There need no tear fall over his life. No man gathered into his bosom a fuller sheaf of blessing, delight, and joy. In his seventy years, there were not arrows enough in the whole quiver of the Church or State to wound him. As Guizot said once from the heights of the tribune, "Gentlemen, you cannot get high enough to reach the level of my content," so Garrison, from the serene level of his daily life, from the faith that never faltered, was able to say to American hate, "You cannot reach up to the level that can affect my home mood, my daily existence." I have seen him intimately for a score of years, when raining on his head was the hate of the community, when in every possible form of expression malignity let him know that it wished him all sorts of harm. I never saw him unhappy; I never saw the hour that gloom poisoned his existence; I never saw the moment that serene, overflowing, abounding faith in the rectitude of his motive, in the certainty of his success, did not lift him above all possibility of being reached by any of the clamor about him. I stand here to affirm what I think every friend of his intimate life will say, This is the happiest life that God has granted in our day to any American standing in the foremost rank of men of influence and effort. He had a perpetual flow of genial sympathy that could hold up the weak, champion the most dismal of causes, cover with its regard the helpless, the wrecked by intemperance, the hunted whose heart trembled at every lift of the latch, and you could have his heart melt and be poured out like water with sympathy for such a victim; and yet there was enough left over for the serene gratitude to God for a life that no opposition could darken, for a treasure of strength and sympathy so inexhaustible that although it never shut the door, nor refused the lifting of the hand, nor failed to empty out, more lavishly than prudence would dictate, the means, never reached the point where he himself in his daily mood was cloudy. God held over him in full sight unclouded the sunlight of his countenance.

Serene, brave, all-accomplished, marvellous man! I sit down to contemplate the make-up of his qualities. I remember he was mortal; and yet where shall we find one among those waging earnest, unceasing effort to quell sin, to reform error, to enlighten darkness, to bind up broken hearts, his equal?

Farewell for a very little while, noblest of Christian men! Leader, brave, tireless, unselfish! The ear that heard thee, it blessed thee; the eye that saw thee gave witness to thee. More truly than it could be uttered since the great patriarch wrote it, the blessing of Him that was ready to perish was thine eternal great reward.

Though the clouds rest for a moment to-day on the great work you set your heart to accomplish, you knew, God in his love let you see, without a mistake, that your work was done; that through clouds and darkness one thing, by the favor under God of thy efforts, is fixed beyond the possibility, as men would say, of change. While that eye was open, while that ear could listen, God gave what has been so rarely given to man, the plaudits and prayers of five millions of victims, thanking him for emancipation; and through the clouds of to-day, no matter how dark nor how heavy, his heart, as it ceased to beat, felt certain, certain, that whether one flag or two rules this continent in time to come, one thing is settled,—it never henceforth can be trodden by a slave!

Address of Mrs. Lucy Stone.

This day brings us together to aid in the last rites which devolve on those who bury their dead. One looking from the outside might say:—

"The sequel of to-day unsolders all
The goodliest fellowship of famous knights,
Whereof this world holds record. Such a sleep
They sleep,—the men I loved. I think that we Shall never more at any future time
Delight our souls with talk of knightly deeds."

But the personal sorrow and sense of loss which the close of this illustrious life carries to a circle large on both sides of the ocean almost pass out of sight in the presence of its long record of noblest living. Instinctively a shout of joy leaps to our lips as we remember how loyally he stood at his post threescore years and ten, and how straight his footsteps always followed the clear line of duty. How in circumstances of trial, such as rarely fell to mortal lot, his courage never faltered, and his faith never wavered. With a sublime trust that what is right has the eternal forces behind it and must succeed, he bent every power, without a doubt and without a fear, to uproot the greatest crime of the age, unmoved by mobs, or by threats, or by entreaties; and he lived to see the triumph of his life-work. In the thickest of the fight he had always a hand and a word for any other cause that he believed was true,—peace, temperance, woman's rights. For this last he stood a tower of strength to its small beginning. To its few solitary workers he said: "You have nothing to fear. No beginning was ever so small and feeble as that of anti-slavery. Behold how the whole nation is stirred on account of it!"

Mrs. Stone then referred to Mr. Garrison's faithfulness to his convictions, when, in 1840, he refused to sit as a delegate to the world's convention at London because Lucretia Mott, who had been sent as a delegate, was refused a seat on the floor because of her sex. "It seems to me," said Mrs. Stone, "that instead of sorrow we ought to rejoice that this example is left to us, and that in the full possession of his powers he has laid down his body, which had become one of pain and suffering to him, and gone on."

Address of Rev. Samuel Johnson.

The silence of this crowded presence is too full of meaning to be interpreted in words. A voice for half a century the inspiration of a nation's struggle for existence is forever stilled. This great career has shown the power of personality, that one is greater than a multitude, the soul master of the State, and in this fact is our strongest assurance of immortality. Here is one whose conscience was a landmark to his country, summoning it in its degenerate days to a self-reformation deemed impossible, a task more noble than the struggle for independence; a conscience whose logic kept its place against the fallacies these fifty years have bred, and made the emancipation of the slaves one with the emancipation of culture and conscience; a conscience taking its rise in love, love nourishing his conscience and his conscience illuminating his love. The burden of his prophecy was pity for the oppressed and the logic of retribution against men and nations that sow iniquity.

To how very few has it been given in the past to enshrine their obsequies in the blessings of an emancipated race! From beyond the seas, from cottage and court, are the witnesses of this man's heroism. From the race for whom he spent his life, who are still in the wilderness, whose hearts yet quake in view of new perils resulting from our half-policies, there is yet to come the tribute that only a portion can render now to the man who is more worthy of their homage than any later parties, statesmen, or proclamations, when justice was extorted from an unwilling people by forces they could not resist. I cannot grant that our friend's departure closes an epoch of national history. Not so suddenly shall we escape unfinished tasks, nor dismiss the much-needed ideas or the men who represented them. We are not to expect fresh inspiration before we have learned to honor what is already given. A nation's growth is by stages, but principles hold fast till they have shaped it to their law.

We are here also to speak to private hearts, to a sense of personal bereavement, and we can do naught but bring full sheaves of sympathy to those that mourn. We recall his simple faith and unfaltering trust that suffered him not to weaken in the darkest hour. Our fairest households must be scattered, but to know and be known by participation in that which outlives lifetimes, policies, and institutions, and holds men responsible to their best, is what has always been believed to have conquered death.

A Poetical Tribute of Mr. Whittier.

The poetical tribute of Mr. John G. Whittier to his departed friend was as follows:—

The storm and peril overpast,
The bounding hatred shamed and still,
Go, Soul of Freedom! take at last
The place which thou alone canst fill.
Go up and on! thy day well done,
Thy morning promise well fulfilled;
Arise to triumph yet unwon,
To holier tasks that God has willed.
Go leave behind thee all that mars
The work below of man for man;
With the white legions of the stars
Do service such as angels can.
Wherever wrong shall right deny,
Or suffering spirits urge their plea,
Be thine a voice to smite the lie,
A hand to set the captive free.

—Boston Advertiser, May 29.

DEATH OF GARRISON.

DEATH OF THE PHILANTHROPIST.—PEACEFUL END OF A PAINFUL SICKNESS.—A DEATH-BED SURROUNDED BY SONS AND DAUGHTER.

William Lloyd Garrison died at the Westmoreland House a little before 11 o'clock on Saturday night, after twenty-four hours of total unconsciousness. He was surrounded during his last hours by his five children and a daughter-in-law, the wife of William Lloyd Garrison, Jr., all of whom had been with him since Wednesday morning. Mr. Garrison had been suffering greatly for the past year from disease of the kidneys, which a few months ago caused great nervous depression; and on April 28 he came to this city, urged by his daughter, Mrs. Henry Villard, who hoped he could be permanently benefited by Dr. Leonard Weber. For a few days after his arrival he seemed improved in health; but about a week ago he became prostrated and suffered great pain. His sufferings were soon relieved, but he did not rally, and on Wednesday all hopes of his recovery were abandoned. He remained conscious for two days longer, and was able to talk, though his words were faint and indistinct.

The absent members of his family had been sent for, and all were with him except Mr. Villard, who is in Oregon; and he seemed greatly to enjoy their presence. He said to one of his sons that he was happy at the prospect of a speedy release from his sufferings. During the last few days of his life, many old friends called upon him, and some were admitted to his bedside. Among the last who called upon him during his hours of consciousness were Thurlow Weed, Oliver Johnson, President Barnard, and Kenyon Cox, who saw him on Friday. On that evening he seemed rapidly growing weaker, and it was evident that the end was not far distant. Soon after 8 o'clock his children stood about his bed, singing some of the old hymns which had been familiar to him in his youthful days, and which he and their mother had sung to them when children,—“Amsterdam,” “Hebron,” and others. The dying man had then lost the power of speech; but he smiled happily, as he heard the familiar notes and words, and beat time feebly with his hands, at the same time moving his feet. He seemed specially pleased when the words of “Amsterdam” were sung: “Arise my soul and spread thy wings, thy better portion trace.” Gradually his motions became fainter and fainter, and he sank into a stupor from which it was not apparent that he awoke for a moment before he passed away.—N. Y. Tribune, May 28.

Oliver Johnson's Letter.

A LETTER FROM OLIVER JOHNSON.—THE EARLY DAYS IN BOSTON.—MAKING FIRST CONVERTS.—THE LONG STRUGGLE AGAINST SLAVERY, AND THE SORT OF MAN GARRISON WAS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRIBUNE:

Sir,—This is not the same world to me to-day that it was yesterday, nor can it ever be the same again. The death of my beloved and revered friend, William Lloyd Garrison, makes a void in my heart that cannot be filled until we meet in the life beyond the veil. I have seen few happier days than that which first brought me face to face with my hero, and I found in him the complete fulfilment of my anticipations and hopes. That was in Boston, in the autumn of 1830, shortly after his release from imprisonment in Baltimore, and just before he began the publication of the Liberator. He was then twenty-five years of age, his face full of manly beauty, his heart all aflame for liberty, his manner dignified and most impressive. Upon his knees, in all the fervor of ingenuous youth, with his Bible open before him, he had solemnly consecrated himself to the task of delivering the slaves from their bondage, and his country from her greatest crime and curse. The consciousness of a purpose so high, undertaken in humble dependence upon God and from an intense sympathy with an oppressed and outlawed race, gave him something of the majesty of a prophet, which men of a kindred spirit were quick to discern and could never forget.

He cherished the deepest reverence for the clergy and the churches, and looked confidently to them to take the lead in the work of emancipation. He visited the leading ministers of Boston and vicinity, explained to them his plans, and besought their aid. Almost without exception he was coldly received, in some instances rudely repulsed. Dr. Beecher, then in the height of his popularity, ridiculed the idea of emancipation unaccompanied by the colonization of the blacks. “Young man,” he said, “I commend your zeal, and if you will go with us [the clergy] for sending the negroes to Africa, we will make you the Wilberforce of America. But if you go on advocating the mad idea of immediate emancipation you will come to naught.”

Garrison's Lectures in 1830.

Mr. Garrison was bitterly disappointed by this repulse in the quarter whence he had confidently expected sympathy and aid; but it only served to strengthen his determination to obtain a public hearing in Boston. The churches having refused to open their doors to him, he accepted from the infidels of the city the use of Julien Hall for the delivery of a course of lectures on slavery and African colonization. His audiences were small, but they embraced some men of influence and note. How well do I remember those lectures, and the appearance of the speaker as he stood before his audience with his eyes fixed upon his manuscript, his voice tremulous with emotion! He awed and thrilled me by his earnestness, and my heart was drawn to him in closest sympathy. The late Rev. Samuel J. May was so moved that he turned to those around him at the close of the lectures and said: “That is a Providential man; he is our prophet; he will shake our nation to its centre, but he will shake slavery out of it.” He won to his cause then, not only Mr. May, but others who, like him, were ever faithful to the cause. Among these were A. Bronson Alcott (the Concord philosopher and sage), Samuel E. Sewall, and the late Ellis Gray Loring.

I was in almost daily intercourse with Mr. Garrison from the fall of 1830 to the spring of 1833, when he went to England for the first time, and I assumed the editorship of the Liberator during his absence. The memory of his privations, of his courage in time of danger, of his cheerfulness in the midst of discouragement, of his patience under misrepresentation, of his willingness to suffer the loss of all things for the sake of his cause, and of his assured conviction of the ultimate success of his efforts, can never be obliterated, but will grow brighter with the lapse of time. For at least a year and a half he and his partner (Mr. Isaac Knapp) were compelled by poverty to make their bed at night on the floor in the printing office which Harrison Gray Otis, Mayor of Boston, in a letter to the Mayor of Savannah (I believe), called “an obscure hole,” and to subsist on bread and milk, cakes, fruit, etc., obtained from a neighboring baker's shop. But they murmured not, nor were they for one moment discouraged. Many a time in visiting their office did I find them partaking of their humble repast, which they seasoned with laughter, song, and cheerful talk. A friendly cat cheered their loneliness and protected them from the depredations of mice. Mr. Garrison was fond of his feline companion, and I remember seeing her more than once mounted upon his writing-table and caressing his bald forehead in the most affectionate way, while he was spinning editorial yarn. Many times, too, did I see Mr. Garrison and his partner busy at type-setting or in working off their paper on a hand-press, “their only visible auxiliary a negro boy.”

Violent Threats from the South.

In those days Mr. Garrison was in the constant receipt of anonymous letters from the South (postage unpaid, but kindly remitted by the Democratic postmaster of Boston), threatening him with a violent death if he did not at once cease the publication of his paper. Many of these letters, some of them filled with profanity and illustrated by pictures of coffins, or of men dangling from a gallows with ropes about their necks, were submitted to my inspection; but though they filled me with terrible apprehensions of the danger he incurred, he was himself apparently unmoved by them. His friends often besought him, especially while lodging every night in a printing-office distant from any dwelling, and easily accessible to men of violence, to arm himself for his own protection; but he held himself bound by the precepts as well as the example of Christ to forego the use of carnal weapons. If he could have spoken to the slaves, he would have admonished them to commit no violence, but to wait patiently for their deliverance by—

“The mild arms of Truth and Love,
Made mighty through the living God.”

If these weapons in his hands were not always as mild as they might have been, and as many thought they should be, they at least carried no poisoned barbs. Though he saw with marvellous clearness the sin of making merchandise of men, and described it in fitting terms for exactly what it was, he was always charitable toward individual transgressors, and willing to make every reasonable allowance for extenuating circumstances and the stress of temptation. Contemplating slavery as a system, his mind and heart were deeply stirred by a remembrance of its horrors, and he poured upon it unmeasured denunciation; but if he met an individual slaveholder he was sparing of invective, though weighty and convincing in argument. On one occasion, when returning from an anti-slavery convention in Philadelphia, he fell into conversation on board the steamer with a slaveholder. The whole subject of slavery was discussed between them, Mr. Garrison keeping perfectly cool, but plying the stranger with convincing logic and strong appeals to conscience. Mr. Garrison retired at length, and a by-stander of less discretion, resuming the argument on the anti-slavery side, waxed hot and denunciatory; when the slaveholder said: “Why do you not talk coolly and candidly as that other gentleman did? It is a pleasure to discuss the question with a reasonable man like him, but you are as fierce and unreasonable as Garrison himself.” “Did you ever see Garrison?” inquired the interlocutor of the slaveholder. “No, but I have read his paper and know him to be a wild fanatic.” “Let me tell you, then, that it was William Lloyd Garrison with whom we were talking just now, and who, you say, was so candid and sweet-tempered.” The slaveholder would not believe it till he was convinced of the truth by the captain of the steamer, who assured him that he had indeed been conversing with the fanatical editor of the Liberator, and had commended him for his “sweet reasonableness” in discussion.

His Power as a Speaker.

And this leads me to say that the personal presence of Mr. Garrison always disarmed prejudice, however violent, and he never failed to win the respect and admiration of all who looked into his face and heard him plead his cause. His intense but calm earnestness, his constant identification of himself, in thought, principle, and feeling, with “those in bonds as bound with them,” the clear moral insight that enabled him to comprehend principles and penetrate every disguise of sophistry and false pretence, and his strong appeals to reason and conscience, gave him great power over men, both in public speech and private intercourse. If he used strong epithets, they were never stronger than the argument warranted, and he made everybody feel that he spoke, not from passion, but from deep conviction.

During the first few years of his career he could hardly be persuaded to trust himself to make an extemporaneous speech; every word must be written, every comma in its place. He wearied at length of all this labor, and, finding much to say, resolved no longer to be a slave to his pen. This act of self-emancipation added much to his power, and he became, as is well-known, a most effective extemporaneous speaker, the peer of any other man on the anti-slavery platform, where, as Emerson used to say, eloquence was dog-cheap. If he lacked the resources which a classical culture alone can furnish, he possessed others of the very highest importance, and which such a culture often fails to supply. If he did not please the imagination or tickle the fancy of his hearers, he did what was better: he enlightened their minds, stirred their consciences, and swayed their judgments. The cause in his hands was never put to shame by any hasty or ill-considered word. In dealing with opponents, his tact and skill were unerring. Thoughtful people especially heard him with delight, and the largest audiences felt the power of his logic and the magnetism of his voice and presence.

There was about him no taint of self-seeking, no assumption of the honors of leadership. In all my intercourse with him, extending over a period of more than forty years, I never heard him utter a word implying a consciousness that he was a leader in the cause, or that he had done or achieved anything worthy of praise. He was unfeignedly modest, with not a touch of affected humility. He had the highest appreciation of the services of others, and loved to do them honor, whether they worked by his methods or not. He held that the Constitution of the United States, by virtue of its compromises with the slave system, was an unholy compact, from which the North was morally bound to release herself; but he had the highest respect for men who differed from him on this subject, and was always glad to give them credit for anti-slavery work. With such men as Wilson, Sumner, Parker, and others like them, who found a way to reconcile their consciences to the support of the Constitution, he was on terms of the closest intimacy, commending them constantly for their vigorous assaults upon the slave power. And on their part they had the utmost respect for his scruples, and often confessed that he was doing a grand work in exposing the guilt of those who made the Constitution the bulwark of slavery. His estimate, moreover, of the debasing character of the compromises of the Constitution was vindicated in the fact that the people were compelled to purge the instrument of this foul taint as the condition of a restored Union. The old Union with slaveholders, which Mr. Garrison denounced, was superseded by a new Union, in which there is neither a master nor a slave.

Self-Abnegation—Religion.

In matters pertaining to the anti-slavery cause Mr. Garrison never mistook a molehill for a mountain, never fought a battle save upon a vital issue. If he wrote a document for which others as well as himself were to be responsible, he would allow them to criticize, and even to pick it all to pieces if they chose, content if no principle was dishonored. If his tone was sometimes imperious, it was not from any assumption of superiority in himself, still less from any desire to win a personal victory, but solely from the depth and earnestness of his moral convictions, which were ever overmastering. He thought little of himself, everything of the cause. Few abolitionists believed so completely as he did in the perfect humanity of the negro. He was absolutely free from what is known as the prejudice of color. He would have contended no more earnestly for emancipation if every slave in the land had been as white as himself. The negro in his presence was pained by no assumption of superiority, no sense of being patronized as an inferior. "A man's a man for a' that" expressed his inmost conviction and feeling. When he was in England in 1833, he called upon Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton. As that gentleman advanced to greet him, he lifted up his arms and exclaimed, "Why, Mr. Garrison! are you a white man? I thought from your writings you must be a negro. No other white man ever advocated the negro's cause as you do." Mr. Garrison used to say that of all the compliments he ever received this pleased him most.

In the beginning, Mr. Garrison was strictly Orthodox in his religious faith. His mother, a Baptist, was a woman of exalted worth and devoted piety, and from her he probably inherited those moral qualities which fitted him for his work. His love and reverence for her were such that he could never speak of her without deep emotion. It was not long after the organization of the anti-slavery movement that his religious views began to change. This was probably the effect, in part, of his intercourse with Quakers and others, who won his admiration by their devotion to the anti-slavery cause. His loss of confidence in the churches on account of their attitude upon the slavery question doubtless made it all the easier for him to discard systems of theology which he had accepted by inheritance rather than conviction. But no change ever disturbed his faith in God or his reverence for Christ, or made him less responsive to the will of God, as he understood it. Though he discarded the doctrine of verbal inspiration, the Bible was to him the grandest and best of books. It was his vade-mecum at all times. No minister ever studied it more carefully, or was more familiar with its parts, or able to quote it more appositely. The great moral and spiritual truths that glow upon its pages, which are the natural and necessary food of the soul, and that authenticate themselves to the mind and conscience of man, he accepted with all his heart. He was preeminently a religious man, judging every question by the highest and purest ethical standards. Jesus was to him the Prince of Emancipation as well as the Prince of Peace. He always insisted that the clerical apologists and defenders of slavery were false to the principles and spirit of Christianity, and for this they called him an infidel.

Private Life and Last Hours.

Of Mr. Garrison's private, domestic, and social life I hardly dare trust myself to speak. A man of more spotless moral excellence in every relation of life I have never known. As a husband, father, and friend he was indeed a model, and his home was ever the abode of love and peace. His wife, the youngest daughter of the late Mr. George Benson, of Brooklyn, Conn., was a noble woman and a true helpmate. Mr. Garrison's devotion, as a husband and father, was one of his most beautiful characteristics. He never made his public relations an excuse for neglecting his family. Did one of the children cry in the night, it was in his arms that it was caressed and comforted. In every possible way, in the care of the children and in all household matters, he sought to lighten the cares of his wife, taking upon himself burdens which most husbands and fathers shun. In short, he made his home a heaven, into which it was a delight to enter. He was never so happy as when surrounded by his wife and children and a few favored guests. Under such circumstances he was at his best,—happy as a bird, genial, witty, and full of a generous hospitality. His reverence for woman was strong, and no one ever heard from his lips a word or a sentiment that could bring a blush to her cheek. He had a tender regard for the feelings of others, and was always thoughtful for their comfort and convenience. He was kind even to the bores that haunted his office and house, consuming his precious time by their idle discourse. To the poor and the unfortunate his heart and his purse were ever open. As a guest in other homes, he was a great favorite. Children were drawn to him by an irresistible attraction. His conversation, though generally serious, often sparkled with wit and fun. In how many families will his name be spoken to-day with a tender, tearful reverence, while the memory of his gracious presence as a guest will be fondly cherished and proudly transmitted to their descendants!

Mr. Garrison's wife died several years ago. Two of his children—a son and a daughter—died in infancy. The others, five in number, four sons and one daughter, were all permitted to minister to his latest wants. He recognized them all, and was greatly comforted by their presence. One evening while he was yet conscious, though unable to speak, they gathered around his bed and sang his favorite hymns and tunes.

The voices of his children, as they sang these and others of his favorite pieces, evidently gave him great delight. He was himself too weak to sing, but showed his appreciation by beating time with his hands and feet in a spirited manner. He became unconscious immediately after this, though he lived several hours longer. He was not afraid to die, having no doubt whatever that another and a better life awaited him beyond the grave.

The names of Mr. Garrison's children, in the order of their birth, are as follows: George Thompson, William Lloyd, Wendell Phillips, Fanny (wife of Mr. Henry Villard, at whose house the father died), and Francis Jackson. It is to be hoped that one of the sons will write the life of his father, for which the materials must be abundant. Massachusetts will some day honor herself by erecting a monument to his memory. But the best of all mementoes of his noble life are the broken fetters of four millions of slaves!

OLIVER JOHNSON.

No. 128 EAST TWELFTH STREET,
NEW YORK, May 25, 1879.

GARRISON'S FLIGHT FOR LIFE.

AN EXCITING EPISODE RECALLED.—HIS ESCAPE ON THE NIGHT OF THE PENNSYLVANIA HALL RIOT IN PHILADELPHIA IN 1838.—A MIDNIGHT RIDE TO JERSEY SOIL.—HIS PERSONAL BRAVERY.

Perhaps the most exciting experience Mr. Garrison ever had in this city, says the Philadelphia Times, was that attendant to his escape on the night of the Pennsylvania Hall riot (1838). Shortly before that time, the Legislature of the State of Georgia had enacted a law authorizing the payment of $5000 for the head of Mr. Garrison, the object being understood to be to incite some one to take his life. By the way, it may be mentioned that the law is still on the statute-books of the State, and never has been repealed. Whether any sordid feelings animated the riot or not, it is impossible, of course, to say; but there is scarcely any doubt that some of the people engaged in it had that $5000 in their mind, and there is no doubt whatever that Mr. Garrison was the principal object of the attack.

Fortunately he was not recognized at the hall. He stood face to face with a man who breathed threats and profanity against the abolitionist, smiled at him, and called him a foolish enthusiast. Had there been an identification, Mr. Garrison would have swung from a lamp-post as certain as fate. His friends were much frightened for his safety, and under the pilotage of a little negro-boy he was led by back streets and obscure alleys to Twelfth and Race, and, subsequently, by Broad Street to Lombard, and thence to Forten's house. When once he was in, the streets were guarded in different directions, in order that if the mob got on to the trail he could escape. Then preparations were made for a hasty midnight ride. Railroads were not of those days, and stage-coaches were used for travelling. But stages were not for Mr. Garrison. He was a marked man. Everybody's hand seemed to be against him, even as his was against slavery. He dare not travel by stage, for it would have been putting his life in the hands of people who wanted it very much indeed. Hastily James Forten ordered his horse hitched up, and calling to him his son, Robert Forten, and Robert Purvis, who afterwards became his son-in-law, he said: "You have four hours to drive Mr. Garrison to Trenton. Start at once." It was in vain that the great abolitionist protested that he would not steal away so like a thief. His friends had measured the depth of hatred that was entertained for him, and knew better than he that the danger was imminent. It was only by threats that he was finally induced to step into the carriage. Robert Forten seized the reins, a hasty "God bless you, good-bye," and the carriage disappeared around the corner, turning northward. Ten minutes later Mr. Garrison, leaning out to look at a crowd on the corner, heard a man abuse him with oaths and appellatives the reverse of complimentary.

He leaned out further and called the man to him. "Do you know Mr. Garrison?" he asked. "No, I never saw the —." "Well," said the abolitionist, courting danger by making himself prominent on the street, "are you not ashamed to abuse so much a man you don't know?"

The carriage drove on. Mr. Garrison looked at the faces of his colored escort, and broke out in loud laughter. They were so much affected that the pallor of fear came on to the black faces, and could be seen there. Half an hour more the city was behind, and the sturdy little horse was throwing the dust behind and moving at a four-minute gait, dragging the buggy with the three men it contained. Before they left the city, Mr. Forten called Robert aside and admonished him to push on for dear life and reach Trenton as early as possible. The lad obeyed the instructions to the letter. They heard the midnight bell striking as they dashed through Bristol, leaving behind the echoes of the horse's hoofs and the rolling of the carriage-wheels. The night-coach to New York was caught up with and passed so fast that the guard is understood to have always afterward believed in ghosts. The clock struck one as the editor of the Liberator set his foot on Jersey soil, in the streets of Trenton; the sturdy little horse had made the distance, thirty miles, and drawn three persons, in three hours. It was not until the next day that the howling mob found it had been cheated of its prey; and they took characteristic revenge, making the negroes the object of their wrath.

THE COLORED MEN'S TRIBUTE TO GARRISON.

A LARGE MEETING OF COLORED CITIZENS.—RESOLUTIONS PASSED ON THE DEATH OF THE GREAT ABOLITIONIST.

A meeting of the colored people was held last night in the Baptist Church on Phillips Street to pass resolutions on the death of William Lloyd Garrison. Mr. Lewis Hayden was chosen Chairman, and Messrs. J. H. Wolf and E. G. Biddle Secretaries, of the meeting. After a short prefatory address by the Chairman, the following resolutions were offered and accepted:—

WHEREAS, we are called upon to-night to consider the mercy and goodness of the Almighty God who has permitted one so long our beloved leader in the cause of humanity to view the promised land, and to enter and dwell therein before calling him to his reward above; in this our affliction we bow reverently to the will of God, who placed him among us; a man closely wrought in his image, and who knew instinctively what was wrong, and who fought it with all the weapons at his command, never flinching in the thickest of the fight, nor halting when deserted by weaker hearts; a man who from his nature early espoused the cause of human liberty, seeing in that cause the highest good, and so working and directing all his energies toward that goal where lay the utter destruction of the pernicious and dreadful system of human slavery, whose roots were so deeply intertwined with those of the national life that the breaking of one almost brought about the destruction of the other; one who by his fearlessness and sincerity of purpose caused himself to be hated by all, not even excepting the clergy, but who still stood up in all the grandeur of true manhood and uttered those noble words: "I am in earnest. I will not equivocate, I will not excuse, I will not retreat a single inch, and I will be heard." One whose life, for purity of motives, for integrity of purpose, for boldness in the execution of plans, is not surpassed by that of any other American, and will stand forever as the model for great and good men.

Resolved, That we shall never forget, and will teach our children gratefully to remember, the sagacity, whole-souled devotion, courage, tireless perseverance, the energy and unflinching zeal, to which, under God, the black man owes his liberty.

Resolved, That we respectfully offer to the family of our great apostle and champion our tenderest sympathy, and assure them that no American can cherish with more profound gratitude than we do the illustrious name which is their great inheritance.

Resolved, That we rejoice with proud satisfaction in the memory that his last words were uttered in our defence, and his last thoughts given to the great uprising South, which shows at once the colored man's fitness for citizenship, and "his first emphatic use of that liberty which Garrison achieved for them."

After the resolutions were passed, speeches paying high tribute to the memory of Mr. Garrison were made by Dr. W. Wells Brown, Mr. George L. Ruffin, Mr. Robert Morris and others.—Advertiser, May 27.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 7.

Miss A. Seeger, $1.60; D. T. Herriott, $6; Rev. George Batchelor, $3.20; Wiley Britton, $1; Jos. S. Hill, $5; E. W. Selgman, $3.20; W. A. Smith, 10 cents; Mrs. L. Butler, $4; Ellen J. Barker, $3.54; Mrs. Jane Sisson, $1.50; Dr. A. A. Bell, $5; Charles Haskell, $3.20; Mrs. F. W. Titus, $3; W. H. Wells, 10 cents; W. W. Wilcox, 10 cents; Dr. L. P. Babb, 25 cents; Charles Goodspeed, $2.50; F. C. Leavitt, $2.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 12, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FAWCETT, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SURUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases; i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

EDITORIAL NOTICE.

About the middle of June I shall be obliged to sail for the Azores, in order to accompany an invalid member of my family, and shall probably be absent three months. During that time my friend, Mr. David H. Clark, will edit THE INDEX. All literary communications should be addressed to him, and all business letters to Mr. H. P. Hyde, at this office. Letters addressed to me personally must remain unopened till my return. Attention to these directions will save annoyance to correspondents.

F. E. ABBOT.

June 3, 1879.

[The following editorial article was originally published in THE INDEX of March 25, 1875. As the duty of attending the Annual Meeting of the Index Association calls us to Toledo for about a week, we improve the opportunity to republish this paper here; and we venture to solicit for it special attention at this time, showing as it does that the views it expresses were carefully matured more than four years ago and are by no means the result of later events.—ED.]

PRIVATE JUDGMENT AND UNIVERSAL REASON.

"Justification by faith" and the "right of private judgment" were the two great principles of the Protestant Reformation. "Justification by faith" was derived from Christianity, and (in the famous formula of Chillingworth) made "the Bible, and the Bible only, the religion of Protestants"; while the "right of private judgment" was derived from the self-assertion of human intellect, but was restricted in its exercise to the mere interpretation of the Bible. These two principles were in reality incongruous, and capable only of an historical, not a logical, combination, since the restriction of private judgment to Bible-interpretation was arbitrary and irrational. Protestantism, therefore, being a mere transition from Christianity in its completeness to Free Religion in its completeness, and uniting as it did the conflicting characteristics of each, has been necessarily at war with itself from the start; it was only a half-protest, which must either be suppressed or extended. As might have been expected, with this internal inconsistency it has developed two opposing tendencies, one forward towards rationalism pure and simple, the other backward through ritualism and kindred reactions towards Rome. The endless schisms and sub-schisms which have marked its history from the time of Luther to the present day were only the natural and necessary expression of this inherent logical weakness. The spirit of protest burst the arbitrary bonds of bibliolatry, while the spirit of Christianity shrank back aghast at the havoc that was made. But the general current of the great Protestant movement has been sweeping the modern mind farther and farther from its old Christian moorings; the powerful influences of science and commerce, of industry and democracy, have not only reinforced the predominant tendencies of Protestantism, but also operated upon Catholic Christianity to sap the very foundations of its dominion even over its own adherents. In spite of the most desperate resistance, Free Religion is winning the battle, and its victory is only a question of time. We are living in a period which is pregnant with infinitely profounder changes than the age of Constantine. Christianity is dying to-day as Paganism was dying then; and the world will inherit a blessing far more precious than that which it has lauded so long.

Now the prepotent rationalistic tendency of Protestantism which grew out of its "right of private judgment" has its logical ultimate in absolute Individualism, though nothing absolute ever gets expressed historically in any absolute form. It is perfectly fair to judge a principle by its remote consequences, though this course does not seem fair to those who would limit its proper extent by the actual extent to which they themselves carry it. To what does the "right of private judgment" conduct us, when emancipated from the confinement to mere Bible-interpretation by which it was originally restricted? Simply to this conclusion: that the individual thinker has no criterion of truth outside the action of his own individual mind—that he has no objective standard by which to correct the errors arising out of his own mental idiosyncrasies, his deficiencies of knowledge, his biases of prejudice, his inequalities of general development, his peculiarities in point of circumstance, situation, or education. From such disturbing causes as these no man is wholly free. They enter more or less into all his mental action, and more or less deflect his thought from absolute fidelity to truth. They require that a "personal equation" should be made in the case of every individual, in order to eliminate the inevitable mistakes of his "private judgment." So long as he is satisfied with mere subjective certainty, and when he has formed his beliefs as conscientiously as he can by the exercise of his own individual faculties alone, conceives himself to have reached the certainty of objective truth, just so long will he be exposed to the peril of great and grievous error. Only the concept of a practical personal infallibility would explain undoubting confidence in general conclusions thus reached, to the neglect of all objective tests.

Herein consists the unsatisfactory character of Protestantism, when developed on its rationalistic side into pure Individualism. The "right of private judgment," exercised without regard to the necessity of correcting it by universal experience, makes a barren "yea, yea," "nay, nay," the last word of all dialogue or discussion, the baffling issue of all earnest mutual search for truth. The "right of private judgment" has its good side, undoubtedly, as well as its bad side. It thoroughly emancipates the individual from the domineering, overbearing authority which has been usurped by ecclesiastical conclaves or pontiffs or attributed to infallible scriptures. This emancipation is the negative but immense benefit conferred by the Protestant Reformation upon Christendom; at the present day, it constitutes the net result of this Reformation; it marks the limit of the progress actually attained by the fashionable religious radicalism, which is still in the stage of Individualism. But the other side of the "right of private judgment" is not good. The pendulum-swing from the Catholic extreme to the Individualist extreme has caused forgetfulness [of the fact that general advancement in the knowledge of truth is the result of general activities, not of individual achievements, that it is due to the combined experiments, observations, and reasonings of the whole race, not to the accumulated insights of any single individual. The coöperating intellects of innumerable discoverers, working in innumerable fields of investigation, have given to the world a vast body of ESTABLISHED TRUTHS, which the individual is not free to accept or reject at pleasure, but is bound to accept on peril of impeaching his own sanity. No truth, of course, can ever be established in the sense that it must not be called in question; if any one can overthrow it, he is at perfect liberty to do so. But very many truths are established in the sense that whoever questions them simply proclaims himself an ignoramus. Established truths of this order may be found in the propositions that the square root of two is a surd,—that the blood circulates in the human body,—that the earth is more than six thousand years old,—that contradictory propositions cannot both be true at the same time,—that cruelty, injustice, and untruthfulness are morally wrong. These are established truths of mathematics, physiology, geology, logic, ethics; and every science will furnish multitudes of similar instances. They are so completely established that to doubt them is simply to remove oneself from the category of intelligent and educated human beings. No "private judgment" in the world can venture to dispute them without branding itself as idiosyncrasy.

Now who or what has established these truths on a basis so impregnable? The "private judgment" of anybody? Not at all. No individual has established them, though some individual first discovered each of them. It is a matter of absolute indifference, now that they have been discovered, whether the individual assents or dissents; they stand just as securely as before in either case. He may knock his head against the rock; but he will not hurt the rock, at least. Nay, more than this. Not only has the individual not established these truths of science for others,—he has not even established any large part of them for himself. How many of our readers are able even to state, much less to prove, the grounds on which these scientific truths really rest? Is it not evident that most of us accept them on some other authority than that of our own "private judgment"? A very small portion of the established truths of science, if we have become proficient in the special branch to which they belong, we may be competent to establish for ourselves by obeying the ascertained laws of scientific proof. But the residue we simply "learn"—that is, accept as truths established for us by some other authority than our "private judgment"; and not to do this, instead of arguing in us superior discernment or independence, would simply convict us of the grossest folly. Now what is this other authority? UNIVERSAL REASON. And what do we mean by that?

In the first place, we do not mean a mere "vote of the majority." The consensus of very many minds is always entitled to respect, on any matter which has really called them into vigorous and earnest activity; but not, of course, if it is merely their indolent or indifferent assent to the usurpation of some self-constituted leader. As a general rule, most minds reason well enough, if their passions or interests are not unduly excited. They usually draw correct conclusions from such facts or premises as are fairly before their notice; they chiefly err when their premises are insufficient. Nevertheless, votes should be weighed, not counted, when the question is what to believe. The well-instructed individual possesses a more legitimate influence upon belief than an ill-instructed multitude, as an exponent of the universal reason; in him it has a far better chance to act than it has through them. Again and again, in the history of science and philosophy and religion, the individual has been right as against the world; and by-and-by the world has acknowledged it. Not for a moment should we be supposed to counsel intellectual submission to ignoramus simply because they happen to be in force, when we maintain the supreme authority of universal reason. Its behests may be transmitted through the unanimity of all minds, the agreement of a few minds, or the solitary insight of one mind; they are not to be learned by the easy process of counting noses. On this point we wish to be well understood. The authority of universal reason is not that of universal suffrage—much less that of mob-law. The "vote of the majority" may be entitled to the profoundest respect, or to none whatever; this depends on their intelligence, their means of knowledge, their freedom from all bias of passion, prejudice, or interest. To determine the amount of weight that should attach to public opinion, public opinion must be itself tested by universal reason, which is by no means a necessary synonyme of it. While public opinion tends more and more to become a fit representative of universal reason through the gradual diffusion of the light of knowledge, it is yet true that there is no infallible oracle of universal reason, whether individual thought or public opinion; and it is only by the assumption that truth wins its own way with the world, that the opinion of a million individuals has any more weight than that of one.

This may be taken as a brief definition: Universal Reason is Reason in harmony with the Universe. It is universal, not necessarily in the sense of being actually expressed at any particular time by public opinion, but in the sense of being conformed to the universal laws of thought and the universal facts of existence. The first test of it is logic; the second is verification. If thought is inconsistent with itself, there is no use in trying to verify it; it is proved false by its own contradictoriness. But it may be perfectly self-consistent, and yet fail to be in harmony with facts; hence the necessity of verifying it before it is accepted as truth.

Here is a simple illustration. What is the product of eight by nine? "Seventy-six," says X. "Seventy-four," says Y. They disagree. Each insists that his own "private interpretation" is correct, and stands on the right of "private judgment." So they carry on an interminable and profitless discussion, until Z steps up with the Multiplication Table in his hand, and proves them to be both in the wrong. This illustrates precisely what we mean by the "appeal to facts." The Multiplication Table is not the mere "vote of the majority," though the majority certainly believe in it. Neither is it the decree of any infallible Pope or Sir Oracle. But it is an authority which the individual must acknowledge, or, like Dogberry, "write himself down an ass"; an authoritative tribunal by which the arithmetical disputes of individuals can be finally settled.

Now there is a great body of Established Truths which are just as authoritative over "private judgment" as the Multiplication Table. They represent the net results of human experience down to the present day. This experience has been built up by the contributions of individuals, of course; yet it speaks in the name of no one individual and in the name of no number of individuals, but simply in the name of the universal reason of the race. It leaves free scope for the exercise of individual liberty, which it never restricts; any individual may set himself up in opposition to it, and, if he can prove by logic and verification that he is right and the supposed universal reason wrong, he simply establishes a correction of the general experience, and vindicates himself thereby. But he can only do this by logic and verification; he cannot plead his "private judgment," or "private interpretation," or "private intuition." All these things go for nothing as respects mankind at large; they will do for the individual, but not for the race; they are useless in discussion, unless they can be backed up by logic and verification. The laws of thought and of knowledge which have been discovered and confirmed by the experience of millions and millions of truth-seekers, and proved to be valid by the existence of that vast body of accumulated truths known as Science, cannot be set aside by any one without making himself ridiculous. They are binding upon the individual; he may dispute them if he pleases, but he does this at his own peril; and if he fails to prove that he knows more than all who have gone before him, he loses his case and must suffer the natural penalty.

There is nothing whatever in all this to discourage independence or originality of thought; for whoever knows that he has got hold of hitherto unsuspected truth will also know that in due time he will be upheld and vindicated by the universal reason itself. All he has to do is to stand by his thought, and make the necessary sacrifices in order to secure recognition for it. But in this case he is simply appealing from the universal reason as represented by his contemporaries to the universal reason as represented by posterity; he still recognizes the tribunal by which all individual thought must be ultimately, as it will be justly, judged. So long as man is finite, the universal reason of the human race can only approximate more and more to the universal reason of Nature; and, although this increasing approximation is always secured by the exercise of individual thought which penetrates deeper than the average thought of the age, nevertheless individual thought must in all cases hold its ground by means of logic and verification alone. Personal affirmation goes for nothing in the long run; it is the universal laws of intelligence that govern in the end. And the universal reason we defend, as against the confused claims of merely "private judgment," has attained its highest expression not in Christianity, Catholic or Protestant, but in Science.

THE SACRIFICE OF EDITH FREEMAN.

The world has some reason to thank every man who has "the courage of his opinions," however erroneous or bad those opinions may be; and we are mistaken if it will not be acknowledged before long that a most important service has been rendered to the cause of freethought by the creed-crazed father who lately took the life of his little daughter in obedience to a supposed call from heaven. That innocent child has, in a very real sense, yielded up her life for humanity. She has caused thousands of parents to recognize, as they never did before, the horrible character of the stories with which they have been poisoning the minds of their own children. Such parents know now what a faith like Abraham's means when reduced to practice; and they may well wonder, considering how the patriarch's faith has been extolled, that he has not had a greater number of imitators. They may thank the instincts of humanity and the influence of scepticism, not the teachings of the pulpit or the Sunday-school, that religious fanaticism has been kept in check to the extent to which it has been. But what are they to say to this man Freeman? What ground can any Orthodox believer have for blaming him or even expostulating with him? He said he had a message from heaven, a message of precisely similar character to one that we read of in the Bible: who is going to prove to him that he had not? Will the position be squarely taken up that heaven no longer undertakes to guide men's actions, and that everybody ought to know as much? How could such a position be maintained? The New Testament, far from hinting at any withdrawal of miraculous phenomena after Christ's departure, plainly foreshadows their extension. In the latter days, which so many consider these to be, young men are to see visions and old men to dream dreams. Will it be said that Freeman should have tested his vision in every possible way, in order to be satisfied of its divine origin and authority? Did the holy men of old do this? The word of the Lord used to come to them in dreams, and we never read that they had their doubts or suspicions. They were "obedient to the heavenly vision," and their faith was in every case counted to them for righteousness. There would be no room for faith if demonstration were required. The word of the Lord is its own evidence to the devout and attentive mind; to ask for a sign is the mark of an evil and adulterous generation.

But this man was mistaken, it may be urged, inasmuch as the resurrection of his child, which he was led to expect, did not happen. But is not a day with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day? Waiving that point, however, how is Freeman to blame, from an Orthodox point of view, for acting on the vision or revelation he believed he had? These are not things, as has already been remarked, that can be tested by vulgar methods; and if a man occasionally errs in obeying what he mistakenly holds to be a revelation, is it not better so than that all faith in revelations—distinct intimations of the will of heaven—should cease? What would become of Mr. Moody's theology and Fulton Street Prayer-Meeting theology, if belief in direct divine action and influence should cease? The only difference between Freeman and thousands of others lies, not in the distinctness and speciality of the intimation which he believed he received, but in the sanguinary nature, in his case, of the divine behest. But surely that should not, in view of Scripture precedents, have caused him to hesitate. The foundation pillars of the whole Christian system of belief are sprinkled, or, rather we may say, drenched, with blood. God commanded Abraham to slay Isaac, and he afterwards gave up his own son to death in order to appease his own wrath. "Without the shedding of blood, there is no remission of sins"; and why should not Freeman have believed, on the authority of a revelation, that the blood of his innocent daughter would secure some great good to the world? He did believe this; and yet Christians, who have been talking blood all their lives, who read with approval and edification Mr. Moody's celebrated sermon on "The Blood," call the poor misguided father a fanatic and a murderer!

Our hope is strong that much good will come of this wretched affair. Many persons, we believe, will be led to see that the first thing to do in this world is to act upon the highest principles of human and social morality, and make these the stepping-stones to something higher, if anything higher there be. To plant ourselves in the kingdom of heaven before we have done half-justice to the kingdom of earth, and therefore before we can form any worthy conception of a higher state, is only to involve ourselves in the most serious and dangerous moral confusion. The last thing the present writer would wish would be to proclaim a materialistic finality to human hopes or aims; but this he feels very strongly: that, if there be a heaven, we must climb to it from earth, not swoop down to earth from celestial heights before we yet know what the world is or what its duties are. The foundations of a true religion, it might almost be said, are yet to be laid. We can only hope to rear the structure after we have learnt to do justice to all human relations, and found to what height human nature, following out its own best instincts, is adapted to rise.

W. D. L. S.

THE F. R. A. MEETING OF 1879.

The Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association, held on the 29th and 30th of May, was one of the best of the whole dozen of annual meetings which the Association has had since it began its existence. In the qualities of enthusiasm, hopefulness, and courage, it reminded many of the old-time members, of some of the earliest conventions of the Association, when its ideas and methods were novel, and zeal was still fresh. And yet the year just closed had been one showing less active work on the part of the society than any preceding year. It was not anything in the past that gave this revived buoyancy of feeling: it was rather a new outlook for the future. It was the feeling shared and expressed by so many, that the time had come for the Association to enter on a new phase of enterprise for the spread and establishment of its principles. From this point of view it was a noted meeting, and will mark, perhaps, a new era in the history of the Free Religious movement. Time may prove it to have been what the Germans would call an epoch making convention.

Yet there was nothing forced in this new aspect of things. It was but the natural consequence of a spontaneous tendency that is evident in the liberal thought of the times towards more constructive work. This tendency was illustrated in Mr. Frothingham's address to the convention last year,—his closing words as President of the Association. It would be well if members would now re-read them in the light of this year's meeting. The tendency was further shown in Mr. Frothingham's greatly misinterpreted farewell discourse recently to his society in New York. Close observers of the liberal sentiment of the country who are in a position to feel its pulse report something of the same tendency, though often working as yet but vaguely. It appears also in THE INDEX; and the correspondence of the Secretary of the Association might be drawn upon for evidence of a growing desire for some more effective and united activity. It was Mr. Frothingham's hope and belief that the era of constructiveness was at hand, which led him earnestly to advocate the selection of Mr. Adler as his successor as President of the Association,—Mr. Adler, in his society in New York, having proved not only his belief in the principles of Free Religion, but his ability as a leader in putting them to work in institutions. Following this bent of liberal thought, the Report of the Executive Committee made the question of instituting some more effective modes of activity a special topic, and thus brought the matter directly before the Association for discussion.

There was not, however, so much consideration of this question at the business meeting as it was hoped there might be. Too much time was frittered away in minor criticism. Yet an excellent committee was appointed, consisting of Mr. C. D. B. Mills, of Syracuse, N.Y., and Mr. D. H. Clark, now of Boston, and Mr. Seth Hunt, of Florence, Mass., to mature some plan for the increased efficiency of the Association, and present it to the Executive Committee.

On Friday, the 30th, there were two very interesting and successful sessions in Parker Memorial Hall. Seldom have we had a convention when the speaking was so uniformly good. Considering that it was Decoration Day, and that, for the first time, from inability to secure a hall elsewhere, the meetings had to be held quite one side from the centre of the city, the audiences were unexpectedly large. At the opening, President Adler, in his half hour's introductory speech, made a very good impression, though reserving his main strength for his afternoon address. Mr. Chadwick followed with an hour's essay on "Theological and Rational Ethics." It was a vigorous and bright plea for utilitarianism as a moral philosophy. But the word utility was used in a large sense, to indicate, not that which may seem most expedient to the individual, but that which has been proved useful to the welfare of the greatest number in the evolution and education of the human race. In the after discussion, Mr. Savage touched very effectively on the inconsistency of expecting a sound morality on the old theological basis, since some of the doctrines of the old theology are positively immoral. Mr. Tiffany spoke of the great power of sympathy, in the presence of the actual concrete experiences of life, for setting in operation the right kind of practical moral motives. And Mr. Potter tried to show how the modern scientific view of human society, in respect, for instance, to the law of heredity, and the sanitary relations of human beings, and the necessary mutual dependence of the various social and industrial classes, would furnish new and powerful grounds of appeal to the moral sense.

But the great effort of the convention was Mr. Adler's address at the opening of the afternoon session. He took for his topic the Practical Needs of Free Religion; and for an hour and twenty minutes, without a scrap of paper or a note of any kind before him, he held the closest attention of the large audience, not by any vague rhetorical generalities about freedom, but by a discourse as elaborately thought out in all its points, and as cleanly finished in diction, as if it all had been spoken from a manuscript. His hearers at once felt the power of a trained thinker and speaker of exceptional strength, and, as they were carried along with him, could not help but catch something of his own enthusiastic conviction that Free Religion does not mean merely the holding of a convention for free discussion of religious problems, but has a large practical mission for human welfare which it is only just beginning to unfold. The President was fittingly followed by Messrs. Abbot, Hinckley, and Mills, each of whom, in the same direction, emphasized some point or points of the work needed to be done. In the evening the festival, happily presided over by Col. Higginson, gave an opportunity for the members and friends of the Association to come together in social intercourse, to cement bonds of friendship, and to congratulate one another over the good day's work.

This is but a hint of a specially good meeting. The usual printed pamphlet will appear in due time to tell the full story. That there will come some increased activity, some extension of practical enterprise, as the fruit of the meeting, many members certainly believe and hope. Others, perhaps, fear it as a change of base. There is, indeed, occasion for wisdom and caution, and for a candid consideration of obstacles. But there is room enough within the strict limits of the constitution for much enlargement of operations. Concerning the fundamental principles of the Association, there is no question. The only question is, How shall the Association proceed in applying them?

W. J. P.

A GOOD colored man once said, in a class-meeting: "Brethren, when I was a boy, I took a hatchet and went into de woods. When I found a tree dat was straight, big, and solid, I didn't touch dat tree; but when I found one leaning a little and hollow inside, I soon had him down. So when de debblil goes after Christians, he don't touch dem dat stand straight and true; but dem dat lean a little and are hollow inside."

Communications.

RATIONALISTIC AFFIRMATIONS.

DEAR INDEX:—

It is the common reproach of rationalism that it makes no affirmations of belief, but consists wholly of negations. This accusation is made and rests mainly upon the fact that it has no formulated consensus. It is, perhaps, quite natural that it should not have. When men break away from the moorings of supernaturalism and sail out upon the broad ocean of rational thought, in search of the undiscovered haven of absolute truth, it is not strange that they should pursue independent tracks and make independent discoveries. Such being the fact, it has often occurred to me that it would promote the spread of rationalism, if a considerable number of these explorers should report their respective discoveries and observations, so that they might be collated for the guidance of less experienced voyagers. Among the readers of THE INDEX, there must be many of the former class whose experiences, if briefly formulated, would be of great value in the construction of such a chart as I have hinted at. Of course, I am aware that among freethinkers there is much diversity of opinion; but still I am inclined to think that, upon comparing notes, there would be found a more general agreement upon fundamental questions than is commonly supposed. With a view, therefore, to ascertain the various points of divergence and agreement among liberals, I take the liberty to suggest that as many as feel inclined be requested to formulate their respective beliefs, and forward them to THE INDEX for publication. It seems to me that in this way much mutual benefit might be derived, and much valuable information diffused. In making the suggestion, I take it for granted that no liberal will dogmatize, but simply present, for the consideration of others, such points of belief as he or she may deem well grounded, subject to such modifications as subsequent investigation and reflection may suggest.

In a recent discourse delivered by Professor Adler before the Society for Ethical Culture in New York, that distinguished champion of freethought made a confession of faith to which, however much might be added, no reasonable man will object. In making his statement of belief, he set an example which I hope to see followed by other pulpit teachers of rationalism, and as many laymen as may feel disposed to contribute towards the general fund of rational religion.

Disclaiming all pretension to be classed with Professor Adler, or, indeed, any of the bright lights in the firmament of rationalism, but acting upon the adage that "a cat may look at a king," I will venture to state as briefly as possible some of the more prominent points of my belief. I am not so presumptuous, however, as to think them original, or that they possess any special value; but give them because, from whatever sources derived, they express my present convictions; and I only claim for them that candid consideration to which all sincerely conceived and honestly expressed sentiments are fairly entitled. However incongruous they may seem to those whose mental and moral organisms are essentially different from my own, or however inharmoniously they may fall upon ears attuned to more speculative melodies, I can only say that they are very comforting to me; that they enable me to bear the ills of life with composure; that they strip the grave of its terrors; that they permit me to contemplate death as a boon; and, finally, that they fill my soul with a joy which, if not ecstatic, is, at least, serene. I may be laboring under a strange hallucination, but, if I am, it is a delusion fraught with so much happiness, and is so essential to my peace of mind, that I do not desire to be awakened from it this side the grave.

1. I believe in an all-pervading, infinite power, co-existent and co-eternal with the universe, that I can neither define nor comprehend, but call God, without implying personality.

2. I believe in the immutability of the laws which govern the universe, in the orderly sequence of events; and that no event has occurred, or can occur, not in harmony with those laws.

3. I believe that man is a finite being, adapted to a finite state, and that his noblest vocation is to discover the secrets of Nature, and perfect himself in the knowledge of those things which are within the scope of finite comprehension.

4. I believe in the supreme authority of the book of Nature, which, scientifically interpreted, signifies law, progress, wisdom, beneficence.

5. I believe in the revelations of science, because they are verifiable, and are revelations to all mankind.

6. I believe that what are regarded as the ills and blessings of life proceed from the same beneficent source, and that he only has attained spiritual excellence who accepts the one or the other in the same serene and thankful spirit.

7. I neither affirm nor deny the immortality of the soul, but, entertaining an affirmative hope, rest content in the belief that if we are to have a spiritual existence after death, that condition will be subject to spiritual laws operating similarly to those laws of evolution which we everywhere observe in the material world; that as in this world all is not happiness, neither all despair, so in that we need not expect to find a state either of perfect bliss or unmitigated woe.

8. I believe in that religion which has for its objective the happiness of man in his earthly estate; that seeks the attainment of that end by earnest efforts to uplift him to higher and still higher planes of virtue and intelligence; by the amelioration of the hard conditions which are his inheritance; by the establishment of governments based upon the equality of man and universal justice; by breaking asunder the chains of error and superstition which bind him to false conceptions of his origin and the purposes of his being; by the cultivation of his aesthetic and moral faculties, and the substitution of honest action for hypocritical pretence, of truth for falsehood, of realities for shams, of rational thought for metaphysical speculations, and of the facts of science for apocalyptic visions.

9. Finally, I believe in death as a precious boon to man; that beyond it we know nothing and need fear nothing, since that beneficence which attends all mundane things may confidently be expected to wait upon the events of the celestial kingdom, into whose secrets, for wise though inscrutable purposes, we are not permitted to penetrate.

DANIEL CONY.

WOBURN, Mass., May, 1879.

ANALYSIS OF GOETHE'S "ELECTIVE AFFINITIES."

The central idea of the Elective Affinities is the sanctity of the marriage relation. "What God or Fate hath joined together, let no man put asunder"—is the lesson to be learned in this most moral of moral tales. With a skillful hand Goethe has laid bare the inmost recesses of the human heart, held up to view its loves, its passions, and its weakness, and shown too its superhuman strength, its firmness, and its nobility. He brings before us a couple, happy in their relation to each other as husband and wife. No strong, passionate sentiment binds them together; their tastes are similar, their friendship sincere; and this friendship and similarity of tastes they mistake for conjugal love. Meanwhile Charlotte, the prudent, discreet wife, all unconsciously finds herself in love with and beloved by her husband's friend, the Captain; and quite as unconsciously Edward, the impetuous husband, falls in love with and is loved by his wife's niece Otilie. Under these circumstances it becomes a serious question whether the present legal condition of affairs ought not to give place to a higher law,—whether the marriage ought not to be one of heart to heart and not a mere outward form.

Before the question is fairly decided, a new obstacle presents itself,—a child comes, having claims on the united love of father and mother. The mother, keen-sighted and rigidly loyal to duty, gladly accepts this solution of the problem as sufficient; but the father, blind to everything except his own impulsive wishes, recognizes this obstacle as really no obstacle. To be sure, he is the flesh and blood parent of his child, as is also Charlotte; but in his heart he had embraced Otilie, and his wife in her heart had embraced the Captain. Edward declares such a union to be a moral adultery, and the offspring illegitimate in the highest sense.

Otilie will take no decisive steps. Here is one of those deep, magnetic natures, passive rather than active,—one whose mysterious attraction is wondrously felt, and yet never to be explained. With Edward we too find her irresistible. We cannot blame him for loving what is so lovely. He has great regard and respect for his wife, but Otilie stirs the depths of his heart. With his wife his cup of happiness seemed full, but with Otilie his cup ran over; and this excess was almost essential to the impulsive, intemperate Edward. The Captain is a staid, reasonable man, always with an eye to the eternal fitness of things; and if, in a moment of passion, he went so far as to kiss Charlotte's hand, he recovers himself immediately and begs her forgiveness. Throughout the story he is ready to act as propriety demands, and it is not strange that Charlotte, with her great love of order and her rare domestic accomplishments, should have an affinity for so proper a man as the Captain.

There is a spirit of fate brooding over this novel that reminds us of the fate in the old Greek dramas. Neither party dares to take active responsibility. Even Edward, who is precipitately active, is willing that fate should decide for him. He enters the army, is always in the foremost ranks, always rushes upon the enemy as if he knew Otilie were beyond. He has continually in mind the thought of the glass bearing his initial and Otilie's which did not break when it was tossed recklessly in the air, and he believes the same fate will be quite as careful over their united destinies, let him risk what dangers he may. Otilie patiently waits her fate to be decided so soon as Charlotte and Edward shall have separated. Full of intense yearning and longing, of love which beareth all things and hopeth all things, every thought, every act, is for Edward. In the plants, the trees, she sees only Edward's plants, Edward's trees. She tends the child because it is Edward's child. Love for Edward becomes her existence. As Otilie represents love, Charlotte represents a wise, judicious understanding. Deliberately she weighs the pros and cons, leaving her own heart entirely out of the balance. She waits, hoping that time and the thought of his boy will cool Edward's passion; that employment and perhaps a new lover will divert Otilie. As for the Captain, he can always wait for the fit time and place.

The fate which Edward trusted so implicitly does not desert him. Safe from the untold dangers of the war, he believes that fate has decided for him. He meets the Captain, tells him of his decision, overcomes the Captain's scruples as to public opinion, and, having arranged suitably for the maintenance of the Captain and Charlotte, starts the Captain for the execution of his plans. Here again fate steps in. Otilie with the child had gone to the farther shore of the pond; the boy asleep on the grass, Otilie sits beside him reading; Edward suddenly appears. With all her surprise and emotion, Otilie will make no promise to Edward until she hears the result of the Captain's interview with Charlotte. Full of agitation, she leaves Edward, goes to the boat; but alas! in her confusion she loses her foothold just as she was stepping into the boat. The child falls into the water and is drowned.

Fate seems now to have answered the question. So Charlotte thinks, so the Captain, as well as Edward. Then it is that Ottilie with superhuman courage and fortitude declares that she will never marry Edward. Clearly she sees the sin into which she was entangled, and in the depths of her heart she will forgive herself only under condition of fullest renunciation. And Ottilie remains inflexibly firm in her purpose. With this state of affairs, nothing remains for her but death. Love is her existence; deny her that and she must die. The poet could not do otherwise than follow the course of Nature. To Edward life is nothing without Ottilie. Only death is desirable, for death alone restores Ottilie to him. A gracious fate grants his desire.

Such is the phase in which Goethe has viewed one of the most vital questions of the present time. He has chosen no random characters for his dramatic personæ. All who are needed to discuss or weigh the important subject are brought together. Cool, calm, deliberate reason we see in the person of Charlotte. Passion is represented by Edward. Ottilie is love, and the Captain public opinion. For in discussing this question of the marriage relation, all of these have a voice in the matter. Passion is loud and demonstrative. It knows only its own desires. It will overthrow everything between itself and its object. Its own might makes it right, and it acknowledges no law but its blind instincts. Reason too, as well as passion, has an interest in discussing this question. Nature has made the parents the guardians of the child, and reason doubts whether it may be right to leave the child to the protection of others, however suitable they may be; but on the other hand, reason sees that where two are unequally yoked together there is discord which cannot have other than ill effects on the child. In this dilemma reason cannot decide, but appeals to a higher tribunal—to love; for love alone can solve the question,—a love which is true to the highest and noblest, a love free from passion; and this love promptly decides upon self-renunciation. So when reason and passion and public opinion would err, love in the person of Ottilie reveals the highest truth. She decides all. She alone is capable of seeing the truth,—feeling it, perhaps we should say; for it is the heart, not the head, which makes the decision.

Whoever calls this novel of Goethe's immoral, and lax in its principles, must needs be more spotless than sanctity itself. With rigid sacrifice and renunciation, Goethe demands not only the sacredness of the marriage relation in outward form, but also that its inmost spirit should be inviolate. He requires that marriage should be no mere friendship brought about by propinquity or a harmony of tastes; he demands that the highest love, the utmost fidelity, the closest union, should be the bonds of marriage. If marriage has been established on any other basis, he gives to the unfortunate pair no alternative but the strictest loyalty to each other. If diversion is to be found, it is in useful employment and not in the arms or caresses of another.

It has been said of Shakespeare's plays that each is an organic whole, that every subordinate part has its peculiar fitness and adaptation to the entire play, as the leaf, the twig, and the roots do to the tree. So of this novel of Goethe's. Not simply by its fruits, as seen in the dénouement, do we know it, but every minute part reveals the nature and character of the whole.

Almost at the outset the chemical affinities of metals and fluids become the subject of conversation. No better figure or illustration could be found to show the wonderful, secret workings of heart to heart and soul to soul than this affinity of matter for its own. Hence, magnetism and the mysteries of love play an important part throughout the book. The influence of Ottilie is magnetic. She attracts, not by her brilliant intellect or rare abilities, but by her magnetism; therefore it is those of the opposite sex who are drawn to her. The Superior, Luciana, and Charlotte know nothing of those hidden qualities of Ottilie's which attract the Assistant and the Architect as well as Edward. Edward on one occasion thinks Ottilie's conversation wonderful, and Charlotte coolly reminded him that Ottilie had not said a word.

Not only does magnetic force play an important part in the book, but also that force which comes from human law and social organization. We find much said here in relation to order, harmony of arrangement, and taste. Landscape gardening is introduced, as also architecture; this, too, with no slight or indirect bearing on the whole. As the gardener in subdividing and compelling Nature to his own ends and purposes must first consult her original tendencies, and govern all his plans by that; and as the architect cannot build according to his own wilfulness or caprice, but must subject himself to the eternal laws of beauty and order, so must man in his social relations look not merely to his own passions and desires, however lawful in and of themselves. He must conform to the social laws of Nature, must do no violence to the spirit of the times, but, on the contrary, come into a sacred harmony with it.

Like Shakespeare, Dante, and Homer, Goethe gives a portrait of his characters with a single stroke of the pen. Ottilie's beautiful eyes, Charlotte's foot, Edward's deep, rich voice, are as significant as Homer's "white-armed Juno," or Shakespeare's "gentle Desdemona." It was absolutely essential that Ottilie should have beautiful eyes. Reticent as she is, it was necessary that "the windows of the soul" should reveal the inner life. Love does not express itself in words. It has no voice. Passion is deep, intense, expressive. Hence, Edward's voice is deep and rich. Goethe was right in giving fate so active a part in this novel; for outside the human will, beyond human forethought, there seems at times a destiny, perverse or otherwise, that stands at the helm of affairs and gives direction, if not decision; and in no affairs does a destiny or blind fate seem to take more control than in matters of the heart.

Goethe is no cruel scientist dissecting human weakness merely to gratify his own or a public idle curiosity. He is a healing physician. Coolly and calmly he makes a diagnosis of the case, then prescribes, however severe, the needful remedy; and, as already hinted, the remedy in the case before us is useful activity. The old legend relating to the fall of man makes God pronounce labor as a curse upon the guilty pair. Goethe changes this curse into the greatest blessing, making it the healing balm for sick souls. Thus renunciation, that sacrifice of self for the highest good of others, becomes that losing of life which shall find itself again; not a narrow, individual life, but a life which opens out into the broadest personality, a life which has become one with God.

MRS. C. K. SHERMAN.

CHICAGO, May, 1879.

[We cannot forbear expressing our admiration of this beautiful and noble paper, for which we heartily thank the writer.—ED.]

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

In conversing on the subject of education a few days ago with a mother (a noble woman, belonging to the school of freethought, who is noted for originality and for breadth of views in all directions), I was led to see in a clearer light than ever before how much the progress of society depends upon directing mental tendencies in the young into right channels, in opening up to them a safety-valve through which the accumulated errors and superstitions of centuries may have an opportunity to escape, and in entering ourselves more intensely into the embryo thought of the rising generation.

If those who are in the decline of life would forecast the future, and see, as in a mirror, what society will be twenty or thirty years hence, they can do so more effectually by bringing themselves into sympathy with the views and feelings of the young than they can by any sharp contrast with years gone by. Reform moves in a geometric ratio.

Those how in their teens are soon to lead in legislative and ecclesiastical bodies,—in schools of art and science, in the kingdom of literature, and in all the activities of life. A score of years hence, society will be shaped into the image of what these young people believe to be right to-day, and so on indefinitely.

Those who would lead the race to grander revelations of truth and to greater consecration to duty, who, as parent or teacher, would help to reorganize society on a purer basis, must dig up as fast as propagated the seeds of bigotry to prevent their becoming so mixed with the delightful associations and precious memories of youth as to make it a labor requiring almost superhuman strength to eradicate that which in process of years is plainly seen to be an egregious error.

Would that every free religious association in the land could be supplemented by a lyceum for children, where independence of thought would be encouraged, and where teaching should be, not in the letter which killeth, but in the spirit that maketh alive.

The lady to whom I have above alluded has a family of children who have been brought up to think for themselves, and who, in consequence, are exceptionally independent.

One of them, a thoughtful girl of eight years, came home one day from the Unitarian Sunday-school and said: "Mother, I thought Unitarians believed that all men are the sons of God. Why do they always give us lessons about Jesus, and never about other great and good men?"

A large proportion of the Unitarian Sunday-schools are far in the rear even of Unitarian churches in their teaching. They remain in the old ruts. It is exceptional when they illustrate their instruction with other periods of the world's history than those of the Old and New Testaments.

Mothers are often pained to perceive that their own careful training is being counteracted by the indelible impressions which a biased, one-sided view makes on the young mind.

However, in after years, reason may assert the fact that there are older Bibles containing truth, and other great religious leaders than those recorded in the Hebrew Scriptures, it will be scarcely possible for them to realize it, and to lift their eyes above the horizon of their childhood's theological environment.

It is a serious question for radicals to consider how their children are to develop and to perpetuate the cardinal virtues, love of truth and devotion to duty. To this end they should be encouraged and stimulated in every pursuit tending to cultivate the higher attributes of their being,—reverence, imagination, the love of the beautiful, the sentiments of wonder and awe.

Let them read biographical sketches calculated to kindle admiration for deeds of heroism, of noble self-sacrifice, and of moral grandeur. The contagion of such companionship will continually incite the reader to nobler pursuits and to higher aims in life. There is a natural impulse in the child's mind to piety, seeking after God—the absolute Good. The tender religious sentiments of children should never be repressed. They should meet with the most profound response and the warmest sympathy from parents, guardians, and teachers. Should children and young people fail to find among liberals a response to their emotional natures, they will be in imminent danger of becoming lured into those periodical gatherings (so demoralizing in their tendency) denominated revival meetings, in which they would be likely to look upon mistaken zeal, vehement exhortation, and vociferous prayer as genuine earnestness and piety. Brought under the magnetism with which all assemblies swayed by a common purpose (whatever that purpose may be) are more or less surcharged, they will be coerced by the bugbear, "miserable sinner, trembling under the wrath of God," and will naturally fall into the spirit of the occasion, uniting with unction in Moody's revival song:—

"Till unto Jesus' cross you cling,
Doing is a deadly thing."

Thus putting faith and belief in dogma before a true life and a pure heart.

In accordance with the universal custom of convening young people on Sunday for the purpose of indoctrinating them into denominational tenets or imparting what is called religious instruction, liberal thinkers should institute some means of interesting their children on the same day as an offset, and in self-defence; for if no innocent recreations united with healthful mental stimulants are provided for the children of radicals, they will naturally fall into line with their companions for whom there is assiduous painstaking (if they chance to belong to Sunday-schools of an Orthodox type) in the way of picnics, entertainments, etc.

Many are the mothers who are anxiously waiting to avail themselves of some school or lyceum where their children can have desirable associations with others, thereby helping to develop symmetrically their social natures, and at the same time to protect them from the harmful training, the pseudo-religion, to which their susceptible natures would surely be subjected, were they to attend any Sunday-school accessible to them, in most of which eternal damnation and other sectarian dogmas calculated to poison the springs of life are systematically and indelibly impressed.

Goethe said, "Nothing that can happen to a mortal body can harm an immortal soul." Let us teach the young that the love and not the fear of God is the beginning of wisdom; let us teach them to fear nothing but wrong-doing; above all things to be true to themselves, implicitly to follow the dictates of conscience to whatever stake it may lead,—a conscience guided by reason and aided by the light which can be obtained from any and all sources.

ANNA GARDNER.

WHY THE MODIFIERS ARE RIGHT.

BOSTON, May 30.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—Most of the Liberal Leaguers who desire the repeal of the United States postal law give as a reason for such desire, that, as the Constitution of the Nation declares that the "freedom of the press" shall not be abridged, therefore the utmost licentiousness as to mailable matter must be permitted. Cannot these people see that there is a vast difference between liberty and licentiousness, and that, while the former is a great benefit to mankind, the latter is a great injury?

A large majority of these same Liberal Leaguers confess, however, that the States may rightfully make laws against really obscene literature, pictures, etc., totally forgetting that the Constitutions of the States, equally with that of the Federal government, declare that the liberty of the press shall not be abridged; and, consequently, if there is no difference between freedom and licentiousness, then no State can suppress such matter.

Again, if liberty and licentiousness are inseparable, how then can any State rightfully make laws forbidding indecency in persons? Do not State Constitutions declare for liberty of persons, as well as of the press? There certainly is a difference, as wide as the divergence between right and wrong, that separates glorious and invaluable liberty from base and unnecessary licentiousness. For my part, Mr. Editor, I hold that a United States postal and other laws—and State laws, besides—against such debasing, dangerous, and wholly unnecessary works are morally and constitutionally righteous, wise, and needed; but they must be so framed and guarded that no person can be made to suffer in the least under them for writing, publishing, or selling works of fact or of opinion, when expressed in ordinarily decent language or design, or even when expressed in any language or design which the author may find essential to his or her full thought.

Full expression of thought concerning all facts and all opinions being the very essence of freedom—in fact, the "right preservative of rights," and, consequently, sacred anywhere and everywhere—must not be hindered; but thought must be clothed in as decent words or designs as possible, under penalty of the law.

GEORGE NATHAN HILL.

THE Christian at Work thinks Ruskin never said a truer thing than this: "If you want knowledge, you must toil for it; if food, you must toil for it; and if pleasure, you must toil for it." Toil is the law. Pleasure comes through toil, and not by self-indulgence and idleness. When one gets to love work, his life is a happy one. Said a poor man in Brooklyn, the other day, with a family of eleven to provide for: "If I were worth a million dollars, I should not wish to do much different than I do now every day, working hour after hour. I love it a thousand times better than to rest." He has for nearly half a century been surrounded by workers, and has caught the spirit of industry. He loves his work better than food or sleep. He is happy who has conquered laziness, once and forever.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 30, 1878.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.
 Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publisher

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 G. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MÜLLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 60 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Laaker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna O. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO
FREE RELIGION.
 PUBLISHED BY THE
INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:
 FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.50
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. G. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	3.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.....	6.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Treasury.....	3.25
The World-Priest.....	3.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 6 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero-Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thomas: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	3.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience .....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I. "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.50
Journal of Researches.....	4.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.25
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	3.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 3 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GROE'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Ordeal of Christendom.....	7.00
GROE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Groe. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	1.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.75
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 3 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGLEWORTH'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mountains of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGLEWORTH'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGLEWORTH'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.25
The Ghosts, &c.....	1.50
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservancy of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	8.50
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KER (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 3 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 1 vol.....	3.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	4.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 1 vol.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	6.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MAEN (HUBAUE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN) Voltaire.....	2.00
Romances, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Unity: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trovity Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	1.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Essays on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 19 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.40
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.40
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., &c.....	.40
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	3.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	3.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHOER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Room Talks. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	2.00
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Dedications, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humourists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. OLLIE) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	1.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	1.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunderings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.00
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pandora. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

331 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

CHEAP, HEALTHFUL HOMES
in Tennessee. Address WARREN SMITH,
Flat Rock, Lewis Co., Tenn.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.
Please examine the fine list of POPU-LAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN
THIS LIST will be furnished to order.
Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St.,
Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE
INDEX for

1 8 7 8,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE
TWOPENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR RE-VIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J.
Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

FOR

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,
23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX,
and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE
Popular Science Monthly.

CONDUCTED BY

E. L. and W. J. YOUNG.

Containing instructive and interesting articles and abstracts of articles, original, selected, and illustrated, from the pens of the leading scientific men of different countries;
accounts of important scientific discoveries;
the application of science to the practical arts; the latest views put forth concerning natural phenomena, by savants of the highest authority.

It is an instructive and valuable monthly, and, as a consequence, is continually increasing in circulation and influence.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY is now a large octavo of 128 pages, and will be considerably enlarged, beginning with the issue for January, 1879. It is handsomely printed on clear type, and, when necessary to further convey the ideas of the writer, fully illustrated.

TERMS: Five dollars per annum; or, fifty cents per number.

A Club of five will be sent to any address for $20.00 per annum.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY and AP-
PLETON'S JOURNAL, together, $7.00 per annum (full price, $8.00).

The volumes begin May and November of each year.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.
We will be glad to send our Periodical Catalogues, free, upon application.

D. APPLETON & CO., PUBLISHERS,
549 & 551 Broadway, New York.

A C H E A P O F F E R .

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 16 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cents.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

T H E I N D E X

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings.
Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Elling-wood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

M. J. SAVAGE'S NEW NOVEL,

Bluffton,

Describing in a very interesting way the processes of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical.
12mo. Price $1.50.

Also, by the same author,

The Religion of Evolution:

"An exposition of religion in the light of the most advanced science. A brave and reverent thinker."—London Inquirer. Price
$1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

NORTHERN LITERATURE AND ART ROOMS

will immediately be opened in Boston by Miss Marie A. Brown, for the purpose of giving due prominence to the many beautiful productions of Sweden, Norway, Finland, and Denmark, comprising the literature,—English translations and originals,— illustrated works, views, photographs, portraits, and paintings and statuary of the most celebrated Northern artists. The "Rooms" will be elegant in all their appointments,—an attractive resort for all art-loving people and purchasers.

That it may become an international affair, Miss Brown invites all Americans and Scandinavians who are interested in the enterprise, and wish it success, to aid her efforts by subscribing the requisite fund.
One thousand persons are desired who will each subscribe $10.00, for which Nadeschda, a poem by Runeberg, and a full set of The Surgeon's Stories, six historical novels by Topelius, as translated and published by her, will be sent them in return, as they are issued.

MARIE A. BROWN,
P.O. Box 900, Boston, Mass.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECT- URES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?

11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her
Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Faine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.

23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it
Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preliminary Theism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible.
(From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible
Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIA- TION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 50 cts.;
one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W.
Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen
(Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal
American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 18 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's
Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple,
Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter.
5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred,
$1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. E. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1873, '73, '74, '75, '76, and
'77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. E. A. platform. $1.50.

I N T E R E S T I N G

NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr.
H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr.
I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuonen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs;
Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophecies. Vol. III., New Testament (in preparation). Price $2.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W.
Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.00.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sander-land. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 178 pages.
Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 266 pages.
Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.
By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley,
Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon
Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.25.

THE GHOSTS: Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. E. G. Ingersoll (his latest lecture). 272 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 253 pages. Price
$1.25.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Bathbone Greg, author of the Swains of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND.
By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the neatest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation.
Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition.
One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00.
Half calf, $4.50. Will be ready March 30.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index.
The Boston Edition sells at $12.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 294 pp.
Price $1.50.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH BONE, ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience.
By N. F. Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231
Washington Street, Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address
THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

T H E I N D E X A N

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, IOWA, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried...
E. C. WALKER.

P U B L I C A T I O N S

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE

OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, R. F.
Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League,
List of Charter Members, etc., etc.
Octavo, pp. 180. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF
THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters
by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc.
Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp.
Single copies, 8 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.;
50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL.
Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct.
25, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thorowly, reflected patiently. It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For
Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DIS-
COURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth,
$1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Alton's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With
Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublime lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A
Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND.
A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo.
With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying:
"It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE ORACLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism
Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by
THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 19, 1879.

WHOLE NO. 425.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbath laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION: THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.
N.B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and feasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

GOODBY for a season, kind friends. This is our last number of THE INDEX for three months. We bespeak your cordial and staunch support of our temporary successor, Mr. Clark—a good man and true, who has toiled faithfully and sacrificed much in our common cause.

"HE WHO lives a hundred years, vicious and unrestrained,—a life of one day is better, if a man is virtuous and reflecting." So taught Buddha in the Dhammapada.

WHAT CONFUCIUS thought of contempt for the Consensus of the Competent is pithily expressed as follows, in the Doctrine of the Mean, chapter xxviii.:

"Let a man who is ignorant be fond of using his own judgment,—let a man without rank be fond of assuming a directing power to himself,—let a man who is living in the present age go back to the ways of antiquity: on the persons of all who act thus calamities will be sure to come."

MR. GLADSTONE says that he long since learned that no scheme of religion supplies a safe or invariable measure of religious character and conduct; and he adds: "I do not mean that belief and conduct are disconnected; but I take personal belief to be only one among a variety of influences which govern life." Some "liberals" have the habit of considering all church-members hypocrites and all liberals heroes and saints. Observation shows that both sides of this opinion are prejudices.

THE CHICAGO Jewish Advance quotes from Professor Hommel's Literature of the Law (Leipzig, 1761) this beautifully just description of Spinoza: "Homo negus Judæus, negus Christianus, sed philosophus ex Cartesii schola, quo vix Socrates aut Epictetus purior vixit,—atheus, ut ita dicam, religiosissimus." [A man neither Jewish nor Christian, but a philosopher of the Cartesian school, than whom scarcely Socrates or Epictetus lived more purely,—an atheist, so to speak, in the highest degree religious.]

WIT, like beauty, is "its own excuse for being." William H. Smith, the First Lord of the Admiralty, who has been satirized in "Pinafore" as Sir Joseph Porter, K. C. B., is accredited with the following witicism at the expense of J. Norman Lockyer, the English scientist and editor of Nature. Mr. Lockyer had made some assertion not remarkable for reserve or a lack of self-confidence, whereupon the Lord of the Admiralty remarked: "The only trouble with Lockyer is that he doesn't comprehend the difference between the 'author' and the 'editor' of Nature."

THE TOTAL NUMBER of persons in Holy Orders in the Russian Empire is about 100,000. There are 420 cathedrals, 38,302 churches, and 12,408 chapels. Of late years 423 new churches have been built every year. In 1877 about 11,300 persons entered the Orthodox Church, including 653 Protestants and 1,339 Roman Catholics. In the monastic institutions there are 10,500 monks and 16,000 nuns. The translation of the Bible into Russian was begun in 1856 and not completed until 1877. The first edition, which consisted of 24,000 copies, has been exhausted, and a second is in press.

SEVERAL YEARS ago, an essay of ours on "Love and Justice" which contained thoughts similar to the following called out a decided protest from a distinguished liberal; but now they are published in the Christian Register, and quoted without dissent by Unity: "E. P. Powell, in an article in the Christian Register, says 'the very soul of human want' is 'common honesty.' 'Love has been talked about and prayed about so much in the churches, that it has degenerated into a sickly sentiment, with a thoroughly upas atmosphere.' 'The maudlin effort to create a tenderness between the soul and the Infinite effervesces in conceit, in self-deception, in lies. The principle of square dealing between man and man, and between the soul and God, is safe and sure.'"

REV. DR. PEABODY, of Harvard College, is one of the best men in the world. Yet, in his baccalaureate sermon last Sunday, he could make such a statement as this, notwithstanding the fact that nearly every great defaulter and embezzler for years has been noted for "loyalty to Christ": "So far as there has been among educated men a decline of loyalty to Christ and his gospel, there has been a decline in those qualities which claim confidence and honor, which ensure unblemished reputation, which minister to social well-being, and to the integrity and purity of public life. A non-Christian culture has utterly failed to justify itself in its nurslings." The absolute opposite of this statement would be the truth. Compare with it the wiser statements above quoted from Hommel and Gladstone.

THE RAISING by Leo XIII. of the Lieutenant of the Sovereign Order of St. John of Jerusalem to the dignity of Grand Master brings into notice an institution whose very existence was for a long time almost ignored. It was founded in the Holy Land in the year 1048, and lost its last Grand Master in 1898, since which year its affairs have been administered by a bailiff holding the title of Lieutenant. With the outbreak of the Franco-German war, the Order acquired renown in Europe—though renown of a different kind from that gained by their predecessors in the early ages—by good services among the sick and wounded on the field of battle. Its seat at present is at Rome, where it possesses a magnificent home in the midst of a large garden on the eastern slopes of the Aventine Hill. The institution is also known as the Order of Malta.

THE ARTICLES explaining the philosophical position of the late Professor William Kingdon Clifford, of University College, London, are thus enumerated by the Scientific American: "The position taken up by Professor Clifford in philosophy was never comprehensively defined by himself, but must be collected from his numerous papers and lectures of the last few years. In pure metaphysics may be specified articles on 'Body and Mind' (Fortnightly Review, 1875) and the 'Nature of Things-in-Themselves' (Mind, 1878); in ethics, 'The Scientific Basis of Morals' (Contemporary Review, 1875), 'Right and Wrong' (Fortnightly Review, 1876); and in the application of ethical theory to social and religious questions, 'The Ethics of Belief' (Contemporary Review, 1876), 'The Bearing of Morals on Religion' (Fortnightly Review, 1877), and an article on Virchow's address on the freedom of science (Nineteenth Century, 1878)."

THE LONDON Lancet says that, in the report on "Sanitary Measures in India," which has just been presented to Parliament, it appears that last year 21,682 fatal cases from attacks of wild animals had occurred in ten provinces, the largest number being in Bengal,—namely, 10,062. The deaths from snake-bites alone in the Punjab last year were 828, against 979 in the preceding year. As showing the rapidly fatal effects from the bite of the cobra, the commonest and most deadly of Indian poisonous snakes, Surgeon A. J. Wall states that one night, about half-past twelve o'clock, a Hindu punka-cooly, aged forty, while sleeping in the veranda of the doctor's house was bitten on the shoulder by a snake about three feet long. The noise and confusion soon awoke Mr. Wall, who at once hastened to the assistance of his servant, and after waiting for a short time for some ammonia, he proceeded to inject it, as recommended by Sir Joseph Fayrer and Professor Halford, previously giving the patient plenty of brandy, walking him rapidly about, etc.; yet, notwithstanding all attention, the man died in sixty-five minutes after the attack. Mr. Wall adds that the remedy had as little effect on the symptoms as it had on the result.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N.Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. HORACE SEAYER.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 W. J. R. HARGREAVE.....Editor of "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERBOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N.Y.
 HON. E. S. MCGOWAN.....Franklin, N.Y.
 ELDER T. W. EVANS.....Manti, Mich.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST.....Rochester, N.Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.....Tombury, N.Y.
 MISS RALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Pa.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N.Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N.Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....5 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....C. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN A. HENNE, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....W. F. T. BRAD, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOBLE, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Idaho.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHEER, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARSEWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....E. B. CLARK, Louisville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....DE. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. E. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTELL, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMEMMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. CUPPLAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....G. H. BARNETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARR, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. J. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....B. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPADLING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....17 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
 SYRACUSE, N.Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
 ALBANY, N.Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessy; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 PASSAIC CITY, N.J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.
 ROCHESTER, N.Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N.Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. MORIS HAYS, Rochester, N.Y.
 FRAVELIN GOODYEAR, Cort-S. E. URSINO, West Newton, Ind., N.Y.
 Z. T. WATKINS, Syracuse, N.Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N.Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, SYRACUSE, N.Y. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, Mass.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mil-M. N. LADY, Albany, N.Y.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. H. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N.J.
 T. C. GAGE, Fayetteville, N.Y. D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
 E. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Charles Ellis, Boston, Mass.
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. H. P. STARR, Rochester, N.Y.
 JOHN NILL, Watertown, N.Y. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N.Y.
 E. A. SAWTELL, Boston, Mass. W. H. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N.Y.
 THOS. DUGAN, Albany, N.Y. JOHN FREET, Albany, N.Y.
 JAMES B. FIER, Rochester, N.Y. C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

The Commands of the Lord: Where Do we Find Them?

A SERMON PREACHED IN THE UNITARIAN CHURCH, NEW BEDFORD, ON SUNDAY, MAY 11.

BY WM. J. POTTER.

At the close of my discourse last Sunday, I referred to that dreadful tragedy of human sacrifice which has recently occurred in a neighboring town, and which has so shocked the intelligence and humanity of all civilized communities. I simply referred to it as showing the survival in this enlightened century of a cruel superstition belonging to a barbarous age. And this is the most obvious thought elicited on first reading the tale of the incredible deed,—the utter incongruity of such a faith and act with the surrounding civilization of the community. It has been commonly claimed that nowhere in the world would you find a State with a population more generally enlightened, orderly, and humane than in Massachusetts; that nowhere else has civilization lifted a whole people to so high a grade of intelligence, comfort, self-control, and good government. Yet it is in Massachusetts that this monstrous deed has been committed. It is in Massachusetts that a company of people have been found, who, on hearing of the deed, were ready to defend it on the ground of their religious faith. It is in Massachusetts, whose common schools have been the first and foremost in our country, that this act of barbarous and bloody superstition has appeared. Massachusetts has had deeds of black wickedness, deeds of atrocious cruelty and crime; but never, I think, in all its history, including even its era of the witchcraft mania and the persecution of the Quakers, has it had a deed quite parallel to this in cold, deliberative, unnatural horror. Here was no rash act of frenzied excitement, no ebullition of passion, no raving of an uncontrolled maniac, no criminal motive of self-interest; but it was an act premeditated, yet without malice,—an act which the doer talked over with his wife, prayed over to his God, committed at last in obedience to what he believed to be a Divine command.

It would be a relief to be able to say with clear consciousness that it was an act of insanity. But if insanity there was, it is a kind of insanity for which it must be seriously questioned whether we can safely proclaim irresponsibility. The man was certainly sane on all other points, and (though this is no evidence perhaps) himself disclaimed eagerly any such plea in his behalf. That his reason on this point must have been clouded, his conscience and heart warped from their natural courses, by his religious faith, may be readily admitted. But this does not necessarily prove him insane; it only shows that his act was the result of an ignorant and superstitious faith. But it may have been no more insane than is any ignorant and irrational religious conviction sincerely held and acted upon. If he was insane, the others who listened to his recital of the act and were ready to excuse and shield him for it must have been insane also. This question, however, of insanity will doubtless be discussed in due time before the courts, as well as some other legal aspects of this strange case. It may be more wise as well as more humane to treat such a case as insanity, even if it be not clear that it is insanity, since no criminal motive is shown; but that persons liable to commit such deeds are to be allowed personal freedom, on the ground of the rights of private conscience, is a position that no civilized government can take for a moment. Private conscience has its rights. Religious faith has its rights. But they have no rights to take the lives of innocent children. They have no rights to import the practices of Dahomey into this country of enlightenment and civil order. They have no rights to re-establish the worship of Melch in this nineteenth century. Here are questions, therefore, that concern the pulpit, that concern religion. This horror has its lessons for the religious, church-going people of America, which must be considered in all seriousness and candor. It brings up the question, How far does the right of private judgment extend? Is it an absolute right, or does it have its limitations? It brings up, behind this, the deeper and the more distinctly religious question, How is the divine will made known to mankind? How do we know what are the Lord's commands?

That the perpetrator of this horror was sincere in his profession of religious faith, there can be no question. The deed itself attests his sincerity. His success in silencing the pleadings of his heart; his persistence in going on to the consummation of the act when the expected supernatural staying of his arm by Almighty interposition did not come; his faith that on the third day there would be a resurrection to life, and when this did not happen, that God would yet vindicate him in some way not revealed; his calm insistence still that he has done only what was right,—these all bear witness to the man's terrible sincerity in his convictions. He was sincere where others of the same faith are only half sincere. He believed fully and absolutely that he was obeying a command of God. There can be no doubt about that. He took a strong and vivid impression that was made in some way upon his mind as a direct voice from heaven. Perhaps, as has often been the case with religious enthusiasts, he imagined that he actually heard an articulate voice. However this may be, he had no question that it was the Lord who spoke to him and required this deed at his hands.

Now how is it possible that a man at this era of enlightenment could come to such a belief as this? Where shall we find the genesis of such a faith? I answer, and with deliberate judgment as to the full meaning of my words, that this belief and action are only an extreme yet entirely legitimate result of the popular faith in supernaturalism as the only true and fundamental basis of religion. This is the Orthodox belief throughout Christendom,—the belief that is inculcated in the vast majority of Christian pulpits and theological books, and that is commonly reckoned as the only sound and saving faith. To deny it is to be counted a heretic. The common Christian teaching is that it is by miracle rather than by the natural processes of law and life that the Almighty reveals himself. And though it be held, as most Protestants hold, that the days of miracles are past, none the less it is believed and urged that originally, and during the whole era when the true religion was being revealed to mankind, the process was a miraculous one. The natural mind of man, it is claimed, was utterly incapable of originating any true religious ideas. The natural reason of man was only foolishness before God, and could not be depended upon as a guide. The natural heart of man was desperately corrupt, and could only lead to wickedness and perdition. The natural world itself was under a curse. Therefore, it was argued, only by supernatural process, only by miracle, only by special interposition of the Almighty, could the divine standard of truth and the law of duty be made known to mankind. God could only make known his will by annulling natural law so as first to display his power; by appearing personally, as to Moses on Mt. Sinai; by orally dictating his commandments and directing that they be engraved on tables of stone; by talking audibly or sending messengers to certain chosen men, as to Adam in Eden, and to Abraham and Joshua and others of the patriarchs and prophets; by incarnating himself in certain chosen and exceptional human forms, as in Jesus of Nazareth; by inspiring certain prophets and apostles to write down what was to be believed as truth and right in books to be saved for all time. In all this, the natural origin and growth and development of religious ideas and institutions is utterly discarded. The whole process is a supernatural, miraculous one. And religion is therefore represented as something that is alien to man's natural life and experiences; as something to which man's natural faculties and sentiments are hostile; as something which they cannot produce and which may require their sacrifice. With respect to the origin and establishment of religion, this I think must be accepted as a fair statement by the majority of Christian believers, Catholic and Protestant.

And now I affirm that, when people have been taught from their youth up that religion has been introduced and maintained among mankind in this way, it is nothing incredible, but on the contrary an event to be naturally expected, if some of them should come to believe that these same processes of religious revelation are continued to-day, and that they themselves are the personal subjects and instruments of them. Nay, some of the largest and most powerful Protestant sects have directly taught that God does communicate with individual souls by direct personal voice to-day,—by something that is not conscience nor reason nor the voice of the human heart, but something above and apart from them and different from them,—and that personal religion, when vital, is always a supernatural experience, dependent on the mysterious coming of the Holy Spirit to break down and subdue the natural man, and to bring the whole human nature into subjection to this foreign power, which the human heart naturally resists and rejects. I say, therefore, that the Pocasset tragedy is but a literal and logical carrying out of this theory of religion, as it might be carried out by any person of narrow mind, whose chief reading is the Bible and certain partisan commentaries upon it, and who has a devout and earnest and practical faith that this book literally contains the whole truth and nothing but the truth. When such a person comes with his claim that he has received a divine command to sacrifice his child, and cites the Old Testament command to Abraham to slay Isaac, and the New Testament belief in the resurrection of a slain body to support him in his claim, how on this theory of religion is he to be consistently met and answered? Will you venture the puerile answer I have somewhere seen offered, that the Lord appeared in bodily form to Abraham and the other heroes of the Old Testament, so that Abraham actually saw him with his outward eyes and heard him with his outward ears, and that he did not so appear to this modern imitator of Abraham? But the record with regard to Abraham does not bear out the answer. It is not said that Jehovah was seen by the patriarch, and the voice that is said to have spoken was the voice of an angel in heaven. But even if the record did bear out the answer, it would hardly be accepted by any Biblical scholars of authority to-day. It is the crudity of an era of Biblical interpretation that is past. The answer attempted more likely would be that those things took place under a dispensation that is past, and are no criterion for present guidance. But how, on this theory of religion, will you prove that those things are past, against a claim that they are still present, without bringing in as witnesses and advocates those very faculties of the human mind—the natural reason, the natural conscience, the natural affections of the heart—whose competence the theory has denied?

The Roman Catholic has a practical advantage over the Protestant in this matter, inasmuch as, though professing to believe in the continued exercise of miraculous power in the Church, he maintains that this power is held under the keeping and authority of the Church itself, and is not subject to the claim of any private individual. And the administration of the Church is in the hands of the Pope and his cardinals and bishops,—a body of learned and sagacious men, who know just how far the credulity of ignorant and superstitious people can be permitted to be deluded by the miraculous without exciting public indignation, but who have the means most summarily to suppress, when expedient, any individual claimant to miraculous powers or to supernatural knowledge of the divine will. The Church is the alleged interpreter of revelation, and holds all supernatural powers in its hands. But Protestantism has abdicated this authority vested in the Church. It has declared for the right of private judgment as against the authority of the Church, and has staked its fortune and fate on that issue. Moreover, and still worse for it, Protestant Christianity, in its dominant ecclesiastical organizations, has limited the right of private judgment in religious matters to the domain of the Bible. In the Hebrew and Christian Scriptures, it has said, is the whole of our religion. It is all there, given by direct supernatural inspiration from God,—the all of spiritual and theological truth, the whole duty of man. All that man has to do is to read and understand and obey this book. And he is to read and interpret it for himself. There is no power in any church that can come between that book and his own private judgment. What his own mind finds there between those covers, that for him is the saving truth and knowledge of God,—and the whole of it. That is his creed, his code of duty,—and, whatever it may be, there is no church in Christendom that can say him nay. This is the position of Protestant Christianity.

Now when some earnest enthusiastic fanatic comes and says: I read this and that in the Bible; I find there a prophecy of the imminent conflagration of the world, and the calculations show that it is coming this year, and I shall make no further provision for my family here; I find there a belief in human souls being possessed by demons as a cause of many diseases; I find there an injunction to trust in faith and prayer as a cure of diseases; I find there a divine command that a father should slay his son as a seal of his faith; and I am persuaded that these beliefs and injunctions are as true and valid to-day as they ever were since they came by infallible inspiration from an infallible God,—when a Protestant reader of the Bible, using his private judgment, comes with this claim, I for one see no way for Protestantism to escape the dilemma of granting the claim, except by a square and open confession that the Bible is a human and fallible book, having an entirely natural origin; that, with many great truths which are eternal, it contains many errors which are the transcript of the times when it was written, and the product of the fallible authors who from time to time wrote its various parts; that therefore it is to be submitted, like any other collection of writings, to the test of the enlightened and human intelligence of mankind to-day. In fine, I know not how Protestantism can meet these vagaries of individual interpreters of the Bible—which often, indeed, are a correct literal rendering of the original—but by abandoning the claim of a supernatural basis for divine revelation, and planting itself implicitly and confidently on the fundamental principles of natural religion. When it shall be proclaimed that no religion can be true which does not thoroughly harmonize with man's natural faculties; that the genuine commands of the Lord come to man through his natural faculties themselves at their best activity, and not through some special supernatural channel above his natural faculties; that the voice of God for man is the voice of his most cultivated reason and his most enlightened conscience and his purest affections and his noblest aspirations, and not of any one of these alone, but of all of them together, balancing, correcting, supporting, and strengthening each other,—then we have a criterion by which the wild individual claims of such fanatical zealots can be speedily silenced. We bid him leave his brooding over Scripture written thousands of years ago by men as human as himself, and amid conditions of existence quite unlike his to-day,—leave his searching of old texts as if they contained God's command for him, and inquire of Nature around him and Nature within him what way lies that word of command. There is no higher, no more religious, no more divine command for man than the united voice of his natural faculties when raised to their highest efficiency. We bid him, not depreciate, as the religionist too often does, but to cultivate and to broaden his reason, as the faculty by which he apprehends the infinite intelligence that is manifested in the orderly arrangements of the universe. We bid him to enlighten conscience, as a faculty not infallible, but as that human apprehension of the divine aim and purpose of the universe by which man comes into consenting harmony with it. We bid him to keep pure and to cherish as inviolable his heart's best natural affections, the love between husband and wife, between parent and child, between friend and friend, between neighbor and neighbor, as a part of the destined channel through which the creative and vitalizing love keeps flowing from the primal cause for the very sustenance and continuance of finite beings. We bid him to heed his own highest aspirations—his yearning for some better attainment than anything yet gained—as a natural guide, giving direction to his aims and luring him ever upward to larger and more satisfying accomplishment.

My friends, in view of such melancholy exhibitions of religious fanaticism as that to which public attention is now called, and of the extravagant and unnatural excitements which, though not so extreme and shocking as this, yet spring from the same root, and very frequently attend the public expression of religion, we cannot too earnestly commend to public acceptance the merits of rational religion,—the merits of that view of religion which keeps human reason on its throne, above sentiment, above emotion, above any claim put forth in behalf of any book or prophecy or doctrine or ordinance as a direct revelation from God. Human reason has been theologically maligned as a blind guide to man's perdition. But it is the highest faculty for the revelation of truth which man has. It is needed by conscience to save it from bigotry, and by the heart to save it from excessive and weakening indulgence of affection, no less than it is needed by the religious sentiment to save it from superstition and fanaticism. And if human reason brings forth poor thoughts and foolish thoughts and wild thoughts, as we must admit it often does, the cure for them is not to banish reason and to cease to inquire and to think, but to cultivate the reasoning faculty so that it shall think the more and better. The cure for bad thinking is to put good thinking in its place. You cannot get away from some kind of thinking. Life depends upon it finally, and takes its character from it. And if you do not have true thinking, you will have false thinking for life's sustenance. Superstition is only false thinking. Fanaticism is narrow and crude and unripe thinking. Cultivate, then, the human reason. Improve and nourish the power of thought. Broaden the knowledge of natural facts and of natural laws. This gives the basis and materials for thought. Study Nature, study humanity; study humanity in its past and its present conditions. Study it in its slow emergence from barbarism to civilization; its gradual rise from material and brute conditions of existence to a life of mental and moral activity. Note its sure conquest, amidst many experiences of bitter struggle and pain, of certain irrefragable laws of thought and of certain principles for the guidance of conduct and of certain mental perceptions of the truth of things, which, having once been gained, are never wholly lost, but remain afterwards as rounds in the ladder by which man continues to ascend to ever higher and truer perception and to larger opportunity. And see how in all this experience of struggle and conquest the Unseen Power has been everywhere at work by orderly processes for human progress and benefit.

And if it be said that even on the ground of natural religion, or of no religion at all, individual reason and conscience may set themselves up as superior to all other sovereignty, I reply, Yes, this claim may indeed be made; and that, in the reaction against the long ecclesiastical suppression of private judgment, there has come a perilous tendency to assert that the individual nature, in its own impulses, impressions, and attractions, is a law unto itself. But it is a claim that cannot stand for a moment in the light of rational philosophy. On this ground of natural religion, no assertion of a special and exceptional communication with divine power can be allowed, no claim to any infallible knowledge can be recognized. The divine purpose and law are communicated through faculties and perceptions that are the common property of mankind, and not through any special personal faculty that is above the ordinary tests of reason. On the supernatural theory, the private soul claims to have a special revelation of the will of God that is infallible, and it is very difficult for Protestant Christianity, with its allowance of private judgment, to meet and logically resist that claim. But on the natural and rational theory, there is no monopoly of divine revelation in any person or book or special race, and nowhere a pretence to any infallible vision of truth by any human soul. The divine purpose is made manifest in the education and progress of the whole race of humanity and not in the individual soul; or only in the individual soul so far as it is in healthy natural relationship with its kind. The divine commands come not through a personal private vision of truth and duty, but through those great principles of thought and conduct which are or may be the common possession of all men, and concerning which there is a common sense of obligation. The germs of these laws of thought and conduct appear in all men; but naturally they appear more clearly and completely in that portion of mankind where there is the highest degree of civilization and enlightenment.

We have, therefore, on the theory of natural and rational religion, a tribunal before which every individual claimant to some new perception of truth and duty must submit his claim for judgment. It is the court of universal reason and universal right, and its judgments in our human affairs are at any time pronounced by the aggregate consenting voice of the highest mental and moral intelligence which the human race has attained. There is a consensus of truth and morals which the experience of mankind has proved trustworthy, and which the individual violates at his peril. He who thinks most and best, he who thinks deepest and highest, is not one who is likely to fall into the conceit that the Infinite Being has imparted its secrets specially to him, or that the Divine Word has been exceptionally articulated in his consciousness. Rather is he one who looks for the most complete articulation of that Word in the maturest collective life and activity of all Nature and all humanity, and who will earnestly and reverently seek to be a true sharer in that life and a helper of humanity onward to larger light and to still richer and maturer life; for he will be one who will see also that the revealed is but a small part compared with the mysteries of truth yet undiscovered, and so he will walk, not as if he had already attained, but as still following after, knowing that this at least is required,—while he humbly follows, that he shall do justly and love mercy.—New Bedford Mercury, May 13.

[For THE INDEX.]

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

NO. XXXVI.—CONCLUDING ARTICLE.

We are now prepared for the promised brief synopsis of Apocalyptic drama.

The exordium occupies the first three chapters, and need not detain us. The first act opens with the fourth chapter, and, at bottom, pictures the old philosophies and pre-Christian attempt at the solution of the enigma of universal being, and its essential failure,—extending from the fourth to the end of the tenth chapter. The eleventh chapter is an interlude and introductory to the second act, which opens with the twelfth chapter, and pictures the Christian struggle and triumph.

The first scene in the opening of the fourth chapter is a throne set in heaven, occupied by the supreme God, surrounded by twenty-four seniors, a senate or conclave of wisdom, and the types of the superior animal world symbolizing the higher order of intelligence. It was the superior or spiritual quality of life which was to be represented; otherwise it would be reptiles, creeping things, fishes, insects (locusts, scorpions, etc.), which would have been selected.

At the beginning of the fifth chapter, the problem is propounded which the solemn conclave instituted in the first scene is looked to solve. By "the book written within and on the back side, and sealed with seven seals," the problem of the universe is intended. The rapt expectant witness grieved sore over the impossibility of solving or opening the book (v. 4.) So far everything is strictly hermetic, or belongs to the pre-Christian order of spiritual conceptions. But at this point the rush of Judaistic and more recent Christian thought floods the imagination of the writer. In a strictly logical sense, the allusions which follow, to the lion of the tribe of Judah, etc., should have been reserved for the second act, which is the properly Christian half of the drama; but from the religious and practical point of view, this anticipation of the ulterior form of the solution is not out of place (v. 5, 6, 7). The true hero of the whole glorious story having thus been, as it were, incidentally mentioned, the author dilates, through the remainder of this fifth chapter, on the cheers with which his presence was greeted. The new and strictly Jewish and Christian idea of God, as to his personality, is here interpolated within the hermetic conception, of the ineffable pure abstract and intellectual light which shines above and throughout the universe. "In the midst of the throne," etc., stood the martyred human God, filling, as it were, the place of the older conception, and introducing the touching sympathetic or personal element; and this individual, the Lamb, proceeds to preside over the dénouement, even of the first act,—which was strictly and logically pre-Christian. It was fidelity to the Christian conception to antedate in this manner: "Before Abraham was, I am."

In the sixth chapter, the hermetic conception is resumed, presided over merely by the Lamb. This chapter portrays the old Hindu and Neo-platonic idea of divine emanations, going out like a succession of waves from the throne of God, the first (inner or nearest the throne) being pure and divine, or wholly of the nature of God, and the subsequent ones (more and more remote) deteriorating by the admixture of evil, as of darkness with light, in the production of color. The first or inmost emanation is symbolized by a conquering rider upon a white horse (whiteness repeating the idea of pure light). This first of divine emanations is, preëminently, the Logos (ch. xix., v. 11); and so identified with the Lamb himself in another rôle. Three remaining emanations are then mentioned, in the order of their greater and greater departure from the divine type. The doctrine is a sublime one, and will ever remain true. The steps of deterioration are symbolized by the colors of the other three horses, red, black, and livid or pale. Hence, the warfare between the one horseman on the white horse and the powers of evil symbolized by the riders on the other three horses. This conflict occupies the attention of the writer on to the opening of the fourth seal (ch. vi., v. 7). With the opening of the fifth seal, further special pursuit of the doctrine of emanations is abandoned, and the conflict is pictured as going temporarily against the good powers, and in favor of the powers of evil (see The Revelation of John its own Interpreter, by John Cochran). With the opening of the sixth seal (v. 12), all is again changed, and the triumph of the good powers is represented. In the seventh chapter, the progress of the direct action of the drama is arrested to give space of time for gathering out the elect before the final execution of judgment upon the conquered world of evil. The ideas here are mixed, partly hermetic and partly Christian.

Then, in fine, comes the opening of the seventh seal: the episode of the (other) seven angel trumpeters; the further episode of the three woes, or distinct dispensations of evil; and, finally, that of the detention of the "four angels which are bound in the great river Euphrates," and which, as shown, are the reintroduction of the doctrine of emanations, and identical with the four horsemen. Finally, we are brought to the conclusion of this act in the tenth chapter: the preparation of the last mighty angel, of those commissioned to open the seals; his oath; the sudden interruption that occurred; and the collapse of the whole grand promise of hermetics, of philosophy, or of the subjective synthesis, to solve the enigma of being. All this has been elaborately set forth in the body of this exposition. The act closes with the handing forth and the eating up of the little book, "sweet in the mouth, but bitter in the belly"; the diminutive and disappointing outcome of the old doctrine.

The eleventh chapter of the Apocalypse is the prologue of the second act. There was first given to the acolyte of the new knowledge a measuring rod, a canon of criticism, a true method of judging and knowing, a necessary preparation for the new course of instruction about to be inaugurated. He was ordered to measure the temple of God, to take due notice of the subjective synthesis, and to neglect or put aside the objective synthesis, or the merely philosophical, secular, or profane method of interpretation (the outer court, the court of the Gentiles). Then are introduced "my two witnesses," the Lord speaking. These can be no other than the external and the internal evidences, or bodies of evidence, of the Christian system. These are to prophesy (or preach) a dreary while, in the sad earth, themselves "clothed in sackcloth." They are often, or from time to time ("time, times, and half a time" or "three days and a half") overcome (by adverse reasonings), and, as it were, killed outright, but still always, after a while, they revive and triumph.

The second act of the Apocalyptic drama opens with the twelfth chapter. The woman clothed with the sun, the Church, the glorified humanity of the future, is first presented, and associated with her divine son, science, or the scientific method, which it was intuitively fore-felt was to be the ultimate philosophy to be born of the Church. Scientific exactitude is "the rod of iron" with which he was and is "to rule the world." The hostile powers of evil are now arrayed, as the serpent, the dragon, and the beast, the three prevalent forms of the then dominant (false) philosophy. Accompanying and allied with these was Babylon, the false social system attendant upon and growing out of these mystery-loving false doctrines; and the false prophet as the perverted religious presentation of truth.

At the opening of the fourteenth chapter, the Lamb, that is to say the Lord, the same as the conquering rider on the white horse, surrounded by the Church, reappears, now in his right place, as the proper hero of the orderly development of the drama. The first announcement of the fall of Babylon immediately follows,—the announcement of an event the details of which are given considerably later. The hero of the drama again appears in the fourteenth verse of this fourteenth chapter, having on his head a golden crown and in his hand a sharp sickle. The metaphor is here changed, for the moment, and instead of a battle and a conquest we are introduced to a husbandman and a harvest.

At the opening of the fifteenth chapter, the action of the drama is interrupted and delayed in a manner quite similar to that in which the first act had interpolated into it the seven trumpeters charged with the heraldry of events; and here seven angels appear charged with pouring out the seven last plagues: that is to say, there is here again sketched symbolically, as an episode, the whole subversive career of humanity, as if divided into seven periods, each with some distinctive and characteristic feature.

With the opening of the sixteenth chapter, the previously announced subject of the destruction of Babylon, the old social polity or régime, is resumed, and the details are given. The harlot is introduced and identified with Babylon. The procedure here has been previously treated of with ample extension. The utter destruction of this old social order is vividly delineated in the eighteenth chapter, and up to the seventh verse of the nineteenth chapter. At this point the action changes. The coming marriage of the Lamb and the Lamb's wife, of the Lord and the Church, is announced. At the eleventh verse the same victor upon the white horse is shown as the coming bridegroom; and in the thirteenth verse (ch. xviii.) he is identified with logos or the purer reason.

Here occurs also another bold and striking change of the metaphor. He who was before presented as the son of the woman, who was to rule the world with a rod of iron, is now to be the husband instead of the son. He is the king of kings and lord of lords. Then comes the heraldic proclamation of invitation to all spirits, "all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven" ("birds of every feather"), to be present at the marriage supper of the great God, and "to eat of the flesh," that is, partake of the substance, of the evil and vanquished party.

Again (v. 19), we recur to the idea of an outbreak of the war; but the contest, this time, is a mere émeute; and almost immediately (v. 20) the final conquest is announced and the destiny of the enemy proclaimed. Then follows the deep philosophical episode touching the two kinds of death and the two kinds of resurrection, which has been already sufficiently expounded.

Finally, in the twenty-first and twenty-second chapters, we have the dénouement of the second act, in the ultimate and complete triumph and permanent establishment of the new social order. The New Jerusalem, the true humanity, is now identified with the Church and with the wifehood of the bride of the Lord (v. 9, 10). From this point out, and in everything which relates to the new city or commonwealth, the ultimate celestialty, the perfection of social existence, the number 12, the celestial number, with its higher powers, abounds (ch. xxi., v. 12). Even the 4-ness of the 3 within the 12 disinfects and sanctifies the 3 (v. 13). The allusion to the 12-foldness of the foundations probably signifies the occult presence of those principles of truth in the old order which are finally brought to light and established in the new.

Then follows the formal admeasurement and scientific appreciation of the new order (v. 15, 16).

Observe the rare and incomprehensible shape, except as symbolic of the city,—that of an exact cube,—the third morphic power of exact rectification,—the prevalence of universal justice and equity  $12 \times 12 \times 12 = 1728$ , numerically the third power of this celestial or chief sacred number 12. And "the wall thereof," the surface presentation, the phenomenality thereof, was  $12 \times 12 = 144$  (cubits), the second morphic and numeric powers, respectively; which, it is added, is "the measure of a man,"—that is, of an angel (or the perfect or typical man). Felt and Page, art critics, are discovering that these numbers actually rule throughout the domain of art anatomy. Man is himself, in some sense, a surface manifestation of phenomenality on a base of universal substance (which last is the God-idea of Spinoza). And so man divinized, made angelic, has now (by this symbolism), in a secondary degree, this culminative sacred number ( $12 + 12$ ) as his note, type, or harmonic signature; whereas, the designative number of man in his natural or unredeemed state was that accursed number 666 (ch. xiii., v. 18), the third degree of the duplication of 3, the ruling sinister number or note of the domination of evil (the measure of a man,—that is, of a devil). Thus it is that God and man in his highest estate are so identified that the same Lord is appropriately denominated either "the Son of God" or "the Son of Man."

The twelve foundations of the city, another illustration by twelve varieties of precious stones, are in part too obscure and in part too much a matter of detail to demand attention here. So of the twelve gates, each of which was an entire pearl. But the following statement (ch. xxi., v. 22) is perhaps the most pregnant and important utterance of the whole Apocalypse: "And I saw no temple therein; for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it." The temple is the indubitable symbol and all-embracing epitome of organized religious culture or worship. Whether taken, therefore, as an abstraction of truths or as a literal prophecy, the announcement here made is that, in the ultimate divinized order of human society, the formalities of religion will have fallen into complete disuse; that the Church, as a distinct institution charged with the evangelization and religious training of the world, will be functio officio,—will have performed her office and have ceased to exist; the Church as the bride of the Lord then having come to mean the whole of humanity, so divinely illuminated from the highest sources of knowledge that the primary school of spiritual instruction, which the Church was, shall be no longer needed. This startling statement embodies the lost word of pure rationalism. On that basis, rationalism and ecclesiasticism may clasp hands and become reconciled; for it is in the purview of both that provisional adaptations to an imperfect order of things shall supersede themselves. The medical profession and the legal profession, as well as the priesthood, will have exhausted the necessity of their existence when all men shall have become healthy, just, and natively wise and good. Fontanelle, giving instructions to the tutor of the dauphin of France, wrote thus: "Use your best endeavors to make yourself useless." Or, otherwise conceived and stated, to be made kings and priests of this new and divinized order of man is to become truly enlightened individuals, with the capacity for the fulfilment of all the offices of life, dispensing with the further use of provisional priests and tutors. And so, the further elaboration of this culminative conception of the ultimate redemption and perfection of our total humanity continues to the end; for by the doctrine of the ultimate extinction of evil, the crowning metaphysic of the Apocalypse, the wicked are as essentially justified as the good. The best have no title to exult in their goodness, over the worst; and all are alike saved in the second resurrection.

IN MORALS—PRIVATE JUDGMENT OR COMMON CONSENT?

An exceedingly good argument can be framed for either side of the question concerning private judgment versus universal consent, as the umpire in morals. If one selects only the striking examples which may illustrate either side, facts enough may be accumulated to make a strong case,—a case so strong, indeed, that it is impossible that it should be wholly without validity.

For example, if one would plead for the right of private judgment, and would show the private conscience to be the sole and absolute guide of judgment and action, some of the most glorious examples in history at once present themselves. Every great leader of action and founder of a religion, every moralist of a nobler type than his fellows, was and must have been one who went forward alone, leading and commanding because he was first "lord of himself,"—living apart from the multitude who breathe only in the air of tradition and walk only in the paths of conventionality. Originality means peculiarity, individualism of thought and action. The reformer, the pioneer, the martyr, step out from the ranks and lead, because they can go alone. Every leader of men whose influence has endured has secured the advance of his followers by summoning them to allegiance to their own convictions. What else can fortify the courage of the patriot leading a forlorn hope? What else can give the lonely reformer serenity and confidence when his cause finds no supporter and his truth no believer? What but this supreme confidence in his own convictions could ever have nerved any man to doubt the tenets of an outgrown religion, to defy the power of the gods and the more deadly hate of their devotees? In art, science, literature, morals, and religion, great names may be cited to show how individual protests and private judgment have reformed the world.

But, on the other hand, they who believe that the sound utterances of the moral nature are of universal import will argue with equal force and not less ample illustration that no sporadic case can make a law, and that the test of truth is found in its fitness and adaptation to the common nature. They will show us that the test of hallucination is that in a given case others do not and cannot see that which seems to some one an indubitable perception. The annals of fanaticism, of misguided heroism, of misleading and perverted genius, of intense conviction leading to unmitigated disaster, furnish many a lurid warning of the dangers of trusting to the dictates of the private conscience in opposition to the common sense of mankind. The many are wiser than any one. The collective experience of humanity is a safer guide than the private interpretation of any soul, however honest and intense. The great moral facts which have been accepted by the world have been verified by ages of experience, tested in innumerable exigencies, and accepted by the common conscience. In regard to the exceptional leaders, the reformers, the pioneers, the patriots and martyrs who are cited as instances of the supreme authority of the private conscience, the answer is that they did not announce their own private judgments, but they made and announced discoveries of that which was a part of the universal order, capable of being verified by all men who should look at the facts and the evidence for themselves. Or, if they neglected the wise canon that "no prophecy is of private interpretation," and attempted to impose upon themselves or the world a rule of conduct opposed to the common sense and the common conscience of their fellows, they speedily met a fate which showed the folly of their course.

These two diverse positions are not irreconcilable if we consider only the facts, disregarding the inferences of the disputants. Nothing is binding in morals but universal law. But how is the law to be perceived, except through the action of the individual will and conscience? The facts of experience show two things with perfect distinctness: Mistakes have been made by the most pure-hearted, unselfish, and high-minded men who walked by the light of their private consciences; mistakes have also been made by the common sense and common conscience of mankind, opposing the pure and the just. Infallibility does not lodge in human nature. Progress implies passage from imperfection and error. Mankind achieves some new power of moral perception, perceives new relations, shapes a new and better moral code, and then rests content to guard what it has won. But some soul of clearer vision or finer sense of right sees defect and limitation; or, what is the same to him, he thinks he sees them. Then begins a struggle the end of which will be the ascertainment of the truth. But his honesty will not insure his victory, nor will the world's certainty make his defeat inevitable.

What, then, is the rule of conscience? Which is to be trusted, private judgment or the common conviction? Neither alone. If one becomes possessed with any idea which seems to him of new and pressing importance, and, consulting with his fellows of equal intelligence and opportunity to know the truth, he finds them blind to what he sees and indignant at what he esteems right, let him suspect himself of disordered functions or imperfect perceptions. On the other hand, if the multitude sees one who seems in other respects wiser and purer than they, but who in some particular contemns their law and disobeys their code, let them pause before they deny the possibility of his perceiving that which their own organs are not yet fitted to see.

When we study carefully the exceptional men who have led the advance of humanity by disregarding its conventional moralities, we do not find in them, after all, anything which was so peculiar to them that it was not capable of instant or gradual test and verification by others of their own time and place. No man whose thoughts have outlived him can be cited who did not find recognition for his truth among the men of his own time; else we should never have known him or his truth.

Commonly,—and this is a point never to be forgotten in discussing this question,—the issue between the one and the many has not been the validity of the laws the one affirmed, but a question of expediency, a difference in the willingness to take the consequences of accepting new truth when the acceptance was equivalent to an assault upon old institutions and vested interests. Commonly, no truth is ever announced in any department of life until ample preparation has been made for it, until many signs have foretold its coming, and many minds have become expectant, or at least have seen that some new statement is needed to explain known facts. When in the fulness of time the new thought comes, it is recognized and welcomed by enough sane minds to prove that it is no hallucination. Then follows the inevitable strife. The leaders of the world's progress have not been men who saw what no one else could see, but those who dared when others failed, who went forward when others fell back, who were true when others were false. But such men, knowing they were right, never yet failed of testimony which corroborated their private vision of truth. Given freedom of thought and speech, and no man ever goes out absolutely alone without going to a merited destruction; and no multitude by unanimous consent ever rejects the message of a true prophet or puts a righteous man to death for obedience to any article of the universal law to which all are blind but himself. All truth which seems to be absolutely new and opposed to all previous experience and belief can be held as absolutely true only by a misguided enthusiast. A sane mind will accept it provisionally as an hypothesis to be examined by other minds, to be tested by experience, and finally to be discarded as a fancy if it does not fulfill the conditions, or to be enrolled as a truth when it has made its credentials clear. All of which follows from the necessary laws of thought, or from the fact that reason is one thing in all minds,—the light that lighteth every man.—Christian Register, May 24.

NOT INDIVIDUALISM.

The skirmish over the phrase "the Consensus of the Competent," lately carried on in THE INDEX and elsewhere, touches the purpose of Unity. Some critics see in the phrase an attack on the rights of the individual. W. H. Spencer, in his criticism, says: "I am so much of an individualist that, should there come a conflict between my own conscience and the conscience of the 'Consensus,' I must obey the dictates of my own conscience, come what will. Even though I should find myself in a minority of one, I should stand by my principle, and shout with Frederick Douglass, 'One with God is a majority,' and I am that one! On this point, Mr. Abbot would agree with me." Probably, and all other men of free and ardent natures, too. So also, when Mr. Spencer would resist, with "seven-shooter" logic, the communist and free-lover who invade his domain, and says, "If the adulterer or communist tells me that he is sincere and obeying the dictates of his own conscience, I reply 'So am I,' " wise men would probably applaud him.

But surely, in attacking this invader of his farm and family, Mr. Spencer is attacking "individualism" rather than the "Consensus." History shows us that the rights in farms and families are a social growth, rooted in the "Consensus of the Competent." And even though this "Consensus" does, before it becomes competent, threaten Galileo and burn Servetus, as the critics are mirthfully showing, still social security and civilization rest upon its growth. The "competent" increase with education, and their "Consensus" is ever widening and growing more just. We care little for the phrase, but its principle, as Mr. Abbot says, lies "at the very foundation of republican government and institutions." "Individualism has no future in America; and if liberalism harnesses to its car this ill-omened steed, it too will have no future." Especially when individualism begins to encourage crime and vice, the "Consensus" has a right to speak with authority. In those vigorous words from "Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity," of which a correspondent of THE INDEX again reminds us: "If Freedom does not like it, let her go and sit on the heights self-gathered in her prophet mind, and send the fragments of her mighty voice rolling down the wind. She will be better employed in spouting poetry on the rocks of the Matterhorn than in patronizing vice on the flags of the Haymarket." We believe in Freedom, but not less in the Fellowship and Character implied in the "Consensus of the Competent."

Since the above was written, the report of Mr. Frothingham's farewell address to his society came. He thought "the era of individualism is drawing to its close. The time is coming when affiliation with each other and communion together will establish new modes of filling the wants and aspirations of the soul. It seems to me that the world is on the verge of an era when organization will be invoked to work out our problems; that the era of destruction has passed by, and the era of reconstruction is dawning; that the pulling down has been done, and the current of human progress is setting in the direction of building up, helping each other, producing new institutions." He referred to "the spirit of organization manifest everywhere. He had lately sat in a parlor with a rector of Grace Church on one side of him, and the minister of the Society for Ethical Culture on the other, and they had all put the little wisdom of their heads together to devise ways to ameliorate the condition of the poor in this city, scarcely recollecting that they were all sworn enemies on Sunday. He saw in these things one of the many signs of the times. He was not prepared to say what the creed of this new organization would be, but he had read enough and pondered enough to know that social science was busy harmonizing, and to believe that the time was near when all these elements would come together upon an unassailable intellectual basis."—Chicago Unity, May 18.

THE FUNERAL OF EBON C. INGERSOLL.

AN ORATION BY COLONEL ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.—NO OTHER CEREMONIES.

WASHINGTON, June 2.

The body of the late Ebon C. Ingersoll was interred here to-day in the beautiful Oak Hill Cemetery, in the midst of a severe thunder-storm.

The peculiar opinions which the deceased and his brother held concerning all systems of revealed religion, the fact that no clergyman was permitted to officiate, and that the services were conducted by Mr. Robert G. Ingersoll, will not fail to attract attention to the funeral and to the services connected with it. Robert G. Ingersoll, as has been his custom hitherto when death has occurred in his own immediate family, performed the funeral ceremony. To-day he rose beside the coffin, at the residence, to do for his dead brother that which many years ago he did for his own child, and which his brother had promised to do for him. Grief had nearly overcome the orator, and as he stood beside the coffin to perform the services, his voice was so choked with emotion that it was almost impossible to hear. He said:—

"My friends, I am going to do that which the dead oft promised he would do for me. The lovely and loving brother, husband, father, friend, died where manhood's morning almost touches noon and while the shadows still were falling toward the west. He had not passed on life's highway the stone that marks the highest point; but being weary for a moment he laid down by the wayside, and, using his burden for a pillow, fell into that dreamless sleep that kisses down his eyelids still. While yet in love with life and raptured with the world, he passed to silence and pathetic dust.

"Yet, after all, it may be best, just in the happiest, sunniest hour of all the voyage, while eager winds are kissing every sail, to dash against the unseen rock and in an instant hear the billows roar above a sunken ship. For whether in mid sea or 'mong the breakers of the farther shore, a wreck must mark at last the end of each; and all and every life, no matter if its every hour is rich with love and every moment jewelled with a joy, will at its close become a tragedy as sad and deep and dark as can be woven of the warp and woof of mystery and death.

"This brave and tender man in every storm of life was oak and rock, but in the sunshine he was vine and flower. He was the friend of all heroic souls. He climbed the heights and left all superstitions far below, while on his forehead fell the golden dawning of a grander day. He loved the beautiful, and was with color, form, and music touched to tears. He sided with the weak, and with a willing hand gave alms with loyal heart, and with the purest hands he faithfully discharged all public trusts. He was a worshipper of liberty, a friend of the oppressed. A thousand times I have heard him quote these words, 'For justice all place a temple, and all seasons summer.' He believed that happiness was the only good, reason the only torch, justice the only worship, humanity the only religion, and love the only priest. He added to the sum of human joy; and were every one for whom he did some loving service to bring a blossom to his grave, he would sleep to-night beneath a wilderness of flowers.

"Life is a narrow vale between the cold and barren peaks of two eternities. We strive in vain to look beyond the heights. We cry aloud, and the only answer is the echo of our wailing cry. From the voiceless lips of the unreplying dead there comes no word, but in the night of death hope sees a star, and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing. He who sleeps here, when dying, mistaking the approach of death for the return of health, whispered with his latest breath, 'I am better now.' Let us believe, in spite of doubts and dogmas and tears and fears, that these dear words are true of all the countless dead. And now to you who have been chosen from among the many men he loved to do the last sad office for the dead, we give his sacred dust. Speech cannot contain our love. There was, there is, no gentler, stronger, manlier man."

The ceremonies were extremely simple, consisting merely of this oration and the viewing of the remains by the relatives and friends at his residence. Among the gentlemen present at the residence were Secretary Sherman, Assistant-Secretary Hawley, Senator Blaine, Senator Voorhees, Senator Paddock, Senator Allison, and Senator Logan, Thomas Henderson, Governor Pound, William M. Morrison, General Jeffries, General Williamson, and Colonel James Fishback. The pall-bearers were Senators Blaine, Voorhees, David Davis, Paddock and Allison, Col. Ward H. Lamont, Jeremiah Wilson, of Indiana, and Thomas A. Boyd, of Illinois.

There were no ceremonies whatever at the grave, but a pathetic scene occurred when the Misses Lawler, daughters of the late General Lawler and adopted children of Ebon C. Ingersoll, to whom they were devotedly attached, took their last leave of their dead foster-father. One of them fainted in being taken to her carriage, and the other lingered at the grave until almost forcibly led away by her friends.—N. Y. Tribune.

ATAVISM IN MORALS.

In this age of ours, with all its wonderful achievements and advancements, there are resurrections of ancient superstitions and barbarisms. Mormonism invites us to adopt the polygamous customs out of which morality and religion lifted us; and thousands have accepted the invitation, and are now living in the barbarous past. Another class of persons arose, a few years ago, defending one of the saddest characteristics of ancient savage life, the doctrine of free love; and they are still prosecuting their foul work, denying the necessity of sexual fidelity and purity, and lauding licentiousness, passion, and whim. Some people go for advice to persons that, owing to cerebral weakness and disease, are in the habit of falling into abnormal conditions. They receive the utterances of these abnormal individuals as divine and almost infallible. If we study those persons who accept and live the doctrines of Mormonism, free love, or necromancy, we shall find, in many instances, that they are rational in other respects. It is so with those, or many of those, whom we usually judge insane. They also, if we abstract their thoughts from their peculiar delusions to other subjects, think and act in a rational manner.—Rev. J. S. Thompson, in "Unity."

"I HEZ long bin of de 'plinyun,' began Penstock, as he secured the floor, "dat de holidays of this kentry come too much in a lump. F'rinstance, Thanksgiving, Christmas, an' New Year's pile in on us in a heap, almos', an' we hev chicken, goose, an' turkey till de eye grows dim an' de frost fills up. Den comes a skip of six months afore de Fo'th July; am ushered in wid de roar of cannon an' de whoop of de small boy. It's like payin' a hull y'ar's rent in advance, instead of scatterin' it long in ten or twelve payments. As far as my infloence goes, I shell give it to consolidate dese cold-wedder holidays into one, to be called 'Thankschrisyear' an' to set it ahead to January 1st."

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

BOUND TO THE WHEEL.

Must I grind in this prison forever,
No respite from morn till night?
Shall I never again, oh, never,
Commune with the spirits of light
That dwell by the crystalline river
Which flows by the Silylline height—
Which sings by the Silylline height?

I sigh for that region romantic,
Far away from the turmoil and strife
Of cities that render men frantic
In a desperate struggle for life;
For 'tis here that ambition gigantic
Cuts into the heart like a knife,
Lies cold on the heart like a knife.

There Beauty sits throned in glory,
The bards kiss her brow and adore,
Then tell to the world the sweet story
That millions repeat evermore;
The youth and the patriarch hoary
Bend over the musical lore,
Never tire of the mystical lore.

It is there the perpetual graces,
Inhabiting bowers of bliss,
Give welcome to wearisome faces
That 'scape from a region like this,—
A world in whose gaudiest places
The serpent is sure to hiss,
The black-crested serpent will hiss.

I know now the fate of Ixion
As I never could know it before;
And under the eyes of Orion,—
Storm-bound on a desolate shore,—
Or under the paws of the Lion,
I sigh for the sorrows he bore;
I know, too, what Slayphas bore.

Must I grind in this dungeon forever?
Will the day of release never dawn?
Come, spirits of light, and deliver
My soul which I ventured to pawn.
Oh, bear us away to the river
That flows by the Silylline lawn,
The Sylph-haunted Silylline lawn.

GEORGE MARTIN.

MONTREAL.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N. B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 14.

George Lewis, $2; W. D. Corken, M.D., $3; A. W. Kelley, $4; Castle Baker, $2; Rev. D. Saxfield, $3.20; F. H. Lathrop, $1.60; I. F. Wilson, $1.50; Henry Pratt, $3.20; Charles Coventry, $3.20; Wm. A. Abbot, $3; J. L. Otis, $3; A. A. Hubbard, M.D., $1; Mrs. Anna E. Burr, $3.20; Joseph Knight, $3.20; J. S. Palmer, $3.20; E. W. Hopkins, $3.2; Dr. J. J. Dunlop, $3.20; A. L. Whitcomb, $1.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 19, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 36 Monroe Street; J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERNEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE BUREAU, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases; i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

EDITORIAL NOTICE.

About the middle of June I shall be obliged to sail for the Azores, in order to accompany an invalid member of my family, and shall probably be absent three months. During that time my friend, Mr. David H. Clark, will edit THE INDEX. All literary communications should be addressed to him, and all business letters to Mr. H. P. Hyde, at this office. Letters addressed to me personally must remain unopened till my return. Attention to these directions will save annoyance to correspondents.

F. E. ABBOT.

June 3, 1879.

THE TRINITY OF FREE RELIGION.

If this were to be the last word we were ever to contribute to THE INDEX, we could leave to our known and unknown friends no simpler "confession of faith," no sincerer epitome of the thought which has been the life of our life, than this:—

"I believe in TRUTH, in RIGHTeousNESS, and in LOVE; and I believe that these three are one.

"I believe that truth is the supreme good of the human intellect, and that thirst for it is the grandest passion that can dignify a human life. Wealth, power, fame, pleasure, station,—all the prizes of men's ambition are as the dust of the balance in comparison with it. The soul which in singleness of devotion lives for it may be fated to lose much, but will gain unspeakably more. To seek and win truth simply for the enlargement of one's own being is noble; but to seek it and win it for the enlargement of all human being, by adding to the world's permanent treasures of knowledge, is sublime. He who pursues truth for its utilities alone is an intellectual plebeian, and plays the part of the fortune-hunter who courts an heiress for the sake of her dowry; but he who pursues it for its own sake, without so much as a side-thought for its utilities, proves himself thereby to be a king of magnificent minds. To such as this, and to no mercenary or vulgar soul, does Science trace her pedigree; and Science is the avatar of Truth.

"I believe that righteousness is the supreme good of the human conscience, and that hunger for it is the passion for life according to truth. Righteousness is conformity in word and deed, in thought and affection, with that uncreated law of right which is the foundation of the moral universe. What this law is, intellect alone declares; instructed or uninstructed, intellect is the sole teacher, director, and guide of conscience. The ideal of righteousness, born of intellect and conscience both, commands the human soul with all the authority of eternal truth; it shines above all the temptations, struggles, and sorrows of life, as the polar star set on high by Nature herself, to guide the tossed mariner to the haven of virtue. The universal experience has formed the universal conscience of mankind, which transmits it to the individual with the solemn obligation to exalt it if he can, but never to debase it; and the individual must acquit himself of this high obligation not only before his own personal conscience, but also before the conscience universal.

"I believe that love is the supreme good of the human heart, and that longing for it is the divine beautifier of human life, the sole and inexhaustible fountain of human happiness. It is not free, but subject to the eternal law of truth and righteousness. If it rebels against and defies the undivided authority of this law, it drags the soul down into fathomless degradation, and quenches the very pole-star of the ideal itself. Intellect and conscience, interpreting this law, are clothed with all its authority over the heart, whose promptings they should guide, though they do not and cannot originate. To love and to be loved in accordance with truth and righteousness is the supreme blessedness of the individual soul; and the universal diffusion of such love, as universal peace on earth and good-will to man, is the ideal goal of human society. But the possibility of reaching this goal depends on the world's fidelity to the law of truth and righteousness; it is unattainable on other terms. Only by such fidelity can either the individual or the world climb to the sublime heights of love for Nature and communion with her infinite and ineffable life.

"I believe that, just as the intellect, the conscience, and the heart are one in Man, so truth, righteousness, and love are one in Nature, the Mother of Man. Truth, when found, is knowledge; righteousness, when attained, is virtue; love, when realized, is happiness. These three—knowledge, virtue, and happiness—are indissolubly blended as the single, yet triple, end of life; and it is a melancholy mutilation of this triune end to take a part for the whole. Nothing less than the symmetrical development of human nature and the full and equal satisfaction of it in its fundamental triplicity of intellectual, moral, and emotional wants,—in brief, the highest possible perfection of it in both individual and social aspects,—can stand as the complete object of Free Religion. When this object is attained,—when the individual in his character and life, and when society in its laws, institutions, and usages, are alike grounded on Truth, Righteousness, and Love,—then will this little human world of ours mirror the divine beauty and serene peace of universal Nature, and joyfully worship the Trinity of Free Religion."

"ANNIVERSARY WEEK."

This venerable week was unusually rich this year in real, earnest discussion of great principles, as well as in enthusiastic zeal and tender feeling. The Woman Suffrage Convention was animated with new spirit by the substantial victories for the cause gained in New Hampshire and Massachusetts; and all the speakers showed a genial readiness to rejoice in the half loaf, and work rather than fight for that yet to be gained. Mrs. Livermore especially spoke with a broad, generous, poetic comprehension of the whole subject, as well as with a refinement and beauty never surpassed by her.

The sadness of Mr. Garrison's loss deepened the moral feeling of every meeting. The funeral services were wonderfully impressive. It seemed as if two generations brought the results of their whole lives, confessing him to have been their leader and crowning him with honor. Around the bier gathered the old men with silver hair who had borne the heat and burden of the day by his side, and serving as ushers were the sons, ready to take up the flag, and work or fight as duty called for the same rights and justice which had inspired his life. The mental and moral power concentrated in that place, and uttered by such voices as Wendell Phillips, Theodore Weld, Samuel May, Samuel Johnson, and Lucy Stone, seemed indeed enough to regenerate a nation.

On Thursday evening the business meeting of the Free Religious Association was animated, and discussed points in the management of the society freely and thoroughly.

The Convention on Friday proved how much active thought and eager zeal is enlisted in this cause; and the very great differences of opinion, fearlessly expressed, show what scope and freedom are constant with union.

Mr. Chadwick made a long, careful, and thoughtful statement of the utilitarian doctrine, that the true standard of morals is the greatest good of the greatest number. I could not accept his conclusions, and I felt that he was (unintentionally) unjust to the transcendentalist. I think no statement of the doctrine of a school is fair which that school would not recognize as its own. Its logical or practical consequences may not be seen or felt by its advocates, or its relations to other views; but at least one has a right to state his own views, and I certainly did not recognize the doctrine of absolute right and a higher law, as Mr. Chadwick expressed it, as that which inspired us in the words of Emerson and Theodore Parker. That the higher law and the absolute right will ultimately produce the greatest good of the greatest number because it will produce the good of all, is our faith; but the transcendentalist affirms a possibility of perception of moral truth and universal law which is a surer guide to the conscience than an estimate of utility which is a matter of judgment and experience.

Garrison denounced slavery because it was wrong, not because it was harmful. Emerson said: "I must not disdain to show the political economist that it is harmful also." The transcendentalist maintains that there is a sense of right inherent in the soul to which you can appeal in educating the child to speak the truth or be just and kind to his playmates, long before you can show him that these qualities work well for the happiness of mankind in general. But he does not claim that this will act infallibly,—only that by listening to it it will become "clearer and clearer"; it does not dictate the form of the act, it only inspires the motive.

Equally untrue to my thought was the leading principle of Mr. Savage's address, that religion has no essential connection with morality. This seems to me one of the most dangerous doctrines of the Catholic and Calvinistic churches, whose baneful effects we see wherever they bear sway over an ignorant population. If you narrow religion down to the mere idea of propitiatory worship with all its superstitious accompaniments, as Mr. Savage appeared to do, this statement might be true; although man very early rises even out of this into the idea that, after all, good deeds are the best means of propitiating the gods, as we see in the Hebrew Scriptures: "This is the part that I have chosen, to loose the bands of wickedness," etc. But if religion is our word for the inspiring inward principle of life,—whether coming from love to God, as the theist expresses it, or from the unity of the race, as the positivist claims, or if we call it the "effort of man to perfect himself," or "the relation of the finite to the infinite, or the individual to the universal,"—in short, if we use the word in any such broad, noble sense as makes it appropriate to the Free Religious Association, and as

I believe it rightfully bears, its natural and inevitable expression seems to me to be in good morals, as well as in all beauty, sweetness, and delight and joy in life. Religious feeling will not necessarily produce right thinking or right acting in morals, because intellectual development, wisdom, judgment are needed fully to develop the application of principles to life; but that they are thoroughly correlated and help each the other, seems to me the great essential truth which we find at the centre of all noble forms of religion. The Catholic and the Calvinist only give it up when they speak as priests to build up the Church, but not in their best and most spontaneous utterances. The teachings of Jesus, of Buddha, of the old Hebrew Scriptures, of Socrates, of Confucius, are full of it. It is astonishing to see how it rises up in the hearts of even those ignorant negroes who have been most misled by the teachings of a corrupt Christianity, and who do think religion is a charm to keep off the devil's claws. Even the children who thought a man might be religious and lie and steal stopped when it came to murder.

The lovely sweetness and religious feeling of Mr. Tiffany's natural anecdotes were very welcome after these two addresses which taxed the brain to disentangle the truth and error mingled in their statements.

The address of the President, Mr. Adler, was a masterpiece of thought and eloquence. Whatever discussion may arise as to carrying out the practical measures he suggested, the audience were taken captive by the earnestness of his convictions, the zeal with which he advocated active work for the progress of humanity, and his plea for the highest culture as the best preparation to do a good work for the people. It was the old inspiration of the Hebrew with the broad liberality of the new time, and, spoken in that place, we almost felt as if the bust of Theodore Parker must open its lips and cry amen.

Mr. Abbot followed with hearty endorsement of his discourse [and additions of his own], and Mr. Mills, whose fine scholarship and beautiful spirit have given a great charm to the meeting, made the closing speech.

The festival in the evening was very numerously attended, and the social enjoyment of meeting friends who had been listening to the same inspiring voices through the day was very great. On the platform was the new bust of Mr. Emerson by Mr. Millmore, kindly loaned by him, and one of Mr. Stearns by Mr. Morse, and of Mr. Garrison by Miss Whitney. It was a great pleasure to see again the grand head of that generous philanthropist, Mr. Stearns, which Mr. Morse has given with great vividness and truth to life. Especially touching, from his recent departure, was the bust of Mr. Garrison, which many of his old friends saw for the first time, and with great delight. We deeply regretted that Mr. Morse's noble bust of John Weiss was not sufficiently finished to place on the platform; a crayon portrait supplied its place.

It was a pain to many that Mr. Parton so far misunderstood the spirit of the occasion as to make a long speech, violently and sneeringly attacking what is dear as life to many of his hearers. The festival was not meant for discussion, but for fellowship and enjoyment. Mr. Parton has an entire right to his opinions and the expression of them, and in open and free discussion they would probably have justified themselves much more fully than there; but their expression in the form he chose marred the artistic harmony of the evening and left little time for anything else. Freedom has its inconveniences, but we must be patient with them and with all the freedom of the Association. This is, we believe, the only time that a jarring note has been heard at the festival, whose special part in the exercises of the day is to develop that fellowship of the spirit which was one of the objects of the Association to promote. In spite of all, it was a rich Anniversary week, leaving us thankful for many things, and among others, as we sank to much-needed repose, that it comes only once a year.

E. D. C.

A DENUNCE.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I did not mean to say another word about "individualism." But, if I understand your "seven ethical laws of rationalism," your first law carries the right of acting in obedience to private judgment or individual reason considerably further than I would like to carry it. It affirms that "every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his [or herself by her?] own reason in all his [or her?] individual concerns." I go so far as to assert that society has no right to interfere with the individual who is governing himself by his own reason in his own concerns, and with which society has no concern, or no cause to complain of actual injury to it. But I cannot see that this justifies the individual in doing everything which he thinks right without regard to the opinions or sentiments of others. I think he can refrain from doing much which he thinks right without violating duty. He cannot do what he thinks wrong without violating his conscience, and it is his duty to keep his conscience void of offence. If it is a man's duty to go to the full length of his rights, to take all that is due to him, it seems to me we must have a rather hard-favored state of society. Where then will be the right to praise a great deal of the self-denial which is ranked among the virtues? If I could accept your law, I do not see why I should not endorse the doctrines of Mr. Heywood's tract, which brought about the unfortunate fissure in the Liberal League. But while I am ready to vindicate his right to publish it, I cannot believe it was his duty, considering the prevalent sentiments on the subject. All I have to say is, that society had no right to punish him. In doing so it wronged itself exceedingly, even if it did not wrong him. I do not understand him to teach that parents have any right to violate their promises to each other, or to neglect or throw on the public the children they bring into the world, but that with their natural self-government society has no concern. And so far as penal law is concerned, I think he is right; and so far as your law is concerned, if I understand it. But in view of the most enlightened morality, I think he is wrong. There is a wiser and better thing to do.

The first head or section of your seventh law concedes all the "individualism" for which I have ever contended. It leaves moral suasion as the only means of promoting individual virtue, the only instrumentality left to the Church when it is separated from the State.

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

ST. PAUL, June 8, 1879.

[We leave it to our readers to observe for themselves, without any aid of ours, the important points on which our respected friend has failed to understand our statements. Being on the eve of a three months absence, we cheerfully yield to him the privilege of the last word.—ED.]

SOCIETY OF ETHICAL CULTURE.

ITS THIRD ANNIVERSARY EXERCISES.

The cause of liberalism in New York has entered upon a state of suspended animation which will be prolonged for some months to come. Its two illustrious representatives and their societies rest from their labors. Fortunately the Society of Ethical Culture resumes its activities at the beginning of autumn, and Mr. Frothingham's, let us trust, will eventually regather its forces, without loss, after its more extended vacation, for even more strenuous exertion, potent and salutary influence, than before.

The outlook of the Society for Ethical Culture, at the close of the third year of its existence, is exceedingly cheering. The past one, like the two preceding, has been distinguished by solid, vigorous growth and encouraging prosperity. One hundred names have been added to its list of members, making the aggregate three hundred and fifty. Its congregations have largely expanded beyond its place of meeting. On every Sunday, of late, many have found it impossible to obtain an entrance, thus rendering a new hall an indispensable requisite for the future. At Chickering's, where the society will come together in the fall, it will find better accommodations. It is more central as to location, popular, attractive, and desirable every way.

In his closing discourse Professor Adler reviewed the work of the year, thus presenting a summary exhibit of the methods and principles which had been involved in carrying it forward.

As a preliminary to the end in view, the theological basis of morals was first submitted to critical revision and discarded, it being shown to be historically untrue and philosophically untenable. The utilitarian system was next examined. Its merits were conceded, and its failures as a guide to moral conduct pointed out. The defectiveness of sympathy as a principle of ethics was then considered. The foundation of morality was seen to be law, and the moral law the highest expression of law.

These generalizations were resolved into two groups of duties. One of these included those toward ourselves. The other toward our fellow-men. Among the former, that of veracity had received particular attention. Instances were supposed of complicated obligations and motives, and the difficulties recognized of determining in such instances the true course of action, reviving the old question, "Is a lie ever justifiable?"

Among the duties pertaining to others, that of labor for the extermination of pauperism had been advocated. This, the Professor declared, was the great practical work in which free-religious societies must engage. The social question, he contended, must be thoroughly and fearlessly discussed. None but moral teachers of a high order could have the courage essential to deal with such problems, to expose the wrongs that actually exist, and enunciate the demands of justice in clear and irresistible accents. We need free-religious teachers after the manner of Isaiah and Jesus.

It will readily be seen, upon an inspection of the preceding outline of the field of discussion embraced in the course of discourses by Professor Adler just closed, that they differ from those of most public speakers on Sunday in this particular: They are not, as is common in such cases, a series of desultory and unrelated subjects. They are rather all-essential to the evolution of a pervading ultimate aim. Each discussion takes its place in the logical order of a larger discussion, assumes a necessary part in a completed system of thought or philosophy.

Among the auxiliaries needed for the advancement and practical application of these principles through the power of liberalism, the Professor mentioned a vigorous, well-sustained, and comprehensive organ of the movement. He also spoke of a school established, and appropriately planned, for the education or training of efficient leaders and teachers. This he thought could not be supplied by any existing institution devoted to a similar purpose. They were all more or less complicated with traditional systems and modes of thought. The Professor would have one absolutely free and independent of such trammels.

On the succeeding Saturday evening, May 17, to this concluding lecture, the society held its annual festival. The occasion possessed a special interest for those assembled, apart from the exercises and pastimes provided, in consideration of the fact that it was the last time the society would gather in this hall which it had occupied since its birth, or for three years preceding. In order to prevent the discomfort of too large an attendance, tickets of admission had been issued. The hall was tastefully decorated with evergreen and flowers, as on the Sunday before, and a band of music enlivened with pleasant strains the waiting intervals.

The literary exercises were mainly devoted to the kindergarten for poor children sustained by the society, and the graduation of the training class in connection with it.

After some introductory remarks by Professor Adler, the report of the examining committee was read by a lady upon whose husband, as chairman of the committee, this part would have devolved but for his unavoidable absence. It consisted of a statement of the principles of the kindergarten mode of culture, and of the present condition and operation in particular of this outgrowth of the society.

A written address followed by Miss Schwedler, the principal of the kindergarten, giving a graphic and clear presentation of her conception of the work and qualifications of the true kindergartner. I may say here, in passing, that Miss Schwedler, who is the daughter of an eminent physician of New York, has entered into her work, which is not in all respects an agreeable one, with singular devotion, and very palpably demonstrated her fine adaptation to it. An elaborate and beautiful floral offering to her from the graduating class, at a later stage of the programme, testified to the affectionate relation which had subsisted between the teacher and pupils.

Two young ladies, the chosen representatives of the graduating class, next read essays. These were spoken in clear tones and evinced good thinking and the motive force of a serious and earnest purpose. At this point Professor Adler came forward and gave a characteristic address upon the new education, with some account of its precursors and earliest leaders. Alluding to the kindergarten of the society, he expressed much satisfaction in what it had accomplished. It contained one hundred and ten children, gathered from families of the poorest class of the city, who are taught, fed, kept in order, clothed if necessary, and cared for every day. The labor of these benevolent offices is shared, in addition to the members of the training class, by the voluntary assistance of some thirty young ladies.

The enterprise has been the recipient of very encouraging support during the year. Contributions in money have been made to the generous amount of $2,700. This does not include other munificent provisions for it for the future.

The Professor delicately indicated some of the embarrassments attendant upon such a work in consequence of its connection with his society, and stated that in order to relieve it of these hinderances it had been determined to detach the kindergarten from the society and place it upon a distinct and independent basis, although it will still be largely under the supervision of the members of the society, and an object of its special interest and support. Could anything more forcibly bear witness to the purely unselfish and disinterested character of Professor Adler and his society?

The Professor also referred to a contemplated school for the children of the poor, supplementary to the kindergarten, or designed to take them forward in education from the point at which the kindergarten leaves them. It is intended to embrace in its scope industrial, intellectual, and moral education, and to be particularly adapted to the after-requirements of the class for whom it would be founded.

Among other agencies for good which the society had set in operation and sustained during the year, the Workingmen's Lyceum was mentioned. This has now quite a large membership and a library of some hundreds of volumes, including regular instalments of the current leading magazines and newspapers. It has held weekly meetings for debates and literary purposes, and sustained classes for free instruction in various studies. It has also been favored during the past winter with valuable lectures from Park Godwin, Esq., the Rev. Heber Newton, and Dr. Sequin.

It ought to be here added, not as a part of the Professor's speech, but in parenthesis, that the Co-operative Printers' Association, which has recently been started under the auspices of the society, was an offshoot of this organization. Its outfit was furnished by the Society of Ethical Culture, and it is pleasant to know that the enterprise is meeting with a good degree of prosperity.

There remains to be included in this summary of the work of the society some reference to two ethical classes, both under Professor Adler's direction. One consists of juvenile members, and meets weekly for such instruction. The other is distinguished by the name of the adult class, and meets upon alternate weeks. The aim in each instance is the study and clear and intelligent apprehension of ethical principles, with their practical exemplification in the conduct of life. The latter class numbers an attendance of fifty and upwards of the most earnest and cultured ladies and gentlemen of the society. Essays and discussions, betokening a high degree of scholarship and intellectual acumen, frequently occupy its evenings. But the crowning end and culmination of all its exercises and fellowship is to be, as the Professor frankly told the members at the initiatory meeting of the class with much energy and unmistakable distinctness, spelling the word as he uttered it for greater emphasis, w-o-r-k.

And very nobly has it responded to the appeal implied in the word. It has contributed $1,000 to purposes of charity since the class was formed in January last. But it has done more than furnish money: it has also engaged, at a generous salary, a trained nurse, a graduate of the School of Nurses of the city, to coöperate with the physicians of the Medical Dispensary to the Poor in a certain district, to visit and care for the sick who are incompetent to care for themselves.

This work will continue through the summer, and is intended to be permanent. The society has another nurse in preparation for the same philanthropic service, and will add others to the force as it may be practicable.

The Professor's address was succeeded by the ceremony of conferring diplomas upon nine young ladies who constituted the graduating class. A pleasant incident came in here. It was the announcement by the Professor of a note from the ladies of the society containing $100, a gift to what was called his "secret service fund"; in other words, for discretionary use for objects of charity. It is understood that the above little windfall was an excess saved from the appropriation for the decorations of the evening through a frugal manipulation of the sum by those who had it in charge,—an executive committee literally in this instance.

The formal exercises were brought to a pleasantly rounded and graceful conclusion by an address from Edward Lauterbach, Esq.

The speaker introduced his remarks in a vein of droll and irresistible humor admirably adapted to relieve the graver character of the programme that had preceded, and to put all in a cheerful state of feeling. He gave an interesting sketch of the origin of the society and the varied experiences that had attended its development, and eloquently described the needs and possibilities of the future of liberalism. Mr. Lauterbach possesses in a marked degree the gift of the orator. We hope the liberals of the country may have an opportunity to become better acquainted with him, and that he may be heard at no very distant day from the platform of one of the conventions of the Free Religious Association.

At the close of Mr. Lauterbach's remarks, the settees were removed and the hall cleared for social intercourse and festivity. After partaking of a choice and inviting collation, the floors were surrendered to dancing, which was prolonged to a late hour, when the company dispersed in genial and merry humor.

I have permitted my pen to run on in this somewhat extended notice of the Society of Ethical Culture, which after all but barely hints at its work and spirit, because I have had for some months past the opportunity of becoming intimately conversant with them, and they have elicited my admiration and most cordial sympathy. That it is destined to prove something more than a bubble glowing with the bright splendors of grand endeavor and worthy achievement which has suddenly burst into existence upon the uncertain and perturbed surface of radicalism, ere long to vanish into nothingness, I feel assured beyond all peradventure.

I believe it is laying foundations that are broad and deep, and demonstrating the power of the new faith to crystallize into efficient and enduring institutions, to develop and mould the church of humanity,—a church the effulgence of whose incomparable glory shall shame that which has been as "daylight does a lamp." One of the chief drawbacks to the success of radicalism often has been its impetuosity. Happily, the Society of Ethical Culture seems somewhat exceptional in this respect. During the past year, its receipts have run up to the very respectable amount of $14,000, one-half of which has gone to charity.

All hail, then, to this rising star of radicalism, precursor of greater and better realizations than any of which it yet has dreamed! May no pettiness, envy, or jealousy impede its progress or seek to depreciate its deserts. May radicals everywhere, one and all, rejoice in its success as in the prosperity of their cause. "Here is a health," say we, to it and its noble leader, in all their worthy aspirations and endeavors. In the famous words of a famous personage, "May they live long and prosper." D. H. C.

Communications.

THOUGHTS ON MARRIAGE.

The subject of marriage is so intimately involved in the present controversy over the "Consensus of the Competent," that I was glad to read the remarks of Hon. Elizer Wright upon it in THE INDEX. Marriage laws are, if I understand this matter correctly, formulated by the "Consensus of the Competent." There are, however, many illustrious instances, and many more less conspicuous cases, of individuals who have "acted on their own judgment" in regard to their marriage relations, and to whom Mr. Abbot must clearly accord his general admission that "the individual is sometimes in the right, even as against the consensus of the competent of his own day."

Marriage, it would seem, is one of the matters that must wait. The Consensus of the Competent of a later day will determine whether we are now right or wrong.

The fanaticism of free love has no acceptable solution as yet for the perplexing problems involved in our present marriage-system. The system as a whole is by no means perfect, and certainly contains many striking evils which call for investigation and reform. Offences against the honor and the happiness of human beings are committed under the cover of laws which are formulated by the competent. Crime is often, very often, the legitimate outcome of the severity of law and the strenuousness of public sentiment. These evils are manifest, and are recognized by every thoughtful mind. They do not argue conclusively against the system of marriage as at present arranged; they only prove that the development of mankind is very slow.

The evolution of the marriage relation and of the family, like that of all other human institutions, is the result of persistent endeavor to elevate man from animalism to intelligence; from brute selfishness to the ethics demanded by civilized associated life. Barbaric tendencies are perpetuated by the aid of superstition and prejudice. Crude elements remain in the relationships of social and family life. The competent have decided upon many of the complexities in the relations of men and women in marriage.

They have, however, been continually assisted in these decisions by individual experience. Through fearful exposures and fearless investigations, there comes new light on the subject. The scientific study of sociology may doubtless be advanced by the social experiments of even free-lovers, vague and fruitless as their theories seem now to be in solving the questions of morals in marriage. Many of these fanatics are as loyal to true love as any man or woman can be. Many are simply actuated by the lingering savagism in their natures, or by that instability of temperament equally traceable to inheritance. Their experiments, while shedding some light upon sociology, need not be looked upon with apprehension. The bulwarks built by strong, intelligent, just, and loving characters around the sweet and sacred altars of home and family are not endangered by a few fanatics. It is not possible that the "solid sober sense" of the country is to succumb to any doctrine which does not exhibit signs of true moral health. The stamp of sickly sentimentality is the one apparent upon the free-love idea. There is no great uplifting of human character in the practical working of the doctrine. The domain of high thought is not beleaguered by these aspirants for individual liberty in love and marriage. The course of individuals of this class will confirm the competent in dictating the law toward the general good. The course of other individuals, who under the restraint of prevailing laws and opinions commit sickening and outrageous crimes against the holy meanings of marriage and parenthood, let us hope, will also shed light to guide their direction. Every evil coming to the surface of the social system corrects itself or is corrected in accordance with its prominence and enormity. We may rely upon the Consensus of the Competent, I conclude, in this as in all other complicated questions of our time. It is the natural order of things that the best, the purest, and the highest will be the outcome of evolution.

"The monogamic form of the sexual relation," says Herbert Spencer, "is manifestly the ultimate form, and any changes made must be in the completion and extension of it. Monogamy will be raised in character by a public sentiment requiring that the legal bond shall not be entered into unless it represents the natural bond, and perhaps the legal bond will come to be held improper if the natural bond ceases. The union by affection will be regarded as the essential part of marriage, and reprobation of the marital relations in which the union by affection has been dissolved may be inferred."

